Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has stated I just got this as I came into the House and I hope the hon. members are not going to feel that I am going to ask for a notice on every question that is asked. But obviously, I think, they will appreciate that I have only been in this job for four or five weeks and I am not as familiar with things as I would like to be and certainly not in a position to give opinions on questions at this stage, questions which are asked of me two or three minutes before the House sits. I will therefore have to take this as notice and I can assure the hon. member I will have an answer for him just as soon as it is possible.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I think the authorized channels for appointments to the civil service are very clear. My supplementary question—I know hon. members are very sensitive on this—

An hon. member: We are not sensitive.

Mr. MacDonald: My supplementary question to the liquor commissioner is: since this is clearly in violation of the authorized channels, can he give us the assurance, after looking into it, that he will take steps to see that the unauthorized hiring by the local Conservative associations will end?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I do not even know as to the authenticity of this report. I do not even—

An hon. member: There are some things printed in the newspaper about the hon. member that even I do not believe.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, none of these names is familiar to me except the name of Mr. Gomme. I did not even know that D. M. Code is, as the hon. member has stated, president of the Conservative association because, while that may be in the news report, it is not in his question. I cannot give opinions on these things until I discuss it with my officials and I do not intend to, because when I do give an answer I want it to be correct.

Mr. MacDonald: My second question is to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts).

I am informed that the Victoria & Grey Trust Company of Owen Sound and the British Mortgage Company in Stratford have approved lists of insurance companies whose coverage they are willing to accept and none other. Would the hon. Attorney-General confirm whether this is correct?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I have requested the superintendent of insurance to look into this question and he has given me at least a partial answer. The matter of what insurance companies' policies will be accepted by mortgage trust companies is not a matter of government control, it is entirely a matter of company policy and is not subject to government control. It is obvious that to answer the questions he would have to make some specific inquiries; he has no specific information on the individual companies having approved lists of insurance companies but he is of the view that there are quite a few. He says that mortgagees generally feel they have the right to require insurance policies from companies approved by them.

The suggestion is that some of these companies have not been ready to approve United States insurance companies who have recently entered Ontario, and possibly this question was inspired from those sources.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I notice, probably it is an expression of the Christmas spirit, but you gave the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) an opportunity to elaborate on the question. I had one too, you will recall, to the chief commissioner and it was not intelligible to him. I can readily understand that, but when I—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have a direct question? Order!

Mr. Troy: My question is, are we allowed to elaborate on statements, on questions, or not? In this particular one the hon. member for York South was; I was not.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett):

1. Is there any truth in reports now current that an employee of the Metropolitan Toronto Don Jail is being threatened with dismissal because, his hair having turned prematurely grey as a result of a gas explosion, he took steps to have its colour restored?

2. If so, will the hon. Minister assure the House that he will intervene to prevent this apparent abuse of disciplinary power and interference in the personal affairs of an employee?

An hon. member: That is an internal matter, there is nothing of a public nature.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, I did receive notice of this question by the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), and I am sorry to say it came to my office just as I was gathering up the papers to come to the House this morning. It was the first intimation I have had of any such problem existing, so I am not able to answer at this time nevertheless, but I have asked that an inquiry be made through the office regarding it.

The second part of the question is purely hypothetical and I would not attempt to answer it. I just hope that the hon. member, if I may make a supplementary answer, is not using this question period as a vehicle to make a subtle suggestion.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would think that the hon. Minister requires something more than subtle suggestions.

Mr. J. A. Fullerton (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to rise on a question of personal privilege affecting me in my capacity as a member of this House.

Last night the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) addressed the House. I was present during the first portion of his remarks, as the hon. member well knew. Then I left the chamber and after my departure he assailed my rights to sit as a member of this House and brought into question my personal integrity.

It is my hope that all hon. members of this House will concur with my suggestion that this entire matter be referred at the earliest possible opportunity to the committee on elections and privileges. In the meantime, and in view of the delay that such procedure would involve, I hasten to ask the opportunity to deny categorically the insinuations made by the hon. member. I affirm that there is absolutely no wrong in what I did.

The events referred to by the hon. member occurred some 11 or 12 years ago. In order that my recital of the facts shall be made perfectly accurate, I have arranged that all relevant files and documents be forwarded to me in Toronto. I will also arrange to discuss the matter with the appropriate member of the law firm of the late hon. Senator McGuire, who provided all necessary legal advice to me at the time of the transaction mentioned. This means that I shall be in a position to make a public statement next week which will establish the falsity of the hon. member's claim.

In the meantime, I cannot refrain from referring to the behaviour of the hon. member from Sudbury in withholding his remarks until after I had left the House at a late hour last night.

The documents which he tabled with such a flourish are all public documents available to any person in Ontario and have been available for the past 12 years. The hon. member has had them in his possession since July 27, 1961, and he waited until last evening, just before the adjournment of the House, which is to take place, I understand, today, before using it.

The various announcements which he made are completely and entirely groundless. His attitude and what he has done demonstrates clearly the reason why he is held in contempt in this assembly as a sneak.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Before the orders of the day, I would like to address a few remarks to the transaction which was referred to by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) in his contribution to the Throne speech debate last night. I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) for the statement he has just made and the manner in which he has faced the allegations and insinuations, because I notice that the hon. member was very careful to say that he was making no charges.

But in order to understand the situation—and the references that were made here last night, in my opinion, to some extent at least, implicate the government of that day and the course of action which it followed—I therefore propose to give to the hon. members of the House a fairly full and complete story of the transaction of those days of long ago, because this transaction had its beginning back in 1948, over 13 years ago.

On May 25, 1948, two fires were reported in the Mississagi provincial forest. One was discovered about 100 feet from the Chapleau highway clearing in township 8D, 25 minutes after it started. Brush burning had been in progress nearby on the previous day. The other fire started in township 3D, near the headwaters of Sharpsand River, a branch of the Mississagi, at a location very difficult to reach.

Due to extremely high fire hazard both fires were out of control the following day. No wetting rain had fallen for months previous and the subsoil was dry due to long subnormal precipitation. Humidity on the day following the outbreak was 18 per cent, with 35 miles per hour wind at the nearest weather station, located at Ranger Lake. Eventually both burnt areas joined southwest of Peshu Lake in township 4D.

The main fires were considered under control near the end of June, but dry conditions again prevailed and outbreaks from smouldering material occurred during most of July.

On July 24, the Chapleau fire was reported officially out, and the Mississagi on July 31.

The direct additional cost to the government in extra firefighters' wages and other suppression expenses on forest fires that year amounted to $1.715 million, the greater proportion of which applied to these two fires. At one stage 1,538 extra firefighters were employed on these two fires alone.

The final fire reports on these fires showed 645,450 acres of forested land, mostly in the Mississagi provincial forest, in 54 townships exclusive of lakes, had been swept over by fire. Seventy-five per cent of this area was in mature forest types. Timber damaged was estimated at 230 million feet of white pine, 81 million feet of red pine and 151 million feet of jackpine. Though not estimated, a large volume of spruce and jackpine pulpwood throughout the fire area was also destroyed. The intensity of the fire varied from complete destruction of standing timber from both crown and ground fires, to areas run over by ground fire only and within the fire area were small patches of timber which escaped fire damage.

The burned area roughly corresponded with the forest in which most the balsam was infested with or dead from the spruce budworm. This dead material contributed to the rapid spread of the fire and added to the difficulty of suppression.

Logging of the more accessible timber along the Mississagi and White Rivers and their branches has been carried on for decades. However, rough terrain and the longer hauls to the rivers has left what was the second largest reserve of white and red pine in Ontario.

In the next section of this we will deal with preparations that were made for salvage.

Before the fires were under control it was realized the loss to the people of Ontario if this large amount of white and red pine were not saved. With this in mind, representatives of The Department of Lands and Forests held a meeting on June 30, 1948, in North Bay to formulate a plan. It was evident that operators in the area could salvage but a small part of the fire damaged material. It was obvious also that if salvage was carried out on a scale warranted by the estimated amount of merchantable timber, the government would have to take the initiative. With this in view the following recommendations were reached at this meeting:

(a) Contact operators in the immediate vicinity of the burnt area to determine what they might undertake.

(b) Sketch the burnt area to delimit parts having no salvage value and those carrying merchantable timber, the merchantable areas to be graded to the degree of burn.

(c) Photograph the burnt area to provide a means of planning and controlling operations.

A memorandum to the Minister of Lands and Forests dated June 23, 1948, incorporated the above recommendations. Immediately a sum of $44,500 was approved for aerial sketching and photography.

The lumber industry as a whole did not manifest any particular enthusiasm over salvage operations on their part. The reasons advanced were higher costs and lower values anticipated. Many firms already had their working capital tied up in their own operations and market conditions were less certain than they had been during the war period.

A field party from the forest insect laboratory, Sault Ste. Marie, explored the burned area in the first part of August, 1948, to estimate the damage already done by wood borers. This and later investigations by the laboratory, over the next few years showed that, of the trees killed outright in 1948 during the fire, about 75 per cent of the jackpine, 50 per cent of the white pine and 25 per cent of the red pine were attacked by wood borers within the two months, based on examinations of the lower trunks. Few trees that were fire damaged but retained green foliage were attacked. Nine species of borers were found in damaged trees but species of monochamus caused most of the economic damage.

Further investigations showed that by 1953 practically all sapwood and some heartwood of the trees killed in 1948, were rotted by fungi. This amounted to roughly 50 per cent of the volume in red pine in some cases, and less in the case of white pine and jackpine.

In November, 1949, the laboratory carried on an investigation in losses in lumber values due to degrade caused by rot, stain and borer holes that could be attributed to fire damage. Lumber used was from logs which were salvaged from the burned area. This loss in lumber value was based on the present grade as compared to what its grade would have been if it had been cut before the fire. All grading was done by a leading lumber grader of the white pine bureau. In white pine the loss in values ranged from 2.4 per cent for trees that died in 1949 due to the effect of the fire, to 62 per cent in high-grade trees killed at the time of the fire in 1948. It was less in red pine and least in jackpine. As the lumber from the jackpine would have graded very low if manufactured prior to the fire—due to incipient decay that is associated with overmaturity—the additional degrade due to fire damage was quite moderate.

Aerial sketching was completed before the end of July. Sketch maps which were prepared, indicated that most of the area was severely burned but huge quantities of fire-killed timber remained. Photographing of the burnt area was completed in the first part of August, 1948. Photographs and sketch maps were then used to lay out logging chances based on concentration of timber, topographic features and accessibility. Roads into each logging camp were also laid out from the photographs.

To check the estimates and location of these logging chances, parties from the forest resources inventory group took sample plots on each. For this work, bases were established at Peshu and Flame Lakes. Aircraft were used extensively. In all, 50 saw-log and pulpwood logging chances were laid out and most of these were sampled. The Department of Lands and Forests office at Thessalon became the headquarters for all salvage operations.

To advise operators desiring to log this salvage timber the following "Notice of Intention" was inserted on August 3, 1948, in papers in Toronto, Pembroke, North Bay, Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie. And I quote:

Notice of Intention: During the week of August 16th consideration will be given to applications for the right to salvage timber damaged by fire on the Mississagi provincial forest. Maps and operating conditions may be examined at the office of The Department of Lands and Forests at Toronto or Thessalon.

And that is dated at Toronto, July 29, 1948.

All parties who wrote in or inquired about salvage timber were given or mailed a set of operating conditions. These operating conditions outlined the two methods by which royalties could be paid. (a) by a tendered price per thousand log scale or (b) by a percentage of the sale price of the lumber. Tenders were to close on September 7, 1948.

There were many inquiries in response to the above advertisement, but by September 7, 1948, only a few deposits by tenderers had been made on a few logging chances. It became evident that financing was the problem confronting operators. If salvage operations were to be financed through regular channels, only a very small amount would be cut.

Banks seemed hesitant to finance the salvage and fire-killed timber due to general market conditions, high labour costs, and the risk of it sawing out much low-grade material.

Also, loans on these salvage operations would exceed the usual 12 months.

The Minister of Lands and Forests outlined these problems to the Cabinet council. He stressed the necessity of working capital if this valuable timber was to be salvaged in appreciable quantities in the season 1948-49. He explained the risks involved as outlined above, including the usual higher risks attendant to the salvage of fire-damaged timber.

The outcome of this meeting was the calling together of the budget committee with representatives of The Department of Lands and Forests. This group was unanimous in recommending that the salvage of this fire-damaged timber should be proceeded with, even at the risk of considerable cost to the government, and the following recommendations were submitted for approval:

1. Timber operators will be asked to carry out the whole operation from bush to the completed product and, in order to assist with the necessary financing, the government will offer (a) to advance $1.50 for each log of red and white pine, and 75 cents for each log of jackpine and spruce when they are in the water; (b) to pay one-half, or such greater proportion as the Minister of Lands and Forests may determine, of the cost of constructing some 67 miles of roadways, estimated to cost $3,000 per mile; and (c) to undertake with any banks concerned not to insist on its priority for Crown dues on such timber as is brought out ahead of the repayment of such bank.

2. Alternatively, timber operators will be asked to tender upon cost of felling, bucking, skidding and hauling logs to designated water. It was also agreed that inclusive with these recommendations will be the proposal that any operators who had already tendered in respect to salvage operations would be given the opportunity of tendering upon the basis outlined above.

An order-in-council, incorporating the above recommendations, was approved on September 13, 1948. It also provided a sum of $1.5 million to cover the financial obligations of these recommendations for the remainder of the fiscal year and previous expenditures made on behalf of salvage operations.

On the strength of the above-mentioned order-in-council the following advertisement was inserted in newspapers in Toronto, Pembroke, North Bay, Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie, Timmins, Port Arthur, Fort William, Kirkland Lake and Lindsay. The advertisement was as follows:

Department of Lands and Forests invites tenders for the delivery of logs into water that have been damaged as result of fire which burned over parts of the Mississagi provincial forest.

A supplementary set of operating conditions incorporating the recommendations of the order-in-council mentioned above was drawn up. These conditions outlined the two schemes by which operators could log salvage timber, with the government supplying the working capital by way of loans. Conditions were also included whereby the government would assist up to $1,500 per mile to build access roads. Persons inquiring to the above advertisement and all district offices were supplied with copies of the supplementary operating conditions.

By October, 1948 all saw-log chances as laid out, had been tendered on and accepted. Only three small pulpwood chances remained open for tenders.

Agreements of two types were signed with all operators whose tenders were accepted. Some of these covered several logging chances, while others covered only part of one chance. Only fire-damaged timber was to be cut. All agreements covered the operating season 1948-49 only.

Thirteen operators signed agreements with the government under scheme (a) in which the operators agreed to cut, haul and saw the logs into lumber and dispose of the finished product. Crown dues were to be paid on the log scale or as percent of the sale price of the lumber. Six operators signed agreements with the government under scheme (b) in which the operator watered logs at a tendered price per thousand log scale on account of the government. Under both schemes advances were made when the logs were on skidways and another advance when the logs were in designated water in safe storage under scheme (a) or a final payment under scheme (b).

Under scheme (a) the operators were to water as much timber as possible before July 1, 1949. Road construction assistance was also agreed upon under both schemes as outlined above. Under scheme (a) interest at five per cent was to be charged on advances after 12 months.

In two areas where more than one operator used the same access road the government paid the total cost of construction and built each by contract. These roads were considered to be of permanent value. One was the Rapid River Road to Toodee Lake of nine miles in length, the other was approximately 16 miles long up the Kindiogami River to Kindiogami Lake from the White River Road.

All agreements called for monthly financial statements of the operation. These were required before advances could be made so as to protect the government's interest in the logs. Provision was made to assist operators in making these statements by trained men of The Department of Lands and Forests, who visited each operator's camp and showed the clerks how to make them up according to a prescribed outline. Of the 19 salvage operators logging on the burnt area, three were in the Chapleau district with access to Chapleau; ten on the Mississagi watershed with access by the Mississagi road; the remaining six were on the Little White River watershed north of Mount Lake with access by the White River road.

Soon after operations began, it was evident that the Mississagi and White River roads and bridges would need considerable repair and several new bridges, caused by the increased traffic. This work was undertaken by The Department of Highways. Snowploughing of these roads was mostly carried on by The Department of Highways. Operators kept their access roads open. In December, 1948, the last link of the Mississagi-Chapleau highway was pushed through as a winter road. This connected the operations in the Chapleau district to those on the Mississagi watershed.

The next deals with production of these operations.

Woods operations were delayed in starting due to the lateness of the season when the access roads were built, and because of mild wet weather in November and December. By mid-November cutting had begun on all but two or three operations. In the third week of November, 1948, approximately 38,000 logs were cut and skidded. At this time 23 tractors, 50 trucks, 307 horses and 1,076 men were engaged on all salvage work. Production increased rapidly after freeze-up. The weekly peak was reached in the last week of January, 1949, when 1,814 men, 645 horses, 44 tractors and 95 trucks produced 77,442 logs on skidways, scaling 4,550,000 feet, Doyle rule.

Hauling commenced in January on most chances. Lack of time to prepare suitable haul roads in the preceding autumn, plus lack of snow and soft weather in January, hampered hauling all season. When the break-up came in April many logs were still on skidways. Truck hauling was resorted to in May and June as soon as the roads dried up and new roads could be built to haul logs left in the bush plus those cut in spring operations.

All cutting under agreements for the season 1948-49 was stopped in the first part of July, 1949. Total production for the season 1948-49 was 1,671,734 logs scaling 96,701,742 feet, Doyle rule. Logging operations in the salvage area continued for three more seasons until the end of the 1951-52 season. After this season rot and worms had degraded any remaining salvage timber to such an extent that it was not worth the cost of cutting.

Total woods production up to November 30, 1954, from the whole salvage operation was 191,767,273 feet Doyle scale, plus 123,111.07 cords of pulp wood and 18,629 cubic feet of poles.

Milling and marketing fell into four general categories:

First, operators whose log production was financed by the government but who milled and marketed the lumber themselves;

Second, operators whose log production was not financed by the government but who milled and marketed their own lumber;

Third, operators whose production was financed by the government but sold their lumber to the government;

Fourth, the processing of logs produced on account of the government under logging contracts.

The following shows the production in each category:

In the first category, sawlog production f.b.m. Doyle rule, 54,590,122.

In the secondary category—19,471,967; in the third category—29,482,718, and in the fourth category—88,222,466.

Lumber production in f.b.m. mill scale: In the first category—72,013,229; in the second category—25,313,557; in the third category—38,892,489 and in the fourth category—114,900,832.

Pulpwood cords in the first category—81,011.81; in the second category—42,099.26. In cubic feet of poles in the first category—14,747; and in the second category—3,882.

These make totals of sawlog production, f.b.m. Doyle rule, of 191,767,273; of lumber production in f.b.m. mill scale of 251,120,107; pulpwood cords at 123,111.07, and in cubic feet of poles—18,629.

As several operators marketed part of their lumber themselves and sold the remainder, their production is divided between the first and third categories. Involved in these two categories were 11 operators. On lumber sold on the open market, royalties were paid as the lumber was shipped either on a basis of log scale or a percentage of the sale value.

Involved in the second category were one larger operator and several small ones. Royalties were also paid on a basis of log scale or on the percentage of the sale price of the lumber.

Involved in the fourth category were 11 contractors producing sawlogs for the government under contract at six concentrations. At the largest of these around Rocky Island in Rouelle Lakes, 34,343,835 feet Doyle rule was produced. Of this amount approximately 29,896,666 feet Doyle scale was manufactured and marketed entirely by the J. J.

McFadden Lumber Company Limited of Blind River. These logs sawed out 38,267,733 feet mill scale.

This company undertook to drive the logs to its mill at Blind River and to saw, sort, treat for stain, pile out and market the lumber. The proceeds from the net return of the sale of the lumber was to be divided between the Crown and the company. To illustrate, a net value of $60 per thousand feet would return $25.50 or 42½ per cent to the government and $34.50 or 57½ per cent to the company. For every $1 increase in the net sale price in an average monthly sale, the government's share increased one-half of 1 per cent and the company's share decreased by the same percentage. The net mill return to the department was $28.49 per thousand mill scale on this lumber.

The other concentrations of logs amounting to 53,806,453 feet Doyle rule were sawn under contract by portable mills at the log concentrations—except for an estimated 6,072,000 feet, mill scale, that was sawn and sold on the open market by one operator.

The lumber industry as a whole was concerned over the possibility of a large volume of lumber over and above normal production being dumped on the market. The government too realized this danger and, when a plan was submitted by one of the companies, experienced in white and red production marketing, to overcome this problem, the government willingly considered it and entered into a formal agreement for the operation of a wholesale lumber concentration yard near North Bay.

An agreement between the company, the Great Northern Woods Company Limited, and the Crown, provides that the company would undertake to: 1. Build and establish the concentration yard for the processing of government owned lumber only. 2. Supervise the sawing and shipping of this lumber to the concentration yard on account of the government. 3. Grade, tally, pile and ship out, as sold, this lumber at the risk of the government. 4. Assist in the sales of the lumber. 5. Establish a dressing plant in this concentration yard for general custom dressing.

By this agreement the government would undertake to: 1. Furnish capital to build this concentration yard by way of a capital loan up to $180 million. 2. Pay all operating expenses of this yard except those incurred in connection with the dressing plant. 3. Pay the sum of $10,000 per annum for supervision for the duration of this agreement; and 4. Pay a charge of $24,000 per annum as fee for the duration of this agreement.

This agreement was for four years. During this period the capital loan was to be reduced by the following sums per annum:

(a) maximum normal depreciation rates as allowed by The Department of National Revenue on the actual cost of the yard and all equipment, and

(b) the annual fee of $24,000;

(c) profits from the operation of the dressing plant.

The balance of the capital loan still owing at the expiration of this agreement was to be repaid by the company within six months. This agreement expired on November 30, 1953. The company consented to carry on operations on a fixed fee of $12.50 per thousand until all government-owned lumber was sold.

By October 31, 1953, all sawing of logs at all locations was completed. All merchantable grades of lumber had been shipped from all mill yards by November 30, 1954. On this latter date there were 4,551,600 feet mill scale of lumber still to be shipped from concentration yards run by the company. Of this amount 2,215,200 feet, mill scale, has been disposed of by pro forma but remains in yards to be shipped as ordered.

In all a total of 109,022,808 feet, mill scale, was shipped to the Great Northern Woods Company Limited from mill yards.

The first year's operation, i.e., during the 1948-49 season, was concentrated on fire-killed timber only. The following year's effort was to recover values from areas which suffered from ground fires only. On these areas the timber was partly dead or dying—the butt log in most cases had been damaged. For the final cut or during the 1950-51 season green timber occurring in unburned patches was cut. These areas were not sufficient in themselves to justify a separate operation apart from the salvage. Some small clean-up operations were carried on into the 1953-54 season.

Mr. Speaker, that is the background from the government's point of view of the operation which was discussed here last night in relation to a certain company. It is my intention to refer this matter to the committee on privileges and elections upon the resumption of the sitting of this Legislature.

I would like to point out that this information was not produced until the last possible moment, and I had noticed that the same date is mentioned by the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton). The photostat of a true copy of the partnership agreement, which was registered in the registry office for the registry division of Algoma on June 8, 1949, and which was mentioned by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) last night, that certified copy was obtained on July 27, 1961. We have been in session here for over three weeks but no mention of this matter was made until some time after 10.30, or perhaps 10.15 last night.

I just draw this to the attention of the House. I announced in this House that we would attempt to complete this part of the session today. I made this announcement earlier in the week, and I am going to suggest that this charge, although the hon. member was very careful to say that he was not charging anyone, but I am going to suggest that this has been done deliberately and it has been brought forward at this time for the purpose of embarrassing the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) and for the purpose of embarrassing this government in the time we have available to deal with these charges.

However, in order to make the story complete, I will refer to a section of The Legislative Assembly Act, because there were several references made to this Act last night, and it seems to me that this should go on the public records.

Section 10 of The Legislative Assembly Act says:

No person is ineligible as a member of this Assembly—

And then is listed (a), (b), (c), (d), (e); and it is (f) in which I am interested, so I will read this again:

No person is ineligible as a member of the Assembly by reason of his holding a licence, permit or permission for cutting timber or being interested in any such licence, permit or permission, directly or indirectly, alone or with another, by himself or by the interposition of a trustee or third person, or by reason of there being money due or payable to Her Majesty in respect of the timber cut but no such person shall vote on any question affecting such licence, permit or permission or in which he is interested by reason thereof.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I have gone into the background of this transaction from the government's point of view. Undoubtedly there are rather unusual elements in this transaction. They arise because of the interest of the government in that day in salvaging for the people of this province and for the province such amounts as they could, as I have stated here today, from a straight national disaster known as the Mississagi fire.

These letters can all be investigated very carefully before the committee on privileges and elections. All these accounts were audited by the provincial auditor. The Department of Lands and Forests has complete records to back every statement I have made this morning and, as the government, we will welcome the opportunity to go into this matter very fully in due course.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): On a matter of privilege, sir, I want to draw the attention of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) to the fact that the document before him which photostated the registration, says that the photostat was prepared in July 27, 1961. It says nothing about when it came into my hands.

Secondly, sir, I raised this matter in this Legislature at the first opportunity given me, when I first participated in the Throne debate. At no previous time during the sitting of this Legislature might I have properly raised it.

Three, I treat the phrase used by the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) "he was held in contempt as a sneak" as a term of opprobrium. I resent it. I ask you to rule and find, sir, that it is unparliamentary and that you direct him to withdraw it and let it be stricken from the record.

Mr. Fullerton: Mr. Speaker, I can think of no better description for such a reptile.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, how long does this go on?

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, you have been requested to rule in conjunction with the matter of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I realize that.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Just a minute.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Are we waiting for a ruling?

Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that many similar remarks have been passed in this House over the years I have attended it, I think possibly the time has come, not for the hon. member in question but for all hon.

members of this House, to be very careful in the language which is used. I think matters can be expressed without using improper language. I believe at this time that I would respectfully request the hon. member to withdraw the remark so that it could be stricken from the record.

Mr. Fullerton: I will bow to your request, Mr. Speaker, but I still can think.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, speaking to the point of privilege which has been raised, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) has said that this is the first opportunity he had to raise this matter.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister (Mr. Macaulay) is not involved; this is not his privilege at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, as a point of privilege and as a member of this House, my point of privilege is that I object to an hon. member in this House raising a point of privilege during the Throne debate which affects the right of an hon. member to sit in this House. It is one of the privileges and responsibilities of every hon. member of this House to treat our rights, our dignity and our privileges in relation to this House with the highest of integrity. This means to treat it that way and not use it as a political weapon, and it should have been raised at the very first opportunity.

Unless the hon. member can state to this House now that this matter just came to his attention, it should have been drawn to the attention of this House as soon as he had the information.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Before the orders of the day, if I can get back to the business of the government, I would like to make a statement concerning the university affairs committee.

Nearly a year ago my predecessor reconstituted the university affairs committee which had been concerned with the study and assessment of university financial needs and the co-ordination of university expansion. I was appointed chairman of that committee, but it was recognized that my tenure would be for only a short time until the committee's work was well under way after which a chairman would be appointed from outside the government.

I am pleased to announce to the House that Chief Justice of Ontario, the Honourable Dana Porter, has agreed to preside as chairman of this committee. Chief Justice Porter is eminently qualified for this position. He is not only a former Minister of Education, but a member of the board of governors of our largest university and is chancellor of another university.

I am also pleased to announce that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), who has been closely identified with the expansion of our provincially assisted university family, which has grown from four to 13, including the new universities of Assumption, York, Laurentian and Waterloo, has been prevailed upon to serve as a member of this committee.

I know hon. members will all agree with me when I say we are very fortunate indeed in having the hon. member for Victoria, with his immense knowledge of and very long experience with universities and their problems and with his intimate knowledge of our secondary school system, serving on this committee. He has asked that he serve without remuneration.

The members of the committee are as follows:

The Honourable Dana Porter, chairman; Mr. Floyd S. Chalmers, the Honourable L. M. Frost, Mr. G. E. Gathercole, Senator D'Arcy Leonard and Mr. R. W. Mitchell; and I, of course, will resign.

The origin of the university affairs committee goes back about 15 years when it was felt that there should be more liaison of planning in connection with our universities. Because of the projected growth of our university population and anticipated financial requirements, the government appointed Dr. Wallace of Queen's University, in the capacity of co-ordinator of university affairs. He was succeeded at his death by Dr. Aulhouse who also carried on in an informative way until his own death. Mr. Porter, then Provincial Treasurer, was subsequently appointed to the office.

This experiment was considered so successful that a special university committee composed of senior civil servants and chaired by the chief director of education was established in 1957. It was later decided that the government should also avail itself of the experience and advice of men outside the civil service who had a broad knowledge of the overall university development in this province and who had been associated in one or another capacity with our leading universities.

Accordingly, a new university affairs committee, composed of citizens outstanding in the business and professional life of our province, was set up late in 1960. In addition to the membership which I have just mentioned, and to add further strength to its work, the members of the earlier civil service committee continue to serve as a technical committee to prepare data and render technical assistance to the university affairs committee.

The university affairs committee is empowered to study all matters concerning the establishment, development, operation and expansion and financing of the universities in this province and to make recommendations to the government thereof.

Mr. Speaker, before sitting down I would just like to say that in the year in which I worked on this committee, I have become very aware of the immense problems which face us in this province as far as our universities are concerned. We face a doubling, at least, of our undergraduate population in the decade between 1960 and 1970. This, expressed in terms of physical plant, expressed in terms of competent and able instructors and professors, poses truly an enormous problem.

This committee can do a very large job of examining minutely the details of future requirements. This involves a tremendous amount of research into secondary school population and, indeed, elementary school population, and its concentration, in order that we can provide facilities for university education in the areas in which they will be needed.

I am delighted with the personnel of this committee and I can only assure the House that they have a very large job to do for the province. I am quite confident that they will do it well.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in this regard? In the months that this committee has been sitting, have they considered yet the application of the people in North Bay for the establishment of a university there? The hon. Prime Minister will recall that he, at the private bills committee, had said that this matter would go to this university committee. Months have gone by now. Have they reached a decision yet?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the matter has been discussed by the committee but no decision has been made.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, the other day the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) asked a number of questions which I said at that time I would take notice of. I am now prepared to answer.

At that time he asked: When temporary employees are to be taken on the staffs for rush periods does the board direct its supervisors or vendors to ascertain: (a) if there are in the municipality concerned any men suitable for such employment who are drawing unemployment insurance benefits? The answer to that is that applicants' employment status is ascertained by the L.C.B.O. officials before hiring. (b) If there are any men suitable for such employment who are on the relief rolls of the municipality? The answer to that is, preference is given to unemployed men and veterans.

Question 2: Does the board then direct its supervisors, et cetera; that is already answered by the first two answers.

Question 3: Were such inquiries made before temporary employees were recently taken on the staff of the retail outlet at Mattawa, and my information is that the answer to that is "Yes."

Question 4: Does the Minister approve of or condone the practice of employing temporarily at retail outlets men who are already gainfully employed, the practice known in the vernacular as "moonlighting"? And the answer to that is "No."

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, do I understand the chief commissioner to say that the employees that were taken on at the retail outlet at Mattawa this year were unemployed? I understand from the mayor of Mattawa that the municipality is quite concerned that one of the employees there is an accountant, he works for the D.B.S. in Ottawa, his wife is a teacher, and—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is that a question or an answer the hon. member is giving?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading, upon motions:

Bill No. 18, An Act to amend The Division Courts Act.

Bill No. 19, An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act.

Bill No. 24, An Act to amend The Police Act.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, could I make one small remark concerning this third reading. I had hoped this morning to make a statement giving names of the outstanding personnel whom I propose shall be appointed to the police commission that is embodied in this bill. Owing to the fact that the third reading is just now being given to the bill establishing the commission, it has not been possible for me to complete this arrangement.

But I hope within a very short time to make an announcement of the appointment of the chairman and members who will be outstanding in ability, experience and integrity, and such as will ensure Ontario will be an unhealthy place for those of the criminal ilk and will also assure that anyone who contemplates coming here will change their mind and in the event of such element being here, that they will either hastily vacate or else run the almost certain eventuality of going to jail.

Bill No. 39, An Act to amend The Department of Labour Act.

Bill No. 40, An Act to amend The Vital Statistics Act.

Bill No. 41, An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

Bill No. 42, An Act to amend The Corporations Information Act.

Bill No. 43, The Income Tax Act, 1961-62.

Bill No. 48, An Act to amend The Milk Industry Act.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, with your permission I will now leave the House and wait upon his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay).

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor entered the chamber of the legislative assembly and took his seat upon the Throne.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed several bills to which, in the name and on behalf of the said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

Assistant Clerk of the House: The following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

An Act to confirm The Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1960.

An Act to amalgamate The Department of Economics and Federal and Provincial Relations and Department of Commerce and Development.

An Act to amend The Ontario Parks Integration Board Act.

An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act.

An Act to amend The Parks Assistance Act.

An Act to amend The Provincial Parks Act.

An Act to amend The Forest Fire Prevention Act.

An Act to amend The Forestry Act.

An Act to amend The Bailiffs Act, 1960-61.

An Act to amend The Coroners Act.

An Act to amend The Crown Attorneys Act.

An Act to amend The Devolution of Estates Act.

An Act to amend The Division Courts Act.

An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act.

An Act to amend The Jurors Act.

The Legitimacy Act, 1961-62.

An Act to amend The Master and Servant Act.

An Act to amend The Mechanics' Lien Act.

An Act to amend The Police Act.

An Act to amend The Reciprocal Enforcement and Maintenance Orders Act.

An Act to confirm The Revised Regulations of Ontario, 1960.

An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

An Act to amend The Dentistry Act.

An Act to amend The Sanatoria for Consumptives Act.

An Act to amend The Air Pollution Control Act.

An Act to amend The Cancer Act.

An Act to amend The Public Health Act.

An Act to amend The Department of Labour Act.

An Act to amend The Vital Statistics Act.

An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

An Act to amend The Corporations Information Act.

The Income Tax Act, 1961-62.

An Act to amend The Milk Industry Act.

To these Acts the Royal assent was announced by the assistant clerk of the legislative assembly in the following words:

Assistant Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor doth assent to these bills.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was please to retire from the chamber.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House may I wish to all the hon. members here a very merry Christmas and a happy new year. We will see all hon. members again in the new year.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 12.01 p.m. until the date to be named by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1962

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: in the east gallery, Western Ontario Agricultural School, Ridgetown; and North Agincourt Public School, Agincourt. In the west gallery are St. Mary's Separate School, London; and Brock District High School, Cannington.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the clerk had received from the chief election officer and laid upon the table the following certificate of a by-election held since the adjournment of the House:

Electoral district of Beaches: Robert John Harris.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that, in view of a writ of election dated the twenty-first day of November, 1961, issued by the Honourable Lieutenant Governor of the province of Ontario, and addressed to Paul Oetiker, Esquire, returning officer for the electoral district of Beaches, for the election of a member to represent the said electoral district of Beaches in the legislative assembly of this province, in the room of William H. Collings, Esquire, who, since his election as representative of the said electoral district of Beaches, hath departed this life, Robert John Harris, Esquire, has been returned as duly elected as appears by the return of the said writ of election, dated the fourteenth day of February, 1962, which is now lodged of record in my office.

RODERICK LEWIS,
Chief Election Officer.

Toronto, February 20, 1962.

Robert John Harris, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Beaches, having taken the oaths and subscribed the roll, took his seat.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the clerk had received from the chief election officer and laid upon the table the following certificate of a by-election held since the adjournment of the House:

Electoral district of Brant: Robert F. Nixon.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that, in view of a writ of election dated the twenty-first day of November, 1961, issued by the Honourable Lieutenant Governor of the province of Ontario, and addressed to John

P. Fraser, Esquire, returning officer for the electoral district of Brant, for the election of a member to represent the said electoral district of Brant in the legislative assembly of this province, in the room of Harry C. Nixon, Esquire, who, since his election as representative of the said electoral district of Brant, hath departed this life, Robert F. Nixon, Esquire, has been returned as duly elected as appears by the return of the said writ of election, dated the twenty-fifth day of January, 1962, which is now lodged of record in my office.

RODERICK LEWIS,
Chief Election Officer.

Toronto, February 20, 1962.

Robert F. Nixon, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Brant, having taken the oaths and subscribed the roll, took his seat.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the clerk had received from the chief election officer and laid upon the table the following certificate of a by-election held since the adjournment of the House:

Electoral district of Kenora: Robert W. Gibson.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that, in view of a writ of election dated the twenty-first day of November, 1961, issued by the Honourable Lieutenant Governor of the province of Ontario, and addressed to Joseph J. O'Flaherty, Esquire, returning officer for the electoral district of Kenora, for the election of a member to represent the said electoral district of Kenora in the legislative assembly of this province, in the room of Albert Wren, Esquire, who, since his election as representative of the said electoral district of Kenora, hath departed this life, Robert W. Gibson, Esquire, has been returned as duly elected as appears by the return of the said writ of election, dated the twenty-fifth day of January, 1962, which is now lodged of record in my office.

RODERICK LEWIS,
Chief Election Officer.

Toronto, February 20, 1962.

Robert W. Gibson, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Kenora, having taken the oaths and subscribed the roll, took his seat.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express a word of welcome to these three new hon. members who have exercised the privilege and their right of taking their seats in the Assembly this afternoon. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) is following in the footsteps and the tradition of his father, who was a well known and well beloved figure in this House for many, many years; and although the hon.

member for Brant and I, and his father before him, do not support the same views politically, nor do we express the same political philosophy, nonetheless I am delighted to see a continuation of family tradition in the matter of service to the people of this province in this Legislature.

The hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Harris) also has a long background of family service. His father served the constituency, which he will serve in this House, in the Parliament of Canada for a good many years. I express the same delight in seeing him follow in his father's footsteps in serving the people of his constituency and the province.

I would like to extend a personal welcome to the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) and I would wish for these three hon. members health and happiness and satisfaction as they serve the members of their own constituencies and the people of this province in the years of service that will lie ahead of them here.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I may but take a moment to join with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in these words of welcome. I would underscore what he has said and identify, as he has done, these three historic ridings in Ontario with the newly-elected hon. members. I would add one further comment, Mr. Speaker, and that is simply the fact that all three men are very young in years. This I think is part of the changing tradition in Ontario. These men come as young men with the ideal and determination that they will dedicate themselves and their lives to the task of government in Ontario. That is a very commendable thing in this historic Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me much personal pleasure to join in this welcome to the three new hon. members.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) in extending a welcome to the new hon. members of the House. I and some others did our very best to see that their pursuits at home would not be interrupted and they could continue with their personal business but we did not succeed. They are here and I just want to say, as I have said before in this House to new members, that in my view the work of serving people in a free country in a Legislature and a Parliament is the noblest pursuit to which man can turn his energies.

I hope that they will find here in this Legislature satisfaction in the years that lie ahead.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the clerk had received from the commissioners of estate bills their report in the following case: Bill No. Pr10, An Act respecting Metropolitan United Church of Toronto.

The report read:

THE SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO
THE HONOURABLE THE CHIEF JUSTICE OF ONTARIO
THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE SCHATZ
OSGOODE HALL, TORONTO 1.

December 20, 1961

RODERICK LEWIS ESQ., Q.C.,
CLERK OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS,
TORONTO, ONTARIO.

DEAR SIR:

Re: Bill No. Pr10, 1961-62, An Act Respecting Metropolitan United Church of Toronto

The undersigned, as commissioners of estate bills as provided by The Legislative Assembly Act, R.S.O. 1960, Chap 208, Sec. 57, having had the said bill referred to us as such commissioners, now beg to report thereon.

We have heard representations from Mr. J. B. Allen, Q.C., on behalf of the petitioner. He informed us that National Trust Company Limited, executor of the estate of the late Lillian Frances Massey Treble by letter have stated it considers the bill to be reasonable and does not oppose this petition.

It appears from the petition filed herewith and from the information disclosed on the hearing before us that the bill is reasonable.

We are of the opinion that the provisions of the said bill are proper for carrying its purposes into effect and that it is reasonable that such bill be passed into law.

The bill duly signed by the commissioners and a copy of the petition for the same are accordingly returned herewith.

Yours sincerely,

DANA PORTER, C.J.O.,

S. N. SHATZ, J.,

Commissioners of estate bills

Clerk of the House: The following petitions have been received:

Of the corporation of Christ Church, Anglican Church of Canada, Amherstburg, praying that an Act may pass varying the terms of a trust created by the will of the late Loftus Cuddy.

Of the corporation of the United Church of Canada praying that an Act may pass authorizing the corporation and emanations thereof to invest in such securities as are authorized for Canadian insurance companies.

Of the corporation of the town of Rainy River praying that an Act may pass exempting the Baudette and Rainy River municipal bridge from all municipal taxation.

Of the corporation of Laurentian University of Sudbury praying that an Act may pass enlarging the senate thereof; and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of the city of Hamilton praying that an Act may pass vesting in the corporation all assets, etc. of the board of park management of the said city; and for related purposes.

Of Riverview Health Association praying that an Act may pass providing for the distribution of its assets in the event of dissolution, and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of the board of education for the city of Windsor and the Windsor suburban district high school board validating an agreement whereby the suburban district board will erect and pay additions to a secondary school in the city of Windsor and be guaranteed certain accommodation in such school.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Mr. Wintermeyer moves, seconded by the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) the adjournment of this House to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the conduct of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) in respect to the Royal Commission on organized crime.

Mr. Speaker: While I think it is well known to the members of the House that in motions of this type we do bring before the House matters of urgent and public importance, it is noted, however, that the matter must be both urgent and of public importance. It may be a little urgent, it may be of some importance, some urgency, but today at this point I cannot see where I can allow the motion on the basis that it is urgent and of public importance. It is something which can be discussed in other ways in this House and therefore I cannot accept the motion.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, before you make your ruling, would you hear my request? Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that this is a matter of great urgency and great public importance and I am not trying to make light of this at all. I feel that the matter is urgent for the simple reason that it is my understanding that the hon. Attorney-General delivered an address in this city last night which has received wide public attention. The matter is urgent because unless it is dealt with now it will not be of the same consequence or significance.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I point out to the members that I have ruled it out of order, and in my position as Speaker I happen to know that a question has been submitted to the House something along the same line as appears on the motion. Therefore at this time I do rule the motion of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) out of order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, will you permit a question, a question not directed to your ruling?

Mr. Speaker: Surely.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, you have suggested that this particular motion is out of order because somebody has had the privilege of asking a question. I hope that that question will be pursued. But surely you do not suggest that the motion is out of order because a question will be asked at some future or later time in these proceedings?

Mr. Speaker: The question is ruled out of order based on the fact that in the Speaker's opinion the matter is not of public and urgent importance today.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I have no recourse but to appeal your decision.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the Speaker's ruling will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

I declare the "ayes" have it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before you proceed further may I ask for clarification in light of the ruling on the motion that was just made by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and which you found unacceptable. In the course of your explanation you stated that there would be other occasions in which this could be debated. Do I conclude correctly that it is within the rules of this House to debate the contents of the Royal Commission at any future date during the course of this session?

Mr. Speaker: No, I did not put any such interpretation on it at all. The hon. members know what they can say.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Roberts) does it and I thought your wording indicated that we had free range to do likewise.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Introduction of bills.

CERTAIN LANDS IN THE TOWN OF GANANOQUE

Hon. J. W. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting certain lands in the town of Gananoque.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a short explanation of this. This bill has to do with certain lands located in the town of Gananoque which were dedicated by the late Joel Stone, in the year 1804, to the public use as a burying ground for the use of the inhabitants of the village of Gananoque and its vicinity; and, pursuant to a judgment of the Court of Chancery in the year 1871, were conveyed to the Crown. Pursuant to the judgment, the corporation of the village of Gananoque covenanted to take the supervision of the lands.

The lands are not now used as a burying ground, and there is evidence that the lands have not been used for such purpose for over 80 years and that all the bodies were removed therefrom over 80 years ago. Adjacent owners have encroached on, fenced and used parts of the lands for many years. This Act provides for the granting of letters patent to adjacent owners who have encroached on the old burying grounds and for the granting of the remainder of the burying grounds to the town of Gananoque.

THE CROWN TIMBER ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Crown Timber Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide that chips produced as by-products of the manufacture of lumber are included in the list of products into which timber must be manufactured in Canada. The second section provides for placing the responsibility for regeneration of cut-over areas on the licensee are deleted from the present Act; and the Minister of Lands and Forests, with this amendment, is authorized to enter into agreements for this purpose. This agreement is supplementary to the policy of the department of shifting the primary responsibility for regeneration to the Crown.

THE MINING ACT

Hon. G. C. Wardrope moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, this is a 132-page bill and I am not going to burden you with it; but in explanation I would say that this bill introduces legislation on safety procedures, such as friction-hoists, ammonia nitrate and fuel-oil as a blasting agent and Raise climbing apparatus. The modifications and changes are necessary to keep the Act in pace with safe practice in the mining industry.

This has been edited and checked by the Attorney-General's department and it constitutes the thinking of labour and industrial briefs that have come to us. Many of the improvements are based on their findings and all interested groups will have an opportunity to go into this bill and debate it when it goes before the standing committee on mines.

THE LAKEHEAD COLLEGE ACT, 1956

Hon. J. P. Robarts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Lakehead College of Arts, Science and Technology Act, 1956.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce this bill into the Legislature. It provides that the Lakehead College of Arts, Science and Technology will have power to grant university degrees and honorary degrees and awards in arts and science, and it represents the final step into full university status of this very fine educational institution at the head of the lakes. It represents the culmination of a good deal of work and hard labour on behalf of many public-spirited people in that area and I think that we all can be very happy in this coming of age of the baby of our university family.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, in view of the hon. Minister of Education's statement, I would like to ask a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

THE NOTARIES ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Notaries Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, in anticipation of a question on this, I would say that this is a routine bill, merely providing for regulations for fixing fees payable on appointment of notaries public.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides in effect for an increase in the number of judges in the trial division of the High Court of the Supreme Court of Ontario by two. There has been a very heavy volume of work and the Chief Justice of the High Court has drawn this to the attention of both the hon. Minister of Justice and myself. There has recently been an appointment to the Island of Cyprus of one of the trial division judges of this province, the hon. Mr. John Wilson, who, I think it can be said, is being extended an honour and a duty at the same time. He is to assist in setting up in that island the court system with which he is familiar, and I think our country too can take credit in that request from Cyprus.

THE COUNTY COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The County Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, again anticipating a request for a brief statement, I would say that this is a bill that has been prepared as a result of the study of the Silk Report, which all hon. members have had in their possession for some time.

The principal purpose of the bill is to increase the monetary jurisdiction of the county and district courts from $1,000 in contract and $1,200 in tort in like actions respectively to $3,000. Provisions which limit partnership actions in cases where the capital of the partnership does not exceed $4,000, and estate actions to cases where the estate does not exceed $4,000, are amended to replace the $4,000 figure with $20,000.

It also simplifies the means of rearranging the sittings of the courts but always subject to the direction of the chief judge, and which I will mention later in another bill. Then there is the holding of additional sittings subject to the approval of the chief judge. This permits non-jury sittings outside the county town, and provides that where a judge fails to attend court, the chief judge instead of the Attorney-General shall be advised and act. It simplifies the procedure for a new trial where a judge dies or fails to give judgment in six months, and provides for appeals in interlocutory matters.

THE COUNTY JUDGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, the principal purpose of this bill is to make provisions for the appointment of a chief judge of the county and district courts. The provisions contained are appropriate for provincial enactment. An amendment to The Judges Act of Canada is a necessary complement and I think will be definitely forthcoming.

The bill also provides for the repeal of the requirement that the clerk's office shall be in the court house; for a special allowance to the chief judge; for revision of the oaths revision in line with the appointment of the chief judge; for changing the term "shorthand writer" to "court reporter" so that mechanical or electronic devices properly supervised may be used; and for the responsibilities of the chief judge and the other judges in arranging the sittings of the courts.

The annual meetings within the county courts' judicial districts are to be continued under the chairmanship of the chief judge. There is also provision for an annual meeting of all the judges.

THE DIVISION COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend The Division Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill accomplishes three recommendations contained in the Silk report. It permits the Lieutenant-Governor to appoint a division court judge. This is in line with the constitutional authority of the province but the present situation has been to declare that judges of the county and district courts are the division court judges, and to permit a barrister to be appointed pro tem. by one of them.

This bill permits the Lieutenant-Governor in council to appoint judges but also retains the principle that all county and district court judges are judges of the division court. It increases the jurisdiction in tort actions so that the jurisdiction will be $400 across the board, with the top limit of $800 in the territorial district.

The $800 in northern Ontario, which is a revision from the present consent practice in that part of the province, apparently has not worked out satisfactorily. But for the benefit particularly of hon. members from the north, I would say that the new provision permits the plaintiff to bring an action for an amount up to $800, but where it exceeds $400, the parties may not be represented by an agent but must either appear themselves or be represented by a lawyer. The rules relating to pleadings and other procedures of the county courts apply and the judge has the discretion regarding discovery and production.

THE GENERAL SESSIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The General Sessions Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill is complementary to The County Courts Act in connection with the general sessions of the peace, recognizing the chief judge and defining the chief judge, and revising the provision regarding the altering of the sittings. It is identical with the corresponding provision in the County Courts bill.

The bill permits the chief judge, instead of the Lieutenant-Governor by proclamation, to authorize the holding of the sittings elsewhere in the county or district and in the county or district town. It alters the provision regarding the inability of the judge to hold sittings so that the sheriff will report the matter to the chief judge and the chief judge will take appropriate action thereon.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There are two amendments contained in this bill. One permits the presiding judge to hold sittings at a place other than the county or district town; the second adds the chief judge of the county or district courts to the rules committee.

THE JUVENILE COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Juvenile and Family Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, the present system is working out satisfactorily in many cases but in some cases is not too satisfactory, because of interference with the time of what might be regarded as the principal responsibilities of those juvenile and family court judges who are also county court judges or magistrates. In some cases it makes time demands which render it unfeasible for the judge to give adequate time to his juvenile and family court work.

Altogether the situation in every part of the province is perhaps not consistent with the important place which the juvenile and family courts have now gained in our court organization. This is largely brought about by reason of the fact that the judge must be paid by a single municipality. Ideally the situation might be to take care of this on a province-wide basis for all judges. This bill represents a compromise by authorizing the Lieutenant-Governor in council to make regulations providing for the apportionment of the salaries and expenses between or among municipalities and providing the Attorney-General may approve such arrangements as may promote a better system of judges.

THE SURROGATE COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Surrogate Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, in line with the amendments to The County Courts Act, and The Division Courts Act, the jurisdiction of the surrogate courts is increased insofar as removability to the Supreme Court is concerned. The increase is from $2,000 to $20,000, relating to estates. The provision appearing in section 1 of the bill is self-explanatory.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a note here which says that Lieutenant-Colonel Glenn was plucked out of the sea at 3.01 this afternoon.

I also have a statement which I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of Brotherhood Week. We have come once again to the week in the year when we observe a very important stocktaking in the life of our national family. Brotherhood Week is an occasion when we reflect specifically on the fact that our national survival depends upon the maintenance of the right relationships between all members of that family.

In this week we will rededicate ourselves to the goal of strengthening and maintaining mutual understanding between all members and sections of our community. Our connection in this House with Brotherhood Week is particularly close this year for our greatly esteemed colleague, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), is national co-chairman of the week's observances which are sponsored across Canada by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews.

His fellow chairman is the Honourable Mr. Justice Gerald Fauteux of the Supreme Court of Canada. The selection of the hon. member for Victoria as co-chairman is of course in recognition of the great role that he has played over the years in forwarding the cause of human rights. We congratulate him and we thank him for undertaking this further service to his fellow Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, in our world today perhaps the most hopeful sign for the future is the increasing awareness of people everywhere that respect to the individuality, the dignity and the equal rights of every human being, is, in the words of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, "the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world." Certainly in our own country we have seen how people with diverse backgrounds and interests can come together and work together to their mutual advantage in the spirit of brotherhood.

On the other hand, while there is every indication of a more widespread acceptance and practice of that spirit around the world, there still exist attitudes and actions which are destructive of elementary justice. I would not suggest that these things are rampant in Canada but I would never dismiss them as manifestations peculiar only to some other part of the world.

Thus it is very much in the interest of our society that we should observe Brotherhood Week once each year and that we should remind ourselves forcibly of its meaning. But we would be unwise if we assumed that we could get away with only a once-a-year recognition of its principles, for ignorance operates 52 weeks a year and ignorance is the parent of prejudice which in its turn results in a denial of basic human rights.

We, as hon. members of this Legislature, believe that the principles for which Brotherhood Week stands have to be incorporated into the laws of the land. We have enacted such statutes as The Fair Employment Practices Act, making it public policy in our province that every person is free and equal in dignity and right without regard to race, colour or creed, and establishing machinery for guaranteeing this policy. To my mind, one of the major pieces of legislation before the House at the present time is The Ontario Human Rights Code Act which restates and reinforces these principles.

In my first address in this House I said that I was firmly and unreservedly committed to the human rights policies established by my distinguished predecessor. On this occasion I repeat that assurance.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, it affords me, of course, great pleasure to join with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in underscoring the significance of brotherhood. It is not necessary that I go into any great detail. I think it is important only that I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am sure I speak for all hon. members of the House when I say that we thoroughly agree with the observations that the hon. Prime Minister has made and with the sincerity and genuineness with which he expressed the thoughts relating to brotherhood.

If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to add but one comment, it would simply be this—and it comes to me as the result of the observation that the hon. Prime Minister made at the introduction of his remarks, that is the fact that Colonel Glenn had completed his trip around the world in orbit and has now been rescued. I think maybe that we are too preoccupied with a man in space and in orbit. The solution to Man and for Man, actually, in all probability will be not at a military level but at a level of ideals here on earth and inside Man; and I think it is imperative that we all give expression to the conviction that I hope we all cherish that Man's real solution is in his understanding of the significance in the true philosophical identity of the word "love".

We must learn to love one another for the sake of the dignity of each individual human person, and begin to realize the individual's precious significance, and then I think we will understand the need for brotherhood and the need that we have today to know that all men are equal and deserve equal rights; because they are all little worlds unto themselves, with a beginning and an end and a purpose and a free will, and this sets them aside from material objects.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to join with the hon. Prime Minister in these ceremonies, in these observations, in this expression of our concern for, and our appreciation of, and our support of the term "brotherhood", particularly at the beginning of this Brotherhood Week.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my support briefly to that of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) for the objectives of Brotherhood Week. Both the hon. gentlemen have referred to the great achievements, technical achievements, of today and I think perhaps the great message that it brings to us is that not only is this world very, very small, but in fact this world is being brought very close to the universe beyond us—that was away beyond our ken up until now. Because this world has become small it behooves us to release or to remove the tensions in the human family because we must live in peace and brotherhood or else we are not going to be able to survive.

So it is highly appropriate that the great triumph today in space should come in the middle of Brotherhood Week, because this is a reminder to us once again of the validity of these principles and a reminder that we must not just endorse them in Brotherhood Week but practise them for the 52 weeks of the year.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, because I have been inspired by the lofty ideals expressed by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the other hon. members concerning brotherhood, and because I have listened with some admiration to the hon. Prime Minister stating that he will practise these ideals every day of the week, I therefore am humbly assuming that I can ask him a question to test the concreteness of his philosophy. It arises from the memo which is on the desks of all of us, sir, from the Italian Community Promotion Centre. This concerns the number of Italian immigrants who had hoped to get retraining; unfortunately the retraining has been stopped by his department.

My question, sir, is: Is the hon. Prime Minister reconsidering that decision of his department—which decision was to eliminate the practical training of Italian immigrants at the Provincial Institute of Trades under Schedule 5? I think the reason that has been given by his department was that The Apprenticeship Act made retraining impossible. My further question is, Mr. Speaker: is he considering then to change The Apprenticeship Act to make it possible for people over 21 to get training in a designated trade?

I apologize, Mr. Speaker, that I had not sent this question in writing to him, but because the brief was presented to us, I would assume that he has probably looked at it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to answer that question. This is a relatively technical matter, as the hon. member (Mr. Thompson) knows, and I will refer to these notes. Today I received a copy of this eight-page memorandum prepared by the Italian Community Promotion Centre and I understand that a copy has appeared on every desk in the Legislature.

The memorandum questions certain policies of The Department of Education and the administration of the vocational retraining programme. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the situation.

The men mentioned in the memorandum want training in the trades designated under The Apprenticeship Act, but wish to have this training under what is termed Schedule 5 programme for training the unemployed under the federal-provincial training agreement. This agreement does not provide for apprenticeship training.

To qualify for training under The Apprenticeship Act the following conditions must be met:

(1) The apprentice must be employed and registered with The Department of Labour;

(2) He must have a minimum of grade eight education;

(3) He must be a minor over the age of 16.

None of these men qualified, as they were all unemployed, had less than the education requirements and most of them were over age. Many of these men had been employed as labourers in the construction industry but this experience does not qualify a person as a tradesman in the designated trades as they are known in this province.

It would have been most unfair to keep these men in the Provincial Institute of Trades for a period of 6 months under Schedule 5 in the courses originally planned. At the end of this period, at the very best, they would only be partially trained in any of the skills connected with the designated trades. It would have been unfair to have them feel that they could go out and compete with men who had been properly trained under a full-time training programme extending over a period of four to five years.

We are attempting, through our education system, to upgrade the skilled workers of Ontario. In many ways we are increasing our vocational training facilities. We have been raising the standards of admission for apprenticeship training to try to raise the standards of workers in order to cope with rapidly changing technological advances.

We feel that what we are offering these people is of much greater importance to them. We are providing them with the skills and communications through a basic course in academic upgrading. They are taught English, with emphasis on oral and written communications, mathematics, science and blueprint reading—all designed to assist them to adjust to life in Canada.

To deal with the specific points in the memorandum I would like to say this: there was nothing in the applications which listed them as tradesmen. They all had only labouring experience with the trade. They did not understand English, and for that reason the academic course which includes instruction in English was recommended for them. And, three, there are some unemployed apprentices in Ontario at the present time. Some of these apprentices have only been working part time at their trade and it would be unrealistic to train other men while these apprentices are still unemployed.

Finally, to attempt to train apprentices in the way these men requested would simply dilute the trades. This would not be fair to these men, or to apprentices who can qualify, nor to the men who have already qualified and are employed in the trade.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. Prime Minister? I would like to ask him why these men were led to believe in the first place that they could receive training involving certain skilled trades?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, these courses were set up and perhaps there was some error within the department itself. The point is one that the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) knows very well. We cannot attempt to take unemployed people, bring them in and give them a ten or twelve weeks course and send them out equipped to compete with plumbers and the tradesmen who have spent long apprenticeships—

Mr. Bryden: Yes, but why were they led to believe that they could do this?

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Let the hon. Prime Minister answer the question; the hon. member asked one.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. Prime Minister is not—

Mr. Singer: No, I think this is an important—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister a supplementary question?

Does the hon. Prime Minister mean that anyone over 21 is too old to learn a trade? If this is what he means, it is a disgrace.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, obviously he does not mean that.

Mr. Singer: Well, that is what he said.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it is the purpose of The Apprenticeship Act to provide that to become an apprentice you must be a minor over the age of 16; that is what I said.

Mr. Singer: If you are over the age of 21, you are too old, is that right? Shame!

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. If the hon. Prime Minister does not say that, does not The Apprenticeship Act say it? Over 21, you are no longer considered as an apprentice.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to answer the question. The section of the Act simply means that you cannot become an apprentice in one of the designated trades under that Act if you are over the age of 21.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask another supplementary question? Is this not the only province—I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: As to any more questions—I accepted the first one as a matter of courtesy and we can debate this in my estimates. There will be lots of time.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question directed to the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts); the formalities have been observed.

In the Toronto Globe and Mail of Monday, February 19, a front page story entitled "College Official Suggests Birth Control As Answer To Education Cost Problem," quotes Dr. C. E. Phillips, director of graduate studies at the Ontario College of Education as saying:

The alternative of reducing the number of pupils by more humane means than atomic warfare can no longer be dismissed as an infringement on the rights of individuals—neither here nor in countries where the peril is strikingly apparent.

Does Dr. Phillips' statement accurately reflect the policy of The Department of Education?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think this question could be classed as at least semi-frivolous; however, I will correct the hon. member (Mr. Troy) where he is in error. In the first place, Professor Phillips was not speaking on behalf of The Department of Education—he cannot speak on behalf of The Department of Education as he is an employee of the University of Toronto—but to set the hon. member's mind at rest I can assure him that as long as I am the Minister of Education this will never be the policy of The Department of Education.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, it seems to me—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Troy: But I have another question, sir. In view of the fact of the statement of other—pardon?

Mr. Speaker: When the members ask a supplementary question, I want them to go right into the question and ask the question and not make speeches of any kind.

Mr. Troy: I want to ask the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts)—I did not get the remark about frivolous. I want him to repeat that so I will know what he said, because this is not a frivolous matter to me.

An hon. member: Well, we will just leave it there.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), a copy of which I have given to him in accordance with the rules of the House.

Last night the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Robarts) expressed doubts concerning the effectiveness of crime investigations. This follows his statement of January 15, when he publicly alleged that certain persons were involved in aspects of organized crime.

These statements raise serious questions as to the precise role of the Royal Commission. Since they come from the hon. Minister heading the department which has jurisdiction over our law enforcement agencies, whose co-operation will be required in the commission investigations, will the hon. Prime Minister indicate whether the hon. Attorney-General's pronouncements are personal views or an accurate reflection of government's policies and attitude?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have examined the speech of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Robarts) and it is a long address of 45 minutes duration and it contains a good deal of, what I would term, learned research. There is a good deal of history and a great deal of discussion about the abstract of liberty and I feel that it is unfair to remove from it, one very small portion, and draw certain conclusions from the portion so withdrawn.

I can assure the hon. member (Mr. MacDonald) that the government has complete confidence in Mr. Justice Roach sitting as the Royal commissioner, with the terms of reference as they are set out in the Order-in-Council dated December 11, 1961; that he will carry out the duties assigned to him in which he undertook as they are set out in that Order-in-Council. I can also assure the hon. member that the government will take such action as may appear necessary when the commissioner makes his final report.

The hon. Attorney-General has assured me—and I did not need his assurance, but for the purposes of answering this question I obtained it from him—that the commission will have the most complete and fullest co-operation from his department and assistance in any way possible. He informs me that he has complete and absolute confidence himself in the capacity of the Royal commission as constituted and in the commissioner.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask a supplementary question? I address this to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), Mr. Speaker; in view of the hon. Prime Minister's observations, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister whether in view of the fact that the newspapers did not interpret the speech in the same way as the hon. Prime Minister has, whether he will assure the House this speech will be tabled?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Would the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) not like to come out into the corridor, and I will read it to him.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I would like it tabled. Will the hon. Prime Minister undertake to table the speech?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why the speech should be tabled but I will ensure that the hon. leader of the Opposition gets a copy.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), copies of which I have already sent to you and to him.

In view of the statement of the Ontario Court of Appeal in its recent judgment in the case of the Royal York Hotel and the Hotel and Club Employees Union that the language of clause 'c' of section 50 of The Labour Relations Act leaves something to be desired, will the hon. Minister indicate if legislation will be introduced at this session to clarify the language referred to?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Well, Mr. Speaker, I did get a notice of the hon. member's question. May I say that since the decision was handed down I have been attempting to get reasons for judgment from the Court of Appeal and to date I have not been successful. However, I do not wish to attempt to answer the question today until I see what the Court did say and the reasons for judgment. If the section referred to requires clarification, certainly action will be taken to clarify it.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). Inasmuch as we had the hon. Prime Minister's assurance before Christmas that he would allow his experts to sit with ours to investigate the possibility of making a $25.00 deduction instead of 17 cents insofar as The Sales Tax Act is concerned, will the hon. Prime Minister advise us when this meeting will take place so that reasonable preparations may be made by ourselves?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member (Mr. Whicher) on his optimism in thinking I would be trapped by a question like this.

An hon. member: There is no trap.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: At no time was there any discussion whatsoever that we would investigate the possibility of making a $25.00 deduction instead of 17 cents insofar as The Sales Tax Act is concerned. This was not the question that was debated nor is it the question I said I would consider referring to the public accounts committee.

In fact, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) said that his $25.00 deduction would produce $115 million and I said it would produce $52 million—and the question between us was as to who was right. I said I would produce my experts and he could produce his and we would then see who was correct. So on that basis I will answer the question and say if the hon. leader of the Opposition will tell me how much time he needs to prepare, to justify a figure that he advanced with such vehemence in the fall, three months ago—if he will tell me how much time he needs I will see that he gets it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the question that has been asked by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) I think was asked in a genuine effort to give us some idea of when this particular matter would be referred to the public accounts committee. I do not think there was any intention whatsoever to trap the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) or any hon. member of the government at all. Very frankly, the reason for it was in the fact that one man has to be called from Harvard University, where he is currently employed. Now I would think a week's notice would be a reasonable period of time.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will undertake to give no less than a week's notice. I cannot tell the precise date now but I will undertake to do that.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). Inasmuch as the hon. Minister has suggested on several occasions that a committee would be set up to investigate the possibility of a Farm Machine Act for the province, will the hon. Minister reassure the House that this will be done and tell us when we may expect such a committee to meet?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), and I thank him for the advance notice of his question, may I say that the individual members of the committee have been asked to act on this committee and we are awaiting their reply. As soon as consent has been received from these committee members, we will ask them to meet immediately.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) and the question is: what steps has the provincial government taken to assure the public that all meat offered for sale in this province is safe for human consumption?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the entire matter of meat inspection which is traditionally a responsibility to be carried out by the federal Department of Agriculture, is at present the subject of very extensive discussion between the federal government and the government of Ontario. No conclusions have yet been reached in our discussions but they are proceeding vigorously, and every effort is being made to establish some workable plan by which the public will be assured that the meat they buy is safe for human consumption.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? The hon. Minister (Mr. Stewart) in his answer suggested that all meat inspection in Ontario was traditionally a federal matter. Is there not provincial inspection in some cases?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the answer is "no".

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question which has been directed to the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart), notice of which has been given to him. It is a very short question. Have the regulations respecting the classification of films as "Adult Entertainment" been changed recently? If so, what changes have been made and what is the purpose of the change or changes?

Hon. B. L. Cathcart (Minister of Travel and Publicity): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) for giving me advance notice. There has been no change in the regulations in the past year or so. However, I may say that the regulations under The Theatres Act including adult or restricted films are presently under consideration and study.

Mr. Troy: May I ask a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: It could have been "no", but I gave the hon. member the answer.

Mr. Troy: Did the hon. Minister read in the Metropolitan press that there was a change?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Speaker, the answer is "no".

Mr. Troy: That is recently, within the last three or four weeks?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Speaker, I was with the hon. member last weekend and I warned him what my answer would be.

Mr. MacDonald: Before the orders of the day, may I ask the chief liquor commissioner whether he is prepared to answer a question which I directed to him on the last day before Christmas, and which is to be found on page 491 of Hansard? He pleaded for a little more time at that time.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the answer will probably be ready tomorrow or the day after.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to call any orders of the day. I am going to adjourn the House. It will take a day or so to get a volume of work established. My present plan is to bring the budget in a week from Thursday. We will meet tomorrow; and a week from tomorrow will be a committee day and then the budget will come in on the Thursday following. I will attempt to wind up the Throne Speech debates a week from today.

Mr. Bryden: Any night sessions this week?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, but I think as soon as the budget is introduced we will have night sessions Tuesday and Thursday nights as a matter of course.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 4:28 of the clock, p.m.

Introduction of bills.

THE ELECTION ACT

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Election Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE GAME AND FISH ACT, 1961-1962

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests) moves first reading of bill intituled, The Game and Fish Act, 1961-1962.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, it may be of value to the House if I were to make a short statement in connection with the purpose of this Act.

The 1960 consolidation and revision of the Ontario statutes did much to simplify The Game and Fisheries Act which was last revised in 1946 and has had numerous amendments during the past 15 years. There is perhaps no Act of Parliament which is so widely read as that relating to the game and fish laws, and the need for a complete revision has been recognized for some time.

The Department of Lands and Forests committee, consisting of senior head office and field officials, has been engaged in a study of the game and fish laws, and the new draft bill which I am introducing today embodies the recommendations of this committee. As mentioned, the purpose of the revision is to simplify the Act and to bring it into line with administrative practices.

Sections of the bill have been grouped according to subject matter. For example, revisions relating to game animals have been placed in a section under the heading "Game Animals". Similarly, provisions relating to game birds, fur-bearing animals, fish, use of dogs in hunting, have been grouped under appropriate headings. Also, by greater use of the interpretation section of the bill in consolidating groups of descriptive words, it has been possible to simplify other sections of the bill.

Some of the new features of the bill include a statement of purpose of fish and game legislation. Regulations may be made imposing control over fishing huts. A further provision will permit an officer to collect a money payment as security for appearance in court of a person who is to be charged with a violation under the game and fish laws.

Because matters relating to hunting and fishing hold a widespread interest for great numbers of people, we plan to distribute first reading copies of the bill among the fish and game clubs, the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, the Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters Association and other interested groups and persons, to give them an opportunity to study the new bill before the standing committee on fish and game meet. The bill can be discussed in detail in the standing committee.

THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Agricultural Societies Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister would explain the nature of the bill.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the amendment provides for the payment of grants on a specific date as the statements are received from the various agricultural societies by the superintendent. Under the present Act they are all held till the end of the year, as I understand it, and then the amounts are paid out according to the statements received. This will allow them to be paid out as they are received. I think it simplifies the procedure immensely.

THE TRAINING SCHOOLS ACT

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Reform Institutions) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Training Schools Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, where a boy or girl who is a ward of a training school is placed in a foster home, we have placement officers attached to that institution who follow up and assist the ward that has been placed. The department is now establishing district rehabilitation offices for this placement and parole work. This bill is to allow the district rehabilitation officers to assume and to exercise that wardship.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that yesterday the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) had suggested that the Italian immigrants who are not able to take retraining were labourers. As a point of information, I received a letter in this House from the president of the Italian Community Promotion Centre, which organization had prepared the brief. In this letter the president points out that, of the 180 applicants for this retraining, 45 had spent 4 to 10 years as tradesmen and had registered in the schools in order to upgrade themselves. I would like to raise the question, sir, because of this information, will there be reconsideration by the hon. Prime Minister of his decision not to continue retraining on a practical basis since we now learn that these men have been tradesmen for some 4 to 10 years?

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out to the hon. members that possibly the hon. member (Mr. Thompson) who has just spoken could have submitted this question in the routine way—so that we do not upset the established procedure in the Chamber.

Mr. Thompson: I really had started with a point of information, Mr. Speaker. I will not continue this question, but I would be interested—

Mr. Speaker: The point of information could still be couched in the terms of a question. Does the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) wish to answer this point?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it would have been much more effective if the hon. member (Mr. Thompson) had given me a note of this. This is the first I have heard of it. I am in no position to comment on it. All he needs to do is send it to my office and I will deal with it.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I rise on a question of personal privilege. It is also a matter affecting the privilege of every hon. member of this House. Yesterday your honour saw fit to rule against a motion by the leader of the Opposition that the House debate the conduct of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) respecting the Royal commission on organized crime. That motion, as all hon. members must know, was precipitated by a speech outside this House by the hon. Attorney-General in which he cast doubt on the effectiveness of commissions of inquiry into crime, and in which he tried to depict the present commission as a possible threat to liberty and due process of law.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Entirely false. Entirely false.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Wait till he finishes. Why does the hon. Attorney-General not keep quiet for a while? He has made enough speeches.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Having ruled against the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, your honour then saw fit to permit the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) to make a statement in reply to a question from the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) in which the hon. Prime Minister defended the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) and sought to suggest that press reports had distorted the speech of the hon. Attorney-General. I quote from the hon. Prime Minister's exact words:

Mr. Speaker, I have examined the speech of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) and it is a long address of 45 minutes' duration and it contains a good deal of what I would term learned research. There is a good deal of history and a great deal of discussion about the abstract of liberty.

and I feel it is unfair to remove from it one very small portion and draw certain conclusions from the portion so withdrawn.

That is the end of the quotation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is that the hon. Prime Minister has misled the House and that he should correct the information that he has given hon. members. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister yesterday refused to table the speech of the hon. Attorney-General so that hon. members could judge for themselves. He agreed, however, to send a copy to the leader of the Opposition.

I have read this copy and if necessary I shall read all of it to the House this afternoon to show that the hon. Prime Minister misled the House when he claimed that the press reports did not accurately reflect the remarks of the hon. Attorney-General.

I shall pass over the hon. Prime Minister's comment that the speech contained a good deal of learned research. Mr. Speaker, the press reported that the hon. Attorney-General cast doubt on the effectiveness of commissions of inquiry into crime and law enforcement. Let me quote the relevant section from the text of the hon. Attorney-General, beginning on page 10 of that text:

Every now and then problems of law enforcement and crime in particular in some particular aspects are the subject of public inquiry. For example, there were the Gestapo charges in 1945 in Ontario resulting in a Royal commission under Mr. Justice LeBel. He had this to say: "I am of the opinion that any person who gives thought to the matter will realize that many false statements are of necessity to be found in police and intelligence files and records. It is understood that the police of any force, large or small, usually set upon and in fact—"

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) rose on a point of privilege and he stated the point of privilege as being that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) misled the House. That is the point of privilege and it is not necessary to make a long speech in the statement of a privilege.

I would point out to all hon. members that when they wish to obtain the floor if they will stand the Speaker will sit down and the floor will be obtained by the hon. member.

Mr. Reaume: Everything was going along fine until the hon.—Am I out of order too now?

Mr. Speaker: I thought the hon. member was rising on a point of privilege. That is the only way he could rise at this time, within the rules of the House, as all hon. members know.

I repeat that the hon. leader of the Opposition mentioned that the hon. Prime Minister had misled the House and that is the point of privilege. As I mentioned, I do not think it calls for a long discourse on a point of privilege.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did state my point of privilege and the point that I was trying to make when you called me to order was to justify my point of privilege. I had stated it—

An hon. member: The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has made his point of privilege.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, my argument is simply this: I stated my point of privilege and it seems to me that I have to demonstrate it to you before you can make an intelligent determination that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, what I am demonstrating at the present time is that the major portion of this address that was given by the hon. Attorney-General was devoted to this very subject. It was not an incidental or small part, and I think that as intelligent persons we must present these facts, before you can make the determination. I am naturally going to point out that I think the hon. Prime Minister should apologize to the House for the statement that he made yesterday. Now I think this is a matter of privilege, certainly it is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The point of privilege "that the hon. Prime Minister misled the House" is just a matter at this point of—what shall I say—not opinion, but judgment. The hon. leader of the Opposition has stated that the hon. Prime Minister misled the House; now at this point if the hon. Prime Minister would say something or say nothing, it is perfectly in order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I substantiate one very important technical rule before you make your determination. Note this, that I did not say "deliberately misled" and the rules of this House point out that there is a great differentiation between the two. What I am pointing out is that the statement that was made yesterday was misleading, not saying that it was deliberately misleading.

An hon. member: It is not misleading, if it is not deliberate.

Mr. Wintermeyer: It certainly is! The hon. member had better go back to his room.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out that matters of personal privilege, which this was mentioned under, do not call for lengthy speeches. If the hon. leader of the Opposition will state very briefly his point of privilege the Speaker will make his ruling on it. That is the procedure we have always followed in this House.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of personal privilege, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has attempted to convince the hon. members of the House that I misled the House yesterday.

That was not my intention and I do not think I did mislead the House. I think the statement that I made concerning inferences drawn from the speech made by the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) the previous evening, is quite justifiable. These things, of course, are matters of opinion. If the hon. leader of the Opposition chooses, he can take a different interpretation than I do—but I will reiterate I had no intention of misleading the House and I do not think I did mislead the House.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): begs leave to present to the House the following:

1. The Public Accounts of the Province of Ontario for the fiscal year ended 31st March, 1961.
2. Report of the Provincial Auditor, Ontario, 1960-1961.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, and now that the storm is over, I ask leave to draw to the attention of hon. members, the review of the mining industry and of The Department of Mines which you, Mr. Speaker, have courteously allowed me to have placed on their desks.

It has become a tradition within the last few years, and it is a matter of pride to the staff of my department, that each year a complete summary of the previous year's activities throughout the industry and in the department can be prepared and ready for distribution within a matter of six or seven weeks of the close of the year.

The presentation of such a report, while the information it contains is still current and newsworthy, presents a real service to the mining industry and to the public generally. My staff claims, and I think with justice, that no other department in this government manages to present so fully documented a report so early in the year. I think I can go further than that and say that no department of any government in Canada quite matches this particular achievement.

I should like to repeat now what I say in the foreword to the report, that to achieve this end, a fine degree of co-operation among all branches of the department and between the department and the various segments of the mining industry, is required. It is not easy to collect and collate such a mass of information and have it ready for publication in so short a time.

That, however, is just one sample of the high standard of service in which The Department of Mines takes pride and I think that the sort of co-operation it receives from, and extends to, the mining industry is one of the best possible means of ensuring the continuation of the spirit of mutual—and mutually profitable—goodwill which has been maintained over a great many years. In commending this review to the attention of hon. members, I suggest that it is worth much more than a casual glance to anyone who is seriously concerned with the economic well-being of our province and our nation.

On page two is a graph which portrays in an almost startling form the rate at which our mining industry has increased its productivity since the first years of the century. From a production total of $190 million in 1946, the annual volume soared to a total of just under $1 billion in 1960. I have to add that in 1961 there is an apparent reversal in this constant upward trend, and production was less by $34.8 million in the last year.

This, however, can be more than accounted for by the loss in the market for uranium, over which it appears no one in this country has any real control. If it were possible to leave uranium out of the picture, both for last year and for 1960, it would be possible to claim an increased overall production of $21 million.

Let me point again to the same graph on page two, Mr. Speaker. Members will note that the shaded portion of the graph indicates the expenditure of the mining industry year by year, and relates this expenditure to the total value of production. The picture, I think, indicates pretty clearly just how important the mining industry is to our whole way of life.

I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to another graph, this one on page 80 of the report. It shows very clearly just how important our mining industry is in the matter of direct tax payments to Ontario's consolidated revenue fund. The hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) will be pleased to hear this.

Here again it will be noted that the total ordinary revenue derived from the mining industry has always been far in excess of the total ordinary expenditure of The Department of Mines. In 1961 the ordinary revenue amounted to $18.3 million as opposed to ordinary expenditure of only $1.5 million. That surely should commend the operation of our mining industry to hon. members on both sides of the House.

I do not intend to say more just now, except to suggest that a study of the production tables on pages 4, 5 and 6, the summary of developments on pages 7 and 8, and the list of producing mining operations on pages 9 and 10, might be very revealing. Part two of the report, which has to do with the activities of the department itself, should be of equal interest to hon. members of this House.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the increased emphasis that is being placed on the work of our geological branch, and the great importance of the aeromagnetic surveys which we, in conjunction with the federal government, are carrying out in northern Ontario, that this report has been aptly named, "1961, A Year of Exploration and Development."

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett). The question is in three parts and it relates to the statement of the hon. Minister to the House on December 5, 1961, in answer to my question: would he meet, as soon as possible, with representatives of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto to clarify responsibility for setting salary scales for employees of the Metropolitan Toronto (Don) Jail. His statement is reported more fully in Hansard for December 5, 1961, on pages 193-194.

The three parts of my question are as follows:

1. Has this meeting been held as yet?
2. If so, when may an announcement of its results be expected?

3. If not, what has prevented it from being held?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, notice of the question is acknowledged with thanks. The question, as the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) has pointed out, came in three parts: Has this meeting been held as yet; if so, when may an announcement of its results be expected; if not, what has prevented it from being held?

The answer to part 1 is "no"; so there is no place for part 2. In answer to part 3, "If not, what has prevented it from being held?" I would answer quite frankly "some of the study and planning required"—and so as to be abundantly sure that none of the hon. members should be confused or misled, may I just add that after the original meeting had been requested and before that meeting was held the Metropolitan executive asked that the agenda be extended.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, in keeping with the announcement yesterday by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) that next Wednesday would be committee day, and in consultation with the chairman of the standing committee on agriculture, I would like to invite the members of the standing committee on agriculture to the Ontario Agricultural College next Wednesday.

At that time it would be proposed to have a look at the college campus, at the buildings that have been built there, and the proposed buildings under construction, and to have lunch there and to have a meeting of the standing committee on agriculture which would deal with the two bills that are under consideration concerning the agricultural colleges. I believe they are Bills 48 and 49 if I am not mistaken, or 49 and 50—I am not sure which, but they are the bills concerning the federation of the colleges and the Research Institute of Ontario. They could be dealt with in committee at that time, and a bus will be provided by the department to take the committee there next week. I think this is an historical event and I think it should be dealt with in the proper surroundings.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender). I have tried to follow the correct procedures of Parliament by having it typed out and sent to him. I hope he received it in time.

In view of the susceptibility of recent arrivals to Ontario to be exploited in such businesses as the building trades, what steps has the government taken during the past year to guarantee that the employees' rights are properly insured? And a supplementary aspect of this is: does this include, or is it considered that this will include, the licensing of building contractors in Ontario?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, a strike occurred in the summer of 1960 affecting the housebuilding aspect of the construction industry. It was in this particular area that the greatest number of immigrants were engaged in construction work.

This strike was settled, and a construction industry arbitration board was established under the chairmanship of Professor J. C. Cameron who had recently retired from the staff of Queen's University.

This board heard and disposed of some 129 cases, and in 48 cases wage claims were adjusted on the basis of consent awards in favour of the workmen involved, most of whom were immigrants. This board has now completed its job but not before it had awarded many thousands of dollars to workers, the greatest number of whom were immigrants.

The government also established a one-man Royal commission to study the construction industry. The commissioner is H. Carl Goldenberg, Q.C. His terms of reference extend to some of the matters mentioned in the question of the hon. member (Mr. Thompson). At this moment, the report of Mr. Goldenberg has not been received. I am sure that all of us are awaiting this report with a great deal of interest.

As to the licensing of building contractors, this matter was raised before the Royal commission on industrial safety which sat under the chairmanship of Judge P. J. McAndrew and which now reported. This report has been delivered to the hon. members of this House.

I am not persuaded that licensing building contractors will make them any more safety-conscious or more well-disposed to paying their debts.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question addressed to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) of which notice has been given. It is in two parts:

1. Did the hon. Attorney-General or members of his staff give directions to a Crown attorney or to any other person in connection with the laying of charges against an official of the town of Eastview?

2. In view of the findings at a recent trial in the town of Eastview does the hon. Attorney-General intend to lay charges against any other individual or individuals?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, my answer to the question is "yes." Mr. R. P. Milligan, Q.C., Crown attorney for Stormont-Glengarry was called in for consultations following an extensive investigation by the provincial police and was instructed to prosecute.

In regard to the second question: this case was concluded last Friday, no report has as yet been received from Crown counsel and I understand an appeal has been taken by the accused.

Mr. Singer: May I ask just a supplementary question arising out of that? I am not particularly talking about this case, are there any other cases that are being investigated and does the hon. Attorney-General either contemplate action or is he going to carry on with his investigations?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I have more consideration for the individuals, if there is such a thing, than to talk about it in this House unless and until action is indicated.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, again before the orders of the day, I have another question on a different topic for the hon. Attorney-General of which notice has been given.

Would the hon. Attorney-General advise this House about the progress of his appeal concerning the disposition of the charges laid against Magistrate Hall in connection with the findings of Judge Joseph Sweet in the York Township probe?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This refers to an appeal by the accused, I presume, to the Supreme Court of Canada from the judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario setting aside the acquittal by the trial court and ordering a new trial. I understand that this case is on the present list for hearing at the present sitting of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, again before the orders of the day I have a question of which notice has been given addressed to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass).

Would the hon. Minister name all present members of the Ontario Municipal Board and give the date of their appointment?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) would direct his eye this way instead of to the former hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender), I would be delighted to reply.

The membership and organization of the Ontario Municipal Board, Mr. Speaker, now is as follows:

J. A. Kennedy, chairman, appointed October 1, 1956; R. L. Kennedy, vice-chairman, appointed February 15, 1951; J. R. Turnbull, vice-chairman, appointed June 1, 1960; A. H. Arrell, Q.C., vice-chairman, appointed June 30, 1961; and the following members: W. Greenwood, appointed January 1, 1953; D. Jamieson, appointed December 1, 1955; V. S. Milburn, appointed April 1, 1956; A. L. McCrae, appointed December 1, 1958; and H. E. Roberts, appointed June 30, 1961. The secretary of the board is Miss B. Vickers, appointed April 1, 1961.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to reply to the question which was asked of me by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) on December 15. I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that this was the last day of the fall session and while there was some suggestion yesterday of undue delay, actually only one day's sitting of this House has intervened.

The question regarded an alleged meeting which was supposed to have been held by a group in Smiths Falls to interview applicants for a supposed vacancy in a local L.C.B.O. store.

I wish to advise the hon. member that the whole matter of hiring a new employee for the Smiths Falls store was entirely without substance in that there was not then, nor is there now, any vacancy to be filled.

It is not the practice of the L.C.B.O. either, to suggest that prospective employees apply to anyone but the board, and I submit that we can hardly therefore be held accountable for the actions of any individual or group of individuals who may decide they want to consider non-existent or even existing staff vacancies. I might add that the liquor board receives many applications and recommendations from people in all walks of life, including many recommendations from hon. members in this House, from all parties, including both Opposition groups. We have no way of knowing, nor do we care, whether such recommendations result from a meeting of any group—political or otherwise. We are interested in the people who apply or are recommended and the qualifications of such person only are taken into consideration.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to make a statement.

For some time, a special committee of the Cabinet under the chairmanship of the hon. Allan Grossman, Ontario's Chief Liquor Commissioner, has been reviewing the provisions of The Liquor Control Act and the policy of the government in relation thereto.

The purpose of this study has been to assure that the provisions of the legislation are practical and in keeping with the conditions that exist in this province today; and are designed to meet the needs and desires of our people.

In keeping with this objective we have given particularly close scrutiny to the permit system. This system was first introduced when the Liquor Control Board was formed in 1927. At that time it was necessary to have a book in which liquor purchases were recorded. Many years later, in March, 1954, this procedure was simplified and the present card system was introduced.

The purpose of first the book and, later, the card permit, was to prevent sale to minors, to those on the interdicted list and to bootleggers. Both systems were effective in this respect, but we have been well aware that the necessity of producing a permit has been a continuing source of irritation to liquor purchasers. We now propose to remove this irritation by abolishing the permit system effective April 1, 1962, at which time new permits would normally be required.

Although a permit will no longer be required, we intend to retain the necessary control over the possible sale to minors and to those on the prohibited list. A system has been devised to retain these controls.

The order form which customers fill out for each purchase and which they sign, includes a certificate similar to that which had to be signed when a permit was purchased. This means that each time a purchase is made the customer will certify that he or she is legally entitled to purchase liquor. The penalty for a false statement on this purchase order form will be the same as the penalty formerly imposed for a false statement in an application for a permit.

The certificate will mean that we can maintain our constant check on those who may attempt to buy liquor for illegal purposes. By eliminating the permit we are at the same time depriving the provincial treasury of a much needed source of revenue. Last year, the sale of permits brought in about $1,300,000. To compensate for this loss in revenue and, at the same time to remove another slight irritation to customers due to odd amounts in the price of the produce caused by the sales tax, we are adjusting the prices of liquor to eliminate the odd amounts, and adjusting the price to the nearest five cents.

For example, an item which presently sells for $4.12 will be priced at $4.15; an item which is now $3.86 will be $3.90.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister wants to take a lesson in arithmetic.

An hon. member: Who from, the hon. member?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Not from you, certainly.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Both these prices that I quoted include the Ontario sales tax. I would like to point out that liquor prices in Ontario are still by far the lowest in any province in Canada.

(Applause.)

This seems to be a very popular topic, Mr. Speaker.

This price change, we feel, will just about make up the loss in revenue caused by dropping the permit system. It is our feeling that the general public will welcome this change and be glad to pay the extra few pennies to avoid the nuisance of buying a permit and having to produce it every time they make a purchase.

Also in keeping with our desire to tailor our liquor provisions to modern-day conditions, we propose to redefine the meaning of "residence" under the Act. Where a person is legally residing in a camp, it will now be legal for him to consume liquor within that area. This will preclude the likelihood of past situations whereby, for example, a person occupying a tent could be charged with an offence because of a technical interpretation of the term "residence." For example, you will all recall that a magistrate ruled he had no authority to decide that a person drinking outside his tent was not legally consuming in his "residence."

We also propose to redefine and clarify the meaning of a "public place" under the Act to avoid situations occurring in the past where magistrates have dismissed charges because they ruled that "licensed premises" do not constitute a "public place" within the meaning of the Act. For example, magistrates have dismissed charges of vagrancy and so on when these offences occurred in "licensed premises."

I would like also to announce, Mr. Speaker, that the budget paid for by the provincial treasury to finance the work of the Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation will amount this year to $1,065,000, which is an increase of $225,000 over last year. A greatly expanded programme is to be introduced by the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) for the foundation in our attack on the problem of alcoholism in this province. This entire programme will be given to the House in detail by the hon. Minister of Health when he introduces his estimates.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that the Cabinet committee is continuing its intensive study of the legislation in regard to the sale and control of liquor. I anticipate there will be further changes brought before the House when this committee completes its study and makes its final recommendation.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, might I address a question to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in regard to the statement that he has just made? These changes that he proposes—are these to be made by regulation or are they going to be made by statutory amendment? In brief, are we going to have an opportunity to debate these, particularly the one concerning the replacing of the permit with a declaration? It would seem to me that we are replacing one piece of paper with another, and the second piece of paper that we are going to have is not going to be of any value unless we have a great army of civil servants to check up on them.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, that particular phase of these amendments and changes will require legislation and therefore the hon. member (Mr. Singer) will have an opportunity to make his comments later.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, my first observation in this important debate is to commend you for the courtesies which you have shown and continue to show me, and I couple in that statement also the members of your staff. Whatever the reason, I note also, sir, that you are more relaxed in this session than in the two previous sessions I had the honour to sit in this House.

I extend congratulations to the newly seated member, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) who succeeds that late beloved gentleman, Harry Nixon, who sat in here for so many years; and to the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) who succeeds that great champion of the north, the late Albert Wren; and also to the newly seated hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Harris) who succeeds another fine gentleman, the late William Collings.

Before I get into the burden of my speech there is something I would like to bring to the attention of the House which follows a statement that the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) made yesterday. Yesterday the hon. Minister dismissed a question, which I asked, as semi-frivolous. It was not asked frivolously or even semi-frivolously, even though such was the way it was answered and was treated by the marionettes from the other side.

The hon. Minister also went on in his answer to say that a staff member of the Ontario College of Education was not reflecting the policy of the government because the college is in fact part of the University of Toronto. I wonder if the hon. Minister made his reply knowing that the present dean of the college was appointed some four years ago, and by the Cabinet of his predecessor.

The present dean, I understand, was not appointed on the recommendation of his immediate predecessor at the college, nor on the recommendation of the then acting president of the University of Toronto. Because the president of the university declined to make the recommendation for his appointment, the University of Toronto board of governors were unable to approve the appointment. It was for these reasons that the government of the day, after legal consultations, decided to make the appointment by an order-in-council and that was done. It is my understanding that the present dean who, if the University of Toronto were in charge of the college, would be retired this year because of age, has been granted a year's extension by the present hon. Minister.

It is also a matter of public record that the estimates of the hon. Minister of Education for the current fiscal year contain provisions for $1,175,000 for the Ontario College of Education.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer by the hon. Minister yesterday, I thought I should bring these matters to the attention of this House so that the operative relationship of the Ontario College of Education and this government might be brought more effectively into focus.

Mr. Speaker, I shall add that I was glad the hon. Minister reassured this House about that aspect of educational policy I raised yesterday concerning a peculiarly nauseating way of practising economy.

I might also call to the attention of this House a paragraph from the Windsor Star of February 20 under the heading "Now" by Mr. Jim Cornett:

The proposal by provincial educators that birth control is the answer to the increasing cost of public education is a pip, a real lulu.

He goes on to refer to the statement and he finishes with this sentence:

It is frightening to think that we have men in responsible positions coming out with such nonsense.

I think I shall again repeat that statement:

It is frightening to think that we have men in responsible positions—and, I might add, those men that are engaged in the training of young men and women to go out to our schools to teach our children, —coming out with such nonsense.

I extend my felicitations to the new hon. Prime Minister of Ontario who now wears the mantle of leadership of the government. I had heard long before the recent PC convention that our dear John in Ottawa had given the nod of approval to big John here—and like big John of the ballad he is wide of shoulder and slim of hip—and that the result was a foregone conclusion.

Be that as it may, I wish you well, hon. leader of the government, in your dual duties of Prime Minister and also Minister of Education. Your predecessor in office found the duties of the premiership quite onerous and there is an old Irish saying that says, "Be careful of the lazy man's load".

Since you are chained to your seat daily in this House as the leader of the government, it seems to me that the important Department of Education will suffer, but possibly you are of the opinion that there is no one in the House now who can handle one job as well as you can handle both portfolios.

My acquaintance with the former leader of the government, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), was somewhat short-lived, but it was long enough to know that he was a master of timing. I wish him well in his present role and recall, for his attention, the old saying that "Old soldiers never die."

My congratulations to the new hon. members of the inner circle whose loyalty to their new leader has been recognized and I must say I offer my condolences to those others who failed to receive promotion. References have already been made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) to the game of musical chairs and so I shall not labour that point here.

I am pleased to see that the new hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope)—I believe he is down the line now, I do not see him here—is once more a northerner and a member for a riding in which a number of mines are located. I think some of the atmosphere of the mining camp has had an exhilarating effect on him.

Certainly I hope he does not make the mistake of a former hon. Minister of Mines in this government—who later was hon. Provincial Treasurer and later hon. Prime Minister of Ontario—who was speaking to a convention of mining prospectors and chuckled about his ignorance of mining.

Those who were his former charges, the present hon. Minister's former charges, I am sure will miss his joviality. But I warn him it will take more than joviality and the glad hand to run that very important department so vital to the life blood of this province and, in particular, northern Ontario. I wish him well.

It is apropos, I think, when I mention mining, that I call attention to the fact that the town of Timmins, that capital of the Porcupine gold camp, is celebrating this year its golden jubilee. For the benefit of those from the southern climes, they have a celebration in February and then those who do not like the rigorous climate of northern Ontario can come up in the summer time. It is readily accessible by air, rail and by Trans-Canada Highway No. 11. I hesitate to say Trans-Canada Highway because I may offend those where the highway runs in southern Ontario.

Hon. members will find the Porcupine camp a most friendly area. There are all kinds of diversities there including bear hunting. Mayor DelVillano will assist hon. members in this particular feature.

Hon. members of this House will recall that during the last session when the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Hall), was extolling the virtues of the government during the debate on the budget—I am sure he must have had his tongue in cheek—he blandly stated that patronage had been abolished in 1943 when this present government came to power.

I commend to the hon. members of this House and particularly to the Chief Commissioner of the Liquor Control Board (Mr. Grossman) the practice of the hon.

Minister from the historic riding of Kingston (Mr. Nickle) who delegates to the Canadian Legion in his community the responsibility for selecting personnel for temporary employment at the retail outlet stores of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario. The same practice I know is pursued by my very good friend and wartime comrade, the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. A. Johnston).

The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) has often stated in this House and outside this House that there is a veterans preference in the public service of Ontario. After listening for many years to complaints at veterans' gatherings, I say the only thing strong about it is the odour. It is something that is more honoured in the breach than the observance.

It was my understanding, too, that the government in its winter works programme has directed that priority should be given to employable persons who were either on municipal relief or were drawing unemployment insurance benefits. I am sure in the ridings in which the hon. members of the government party are running scared—and that riding certainly is Nipissing—such is not the case. In fact, the Progressive Conservative committees in the riding are ignoring municipal authorities and like small-time dictators are directing the government agencies as to who should be employed. It is just another example of the arrogance of the minions of this party.

I shall enlarge on this later, particularly during the estimates under which the Liquor Control Board comes. I know before the session concluded in December I had asked a question of the commissioner (Mr. Grossman). I finally got an answer after four days. He could have given me the answer off the cuff, because his answer was entirely different from what I find in the area about which I inquired.

Now reference has been made by other speakers in this debate to the recent campaign for the Progressive Conservative leadership, which culminated as expected in the elevation of the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) as leader of the Progressive-Conservative party and later the seat of honour as the hon. Prime Minister of this province.

Several aspects of this campaign were rather interesting, such as the general tone which seemed to me not a battle between rivals of political parties, rather than a struggle between brothers for seniority in the family household.

Also worthy of slight thought was the left-handed tributes to their former leader, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), whom they seemed to damn with faint praise. All but one had been members of the Cabinet for some time and one a government stalwart for several decades. One would think that they would have had some voice in government policy in the expansion and development of this province, particularly in the development of what is so fondly called the treasure house of this province, the great area known to all hon. members as northern Ontario.

As they travelled the northland and gave their pitches to their prospective delegates, they sang the same refrain that they had been humming ever since I came to that wonderful region.

I listened to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) in his visit to the north. "I know the north, its people, its vernacular. I can take the abuse of the north better than any other candidate," he said. No wonder he was repudiated by the delegates just as he has been repudiated twice in this House during the present session and more recently—in fact, twice—by the Toronto Globe and Mail, which certainly is not a paper that supports my party. Recently, I believe in this morning's paper, I read something—I should say it was not commendation, it was castigation. I commend to the hon. leader of the government the final paragraph in that editorial.

Abuse—that is his word for our earnest pleas for some return for the boundless wealth that has flowed down from the Laurentian hills to southern Ontario.

Again this member of the team that sat on the left of his former leader is quoted:

If I were Premier I would want a close chain of command or closer liaisons with the problems of the north.

Apparently it is a slap at his old captain.

Northern ridings have great potentials in agriculture, lumber, minerals, hydro power. These natural resources would be developed quickly or slowly depending on leadership.

The presumption is that the former hon. Prime Minister did not give that dynamic leadership that the hon. Attorney-General would give. To him it would be full-speed-ahead up north, to the tune of Cannonball—hon. members know, of TV fame—but also, alas and alack, the poor north will never have that dynamic leadership that the hon. Attorney-General offered.

The hon. Attorney-General was a favourite son —

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me one moment? I would point out that I am not calling the hon. member to order.

If the House will permit me it is my pleasure at this time to introduce to hon. members of this House a distinguished guest from across the seas. I do it at this time because our distinguished guest has very limited time. It is always an honour to welcome representatives of a member nation of our Commonwealth. On the first day of October, 1960, the Federation of Nigeria became an independent, self-governing nation. Upon achieving this independence, the federation decided of its own free will to remain a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations.

Our province has a close and rather intimate association with Nigeria, through the fact that an increasing number of young people from the federation have chosen to pursue advanced studies in our educational institutions.

It is an honour and privilege to present to this House Senator, the Honourable, Chief, Doctor Majekodunmi, Master of Arts, Doctor of Medicine, Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Dublin, Ireland, Minister of Health for the Federation of Nigeria.

Sir, on behalf of the hon. members of this House and the people of Ontario, may I extend to you the hand of brotherhood and wish that you would take to your hon. Prime Minister and the hon. members of your House our greetings and best wishes.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I am sure all within this honourable House will say that was a very pleasant interlude.

Returning to my speech, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) was a favourite son of the Toronto Telegram. To the "Tely" he was that rare mixture in political life—a man who knows how to get things done without rocking the boat. Unfortunately for him, the boat has been rocked by other hands and, to borrow from the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), he is tottering on the bridge. The Toronto Telegram dubbed him as a humble man.

In his fruitful quest, the hon. Attorney-General visited Peterborough, where he brushed off the Liberal opposition as inconsequential. In effect, he said there: "Elect me as your leader and I shall conduct such a dynamic campaign throughout this province that I will wipe the platter clean of the Opposition."

An hon. member: How about the by-election?

Mr. Troy: Now, Mr. Speaker, is this humility? Braggadocio it is in my book. Probably that would be the only kind of a house the hon. Attorney-General might govern. The hon. Attorney-General visited Nipissing on its Remembrance Day a year ago; and there this humble man gathered with local party stalwarts and they had quite a ball. They characterized the occasion with gay railery; and showing his knowledge of the classics the hon. Minister referred to the Trojan horse, and boasted at the next election he and his party would storm the walls of Troy.

An hon. member: How about that?

Mr. Troy: Little did the hon. Attorney-General realize that a year later the wily Ulysses would be gone; he who had guided the paths of the Conservatives for 12 years would be no longer there.

Up in the Lakehead country the hon. Attorney-General played his cards pretty close to his vest; although he said he knew the north he certainly was no northern plunger. He said: "Give me the leadership, give me four seats in the next election"—what a pipe dream—"and I will give you another Cabinet post."

The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay)—that was the title he carried in the campaign, and now he is a triune figure in the government dynasty—with one breath found the leadership of the former hon. Prime Minister of inestimable value and in the next gasp warned that the Conservatives will elect few members in northern Ontario ridings unless the party adopted a dynamic programme of northern development.

He had said, I understand, in Kingston: "In every three or four years we go up north and talk about development—we go up there and we do not see them until four years later." He could not have made a more devastating comment about his party than I could myself. I am sure if Diogenes entered this House he would go straight with his lantern to the seat of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) because from him came the bold truth. His party and this government have failed dismally in their stewardship.

I ask the hon. members of this House to reflect here that the hon. Minister has been a member of the Cabinet for a number of years; he has been a member of the government even longer; and this government has been in power for 18 years that I have lived up in northern Ontario. What use did he make of his dynamic qualities then, as a member of the Cabinet, as member of the government? In his leader's house, was it the family dictum that young men must be seen but not heard?

The hon. Minister now at the right hand of the new leader bemoaned pettishly that his opponents—and I quote his own words as recorded—some I may call my colleagues—were not prepared to discuss the needs of such a programme. This admission by the Cabinet Minister indicates that his colleagues were not prepared to discuss it. The north, I assure this House, will retaliate in kind.

He also prophesied that the image of Leslie Frost would wane and he warned, as I declare now, northern Ontario will not buy the same bill of goods again. Again I reiterate, what an admission from a member of the government that has been in power for the past 18 years.

Now I prophesy, if given the opportunity, the people of this province will awaken from their lethargy, and the prediction of the hon. Minister will be a reality not only in northern Ontario but in the whole province.

They will not buy this bill of goods again; and the death-bed repentance is too late. We have seen the results in three of the by-elections—two members are sitting here now in my party, one is to come—and certainly in a riding which is a very key riding, the riding of Renfrew South, of which the former member had been a Minister of this government.

The hon. Minister, in his campaign in northern Ontario, promised a special Cabinet to expand the development of Ontario's northland and set up and achieve certain goals in northern Ontario development. Briefs and presentations would be solicited and meetings would be held to find views and aspirations of the north.

For many years in this House there stood a true son of the north—a man who served his country well in war, who bore to his grave the scars of that service and who later served his people and this province with equal distinction. Who better than he presented to this House the hopes and the dreams of northern Ontario—which he traversed time and again from the Quebec border through to Manitoba by sea, by land and in the air and also on Shank's mare? That was the late member for Kenora (Mr. Wren); and did you listen to him? No; except, I understand in the recent by-election where there were all kinds of promises of what was going to be done—things the late Albert Wren had been pleading for for years.

I ask the hon. Prime Minister and the other hon. Ministers to pore through their Hansard, to read and re-read the speeches of the late Albert Wren. They would not listen to his voice; at least they should now take heed to his call from the grave.

A further indication that this government is falling apart at the seams and that jealousy is raising its ugly head may be gleaned from the report and caustic comment at Sarnia of the hon. Minister who was the campaign manager for the then and still hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan). With one fell swoop the former hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) cut the opponents of his boy down to size. "They have not a clue about many of the matters that concern the operations of the Ontario government," was his cryptic summation of the calibre of the six other candidates. Who should know any better than he? Because he was a member of that council.

The most bitter critic of this government could only have emulated that vitriolic statement. What an admission by a member of the executive council of the province of Ontario! However, I do not think the hon. Provincial Treasurer could know too much about the north because in the regional office—I brought this out before the sales tax, the retail sales tax—in northern Ontario, and an area in which is included all kinds of French-Canadian merchants—in some places the majority of people are French Canadian—in the whole office there is not one who can speak the French language. That does not show he knows too much about northern Ontario.

Cabinet Ministers, the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) observed in one speech, should get away from Toronto a great deal more than they do. The people of Ontario will soon see that his objective is reached. In fact, some of them will be in quieter pastures permanently and there they will have carte blanche to do what they will.

Changes would be rung if he were leader, warned the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer).

An hon. member: Have you ever read—

Mr. Troy: I must say I have read it over several times, but then I was so amazed at the things, that I stumbled over it again.

"Government would be restored, I say again, to the elected representatives of the people," said the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. Too many boards and commissions running things now in his opinion. With that statement I heartily agree.

Incidentally, at the time he made this statement the hon. member was a member of one of the commissions himself, and I do not know, but I presume he still is. As far as I know the axe has not fallen.

"Let us give the government back to the people." Then he threw almost I might say a right-cross to the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Roberts): "Our system of education is badly in need of overhaul."

And to the delight of us in the gallery as he came out swinging, roundhouse with both fists, one at his former leader, the other at the hon. Provincial Treasurer:

"The sales tax is a nuisance tax." Then again, as we have said: "Too much arbitrary direction from the top. The further this way this tendency leads us the more expensive and inefficient this system gets."

No one on this side of the House could make a more caustic comment about the government. He truly echoed the continuing criticisms of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition.

A large number of Conservatives apparently agreed with him, as the balloting at their convention revealed. I listened to those remarks of his to a northern audience and I could not say anything better. "The north has not been getting a square deal. A great deal of the wealth of southern Ontario comes from the north. Money from natural resources and local industry is funneled southward whereas I should like to see", said the hon. member, "the entire production process and its profits remain in the north."

He must have been reading our mail, too, because he said he would restore The Department of Northern Development. The hon. members of this House will know that we on this side of the House have been clamouring for a ministry of northern affairs.

A Conservative supporter is supposed to have characterized the new leader as being "a touch of Frost". Others apparently hope that he is a whole lot more than that, because in the last election the PC's lost 13 seats and then some in the by-elections. At that time he did not know of the events to come.

According to those who followed the campaign the hon. Minister of Education promised no major policy changes, but one feature writer said he planned a careful and honest study of public and separate schools. I agree with him that a study of the problems that affect these two systems is overdue.

Maintenance of party solidarity was to be another objective, and from the rumblings and tremors that one hears both in and out of this honourable House, the new leader is going to have a job on his hands as he performs his dual task.

The jovial qualities of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope), as I mentioned before, are going to be missed by his former charges.

The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) also toured northern Ontario and his slim support by the delegates was a surprise to many observers, including myself, because his appeal was not so local, his aim was to develop the province in its entirety. With that aim I cannot disagree, but unfortunately we in the north do not have our rightful place in that broad picture. We in northern Ontario basked not only in autumn sunshine last autumn, but we were also in the glow of the political limelight. As the editor of the North Bay Daily Nugget wrote in one of his columns:

Never was a northland wooed so ardently but we ask like the shy maiden, "What are your intentions, John?"

I want now to refer particularly to some of the problems of northern Ontario. I find that very few people in the southern part of the province know much about the vast area that we call northern Ontario. I suppose there are very few in this House that realize the first commercial establishment in the part of Canada which we now know as Ontario was set up on the banks of Lake Nipissing by Jean Nicolet who was one of the team of Champlain. Very few know that the Trans-Canada route for many decades passed through the heart of my riding.

Northern Ontario is more than four times the size of southern Ontario in area, but it has only one resident for every eight in the southern part of the province. The population is thin on the ground and the distances are very great. These facts of small population, immense areas, great distances between communities, create many of our problems in the north.

I think of the handicaps of the farmers: the growing season is short, the local markets for the sale of produce are small. High transportation costs in bringing in fertilizer, machinery, equipment and other supplies and in shipping out our products have a stifling effect on this industry. Farming is a high cost industry in northern Ontario and as a result many of the farmers are leaving the land.

But this need not be so. Our agricultural land is most suitable for the production of forage and vegetable crops. Northern Ontario potatoes rank with the best in the country and have won many awards at national fairs. The provincial government could do a whole lot more than they are doing now and than they have done in the past to help our northern Ontario farmers.

I read here a recommendation from the farmers' organization in northeastern Ontario. It points out that due to the high cost of transportation of chemical fertilizers to northern Ontario and the ever-increasing need of improving soil fertility, a policy similar to the lime transportation policy on lime purchases from southern Ontario would be beneficial. This amounts to 75 per cent of the cost of freight or truck charges. More on that in the estimates of The Department of Agriculture.

As the hon. Minister of Economics and other things (Mr. Macaulay) has said, the high-priced help—and I refer to his colleagues in the Cabinet—go up north every four years or so, make a lot of promises and then return south, as somebody has said, to clip coupons. Only when the stock market fails do they think of our northland—also at certain times in elections.

Help could be made available and will be made available by my party, when we take over the reins of government, in the form of long-term loans through farm co-operatives. This would enable them to build and operate storage facilities so that they could give assistance to farmers and farm co-operatives in the development of processing of our farm products and also in the development of facilities such as abattoirs, canneries and so forth. Thus it would be possible for our farmers in northern Ontario to market their crops at a price that would compete with operations in other parts of Ontario.

We in northern Ontario want to preserve the farm as an economic unit that can and will sustain the farmer and his family and at the same time provide the people of this province with farm products at reasonable prices.

Moreover, government assistance, as I pointed out, in freight rates would go a long way towards helping our farmers and also all other industries in northern Ontario. With sound development and proper planning this area could be, to coin a phrase as used by the then hon. Minister of Commerce and Development, the brightest star on the world's horizon.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) said, northern Ontario is a treasure house of natural resources. Our forests and mines produce one dollar out of every 11 of the dollars that are earned annually from all activities in Ontario. Our minerals and our forest products have to compete in the markets of the world. High freight rates, high production costs, which are likely to rise with the integration of the northern Ontario properties with southern Hydro, reduce the abilities of these industries to compete. We on this side of the House recognize the needs of our forest and our mining industries now increasingly challenged by foreign competitors. We realize the necessity of keeping our industry in northern Ontario competitive, profitable and expanding so that present jobs will be secured and new ones created. Only through enlightened policies of forest management, exploration for minerals, taxation of our natural resources—including the logging tax—only, I repeat, by enlightened policies will our basic industries of northern Ontario have the long-term security, the flexibility and strength they need to meet the newest challenges hurled at this province as a trading province.

This government has been in office more than 18 years and it has been unable to provide that security.

I could touch on the highways of the north, I will not expand more on it until later, but after all the years—in 1941, I think it was, the ribbon was cut at the Sturgeon River near Geraldton—still Highway 11 has not yet been completed from Atikokan to Fort Francis and it is 90 miles in length there. There is a causeway completed but I do not know when the road is going to be completed. Then they say the Trans-Canada Highway, No. 17, will be completed in 1963. I understand, though I have not been over the road recently, that it is a long way from Trans-Canada Highway standards.

We certainly do need roads to our resources, to our forest resources. We need access roads; we need roads that run north and south. I do not know why there is still the opposition, apparently on the other side, for not connecting the great metropolis of Sudbury with the town of Timmins. We have the connection between Timmins and Chapleau and then on to Highway 17, but we need these north and south highways.

One of our great industries, one of our greatest resources in northern Ontario, is the tourist industry, but we do need access roads to get at other areas from which the people of the north will develop their economy.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, the party of which I am a member has long been identified as a party in favour of immigration, in favour of development, in favour of realistic freight rates. It was the party that did those things and it is the party that will make growth and expansion a reality. We did it once, we will do so again.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the Throne debate, I would like to state first that I welcome heartily the new hon. members to this House.

The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), who is a son of a great father that I knew in this House for many years and that I knew at the time he was Premier of this province. A very fine gentleman who made a great contribution to the political life of Ontario and the agricultural field. I congratulate his son and welcome him to this House.

Also the new hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) who will be a northern colleague and who will add, I know, his voice and knowledge of the north to help develop that great part of the province. I congratulate him and welcome him as well.

And to our new hon. member for Toronto Beaches (Mr. Harris), a very fine young man who fought a great fight in the last election. I congratulate and welcome him to our ranks in this House, and to the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly), another fine young gentleman whom we wish to congratulate and welcome as an hon. member of this House.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): How many votes did he get?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, of course, he got a little more than the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) did, I think, the first time he was elected.

Now, I want to say that I wish to congratulate and thank the Speaker, for his handling of the affairs of this House. I think we should understand, gentlemen, that the Speaker's position is a very difficult one to handle. I think we should consider at all times that courtesy and consideration of his rulings and his position is a necessity here and I think we should try, we older members of this House, to set an example to the new younger hon. members who have come to our ranks, to show them that this is not any kind of a bull ring but the top debating legislative assembly in this province.

I want to congratulate the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) on a very fine talk. From some of the things he said and after a great many years in the north, I can hardly recognize the place he depicted in his remarks about these broken-down roads and other things. I would tell any strangers to that part of Ontario if they wish to take a car from Toronto and go either Highway 17 or Highway 11 they can go clean across their province on almost all pavement of which everybody in our end of the province is proud.

There is the new hon. member from Kenora (Mr. Gibson), he will tell hon. members that both ways from his town of Dryden there is beautiful pavement. I will tell him in a little while how many improvements he has had in his own town during the regime of the Conservative government.

I have also heard the Opposition talk about "Why do you not do this, why do you not do that?" Well, my answer to that is this: we people of Ontario believe in orderly progress and steady growth, we wish to build soundly, but to maintain a constant development in our material and social aspects. We wish to advance with vision and foresight. Now I think hon. members will agree with that.

Now I am coming to the part where hon. members say "Why do you not do this? Why do you not do that?" On the other hand, there is no limit to things we would like the government of our province to do for us. That is why we are here and Opposition hon. members are over there. Those in power have to consider how all social advantages have to be paid for, indeed, have to be paid for out of the pockets of our people. Sometimes when I am listening to some hon. members opposite talk, I often wonder if they ever think of that. If they really believe what they say, thank goodness they are not in power in the province.

Here is something; it is the usual cry of politicians out of power—and mark that "out of power," Mr. Speaker—that they will, if elected, reduce taxes and at the same time step up social services and other expensive programmes. I think the public of our province, Mr. Speaker, is too astute to be fooled by such appeals as we hear from the Opposition. It will not work. I would just say this—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I would point out that the hon. Minister does not need any assistance with his speech.

An hon. member: Well, I do not know about that!

Mr. Speaker: I know it is appreciated by all hon. members of this House when they are speaking, not to be interrupted too much. Up to this point I have assured and seen to it that every hon. member of this House has had a good, fair hearing and I intend to continue along that line.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

I think the public of our province is too astute to be fooled by such appeals, as I mentioned, and they will not work. That policy will not work in your own business, it will not work at your town, township, village or at city level.

Many of you men who have been in councils—for instance the former mayor of Windsor (Mr. Reaume) knows what he was like when he was in the mayor's chair—he did not go along with every new improvement and try to raise his taxes. He has changed his tune since he has been in here; he knows the province of Ontario has no miraculous way of obtaining money except from the people of this province.

This means that the level of provincial expenditures for the people is limited to what the people of Ontario can afford to pay. It often makes me think, Mr. Speaker—when they are talking and demanding about giving the people everything they ask for—about the mouse who got down in the basement of the brewery one night and he was running around the edge of this big barrel full of whiskey and he fell in. He started to sip it and after a while he got a little bit tipsy and he started to drown and he started to yell: "Save me, save me, I am drowning."

The hon. leader of the Opposition will love this story, because he heard it in Renfrew.

And the cat heard him and came along and said, "What is the matter?" He said, "I am drowning, save me, save me." The cat said, "All right, I will provided you are here at 6 o'clock tomorrow night to give me my supper!"

"Anything you say, anything you say but save me." So the cat reached down and pulled him out of the barrel and the mouse staggered away to his hole, and the next night at 6 o'clock the cat was down there for his supper, and no mouse.

Finally he looked around and he saw this little nose sticking out of a hole and he said, "You are a nice one to keep your word, Mr. Mouse, I thought you said last night if I saved you, you would be here to serve me with my supper tonight."

"Oh, yes," the mouse replied, "but last night I was drunk, I did not know what I was talking about." That would be the way our Opposition would handle what they are saying today, if they were ever elected.

I think that some of the hon. members do not know what they are talking about very often and that is why they ask things that are impossible to give.

To continue, Mr. Speaker, I would say that what we need in this province is a lot of conservation coupled with utilization and those two things must go along together. This is a province with a wealth of natural resources and we must, and we do most assiduously, develop to the betterment of our people all these natural resources. And where necessary we must conserve and replenish for our children and our children's children. Now that is what we should be doing. The great—

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): The hon. Minister made a better speech for the leadership.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, it is very kind of the hon. member to say so; I hope he will enjoy this one.

I think that we have made great strides in this government in the field of education of which our hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is the head. We all believe that the wealth of a country is dependent on the skill and ability of its people and we can no longer afford to waste even a small percentage, Mr. Speaker, of this great natural resource, which is our younger generation.

We should, in stages, extend the scope of educational opportunities to the highest levels, so that we, as a province, are assured of the most effective use of our industrial power by our brain power. Any money invested in this, Mr. Speaker, will pay ample dividends. That is why I was so proud to hear our hon. Prime Minister announce yesterday that the Lakehead University now had full degree-granting privileges. This is a great boon to the whole of northwestern Ontario, and I know that our boys and girls will be greatly pleased.

Even the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) will agree that before they had to go either to Winnipeg, down to the States or to Toronto; to one of the other great universities. Now we have that facility, it is a great step forward; again a step put into effect by this government over here. Equal opportunity for all, that is our policy.

Welfare; hon. members all know what this government has done about welfare, Mr. Speaker. In welfare I feel we need the positive rehabilitation approach rather than passive charity. I think our people want that. No one among us wants to see suffering and distress, but equally we hate to see unworthy or illegal draining of our welfare facilities. We should, I believe, give greater consideration to helping people to help themselves; rehabilitating them to useful respected positions in society.

I remember an old couplet I heard in years gone by, that said: "the heaviest load a man or woman can carry down the afternoon pathway of life is an empty purse." How true that is, gentlemen. We are, today, looking after our aged people. We are looking after those that are less fortunate; we are looking after our unemployed.

I said last year, and it still holds good, that as far as this government is concerned, no one in this province will suffer. And that is true and can be proven. People are not suffering today, or if they are, it is because they have not been brought to our attention. That policy will continue, Mr. Speaker, as everyone on our side of the House knows.

The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) spoke about roads, highways. This province has built the finest road system anywhere in the world, and it needs to. With such widespread natural resources, good transportation is a necessity, we agree. We have fine roads; we must keep them that way, moving with the times and carefully expanding as circumstances dictate.

Today we are putting in roads up in the area of the hon. member for Kenora that are costing millions of dollars. He knows about them—

Mr. R. W. Gibson (Kenora): Two decades to do it, too. It started 15 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Did it, did it? Hon. members will hear what has been spent and built-up over 15 years, I will give them an outline a little later on in this talk.

Then in Lands and Forests, Mr. Speaker, another great facet of this government—the hon. Minister (Mr. Spooner) is here now. I know of no province with a finer record than ours with regard to The Department of Lands and Forests, and I know of no section of our province in which wise conservation is such a sure investment. This is our heritage, we must ensure that no prodigal sons are allowed to squander it now or in the future.

We have heard our new hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Macaulay) bringing in some of his new proposals. He is a young man for whom I have great admiration; who will make a place for himself in the future of this province, and who before very long will bring in projects that will make this province hum as it never did before. Mark that and put it down in your book, you hon. members in the Opposition.

Judicial planning of the use of our natural resources in this modern age implies many considerations. Inevitably we will always have the economic ebb and flow, and, of course, instability, this always causes more distress than blessings. But, Mr. Speaker, we must encourage the secondary industries as the rock of stability on which our communities of primary industries can build. We must do this by financial concessions in development areas, assuring such communities that they can depend on the province in their early periods of development and we are giving very serious thought to that facet.

Now the section of our province that the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) spoke about—where the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) and myself are from, namely, northwestern Ontario—is blessed with nature's bountiful gifts, in the way of timber, water and minerals. It is a supreme example of the benefits that can be ours if we plan wisely.

This is indeed a magnificent part of our province, Mr. Speaker, which must inevitably grow in economic importance. Effective utilization and conservation is the way to its future success. We must ensure that its mineral resources are made available by systematic operation; we must ensure that its land remains fertile and its timber resources are not squandered. It is a symbol of our province; it is one key to our future prosperity.

Speaking about the development in that area, Mr. Speaker—I have heard so much about unemployment, about a depressed economy and things of this kind, that it is amazing to me how our Opposition and the Opposition in other parts of this country seem to think they can fool the people by telling them untruths, and I will say untruths.

For instance, I will just give you a few barometers recently of how our economy is getting on. Disciples of the Opposition parties, opposed to everything constructive that this government has done, continue to cry doom. Let us see how well their worries are substantiated. You know, at times, Mr. Speaker, they sound like a group of advance agents for a famine. I cannot describe it in any other way but just advance agents for a famine.

I listened to the federal Legislature down in Ottawa, and it amazes me as to how they continually can become so gloomy. And the N.D.P.s—now they have reason for a bit of gloom themselves; they have somebody to "Argue" with. Somebody said to me the other day: "I noticed the Opposition members being handed little papers from the back of their seats to ask questions and so on"; and the thought occurred to me that they had their Doctor Upper but we have our Wally Downer, so I think that we are on an equal plane with them in refuting anything that they may bring forward. So just tell that to Doctor Upper, boys, when he brings in the next note.

The Prudential Insurance Company of America, one of the world's greatest financial institutions, summed up the prospects for 1962—you can read it for yourself if you like in the Bay Street Journal—and it says this:

Canada's gross national product will show the biggest rise in six years during 1962 . . . gross national product will show an increase of 7.3 per cent, bringing the GNP to a new high of $39.4 billion.

An inventory change from liquidation to accumulation, of $470 million.

An increase of $580 million, or eight per cent, in government spending.

An increase of $1.3 billion, or 5.3 per cent in consumer spending.

A 5 per cent increase in exports with imports held to a 2 per cent increase.

Long term growth will depend upon the success of efforts to improve trade balance, and promote secondary manufacturing.

That is one. You have read the policies that we are enunciating here and getting going, and the policies in Ottawa that are being put in high gear, and what I am trying to do, Mr. Speaker, is to get all the other Canadians in this legislative chamber to come along with both our new provincial and federal programmes.

The Financial Post of February 3 pointed to these signs of the times:

Canadian totals. Increase of 1.2 per cent in housing starts in fourth quarter of 1961 over same period in 1960. Retail sales increased 3.8 per cent in November over previous month. Iron ore shipments in November, 1961, up 22 per cent from November, 1960, to 1,178,500 tons. Iron ore exports up 18 per cent. Shipments to Canadian steel mills up 39 per cent. Reversed trend of first eight months of the year as steel mills renewed activity.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, this government and the government at Ottawa are seriously concerned when unemployment reaches serious proportions. But these governments, unlike their Opposition, do more than talk about it. The concern is still present but D.B.S. figures show very definitely that the situation is improving; and I might say that last night the leader of the Liberal party agreed that the trend had been reversed and was now improving, I am glad to say.

In this December, when seasonal unemployment is near its worst, the temporary increase was the smallest in any year since 1955—115,000 fewer jobless than there were the previous year at the same time. For the last 5 months of 1961 the number of unemployed was less than in the same period of 1960.

Mr. Gibson: What does that prove?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That conditions generally are becoming better. Now, I know the hon. member would not know anything about this up in Kenora because he has got full employment there; he never has anything to worry about. He is from the far west part. It is a very nice place, I agree.

Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): He is giving figures about Windsor now.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Windsor—well Windsor is not so bad.

Activity in the construction trade is always considered a sure barometer of economic health, I think you will agree. We can therefore take great encouragement from the fact, as recorded in the Financial Post of February 10, that the value of contracts awarded in January was 19.5 per cent higher than for the corresponding months of 1961. The total for all of Canada was $230,213,000 an increase of $37.6 million over January, 1961. In Ontario last month's total was $113.8 million, an increase of $17.8 million over the previous January. Metropolitan Toronto's—we will get down to the hon. member sitting right opposite me there with studious posture, to his great city—Metropolitan Toronto's share of the contracts of last month was $44.4 million, an immense gain of 124.2 per cent over January, 1961. And they cried blues!

Mr. Speaker, to indicate that this increase for last month was not just a short-term improvement, let me point to the figures for all of 1961 as opposed to the total for 1960.

The year's increase in the value of construction permits was $167,187,000 to a grand total of $3,220,937,300. The Metropolitan Toronto area alone accounted for $420.8 million, an increase of 8.6 per cent over the 1960 total. Now, these are figures that can be proven. I will give them to the Opposition if they wish, the papers they came out of and the facts behind them, yet they cry doom and gloom, unemployment, we are terrible, and so on. Of course, the hon. members have got to try to get elected; I will admit it, I do not blame them.

Mr. Speaker, lest there be any doubt that my own part of this province—and I would like the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson), the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Noden) to listen—lest there be any doubts that my own part of this province is moving ahead at a rapid rate, let me point out that the advances there in the last year have been over a broad front and they embrace great expansion of the region's industrial output.

Extension of grain storage and shipping facilities, the addition of new power generation and natural gas installation, new forest products and mining enterprises, new merchandising and distribution outlets, new branch banks and financial offices, expanded educational, hospital and government facilities, new communication and transportation services, highways construction and improvement programme, activities to provide increased accommodation for the mounting surge of tourists—Mr. Speaker, I have lived in Port Arthur since 1919, and I have never seen an increase in any part of Canada like there has been in northwestern Ontario in the last three or four years. I am not talking as a boy who has been there for a very few years. I have been there before these boys were born and saw what it was like at that time.

I was under the Liberal regime in the thirties when there were soup kitchens in the city of Port Arthur, when there were roads that you could not drive over. The Liberals stopped construction on Highway 17 when they came to power after the Bennett government, they would not do anything on Highway 11. I could go on and speak for hours about the days of poverty and joblessness in that area under the old Liberal regime.

More than $25 million in new construction was begun during 1961, and there is every indication that the pace will continue throughout this year.

Some of the more important individual developments during the past year, and the hon. members across there will recognize them, were: at Dryden, which is the home town of the hon. member for Kenora—Dryden Chemicals Limited, a $4.5 million plant; Port Arthur—Canada Malting Limited, $5 million storage expansion; Bell Telephone, $2.5 million line—Lakehead to Dryden; Fort William—Great Lakes Paper Company, a $3.5 million addition to plant; Port Arthur—Provincial Paper, a $2.5 million addition to their mill; Port Arthur—Brayshaw's Steel, $300,000 plant; Fort William—Canadian Car Limited, expanding services, personnel now over 700; Sapawe—James Mathieu Lumber Limited, $500,000 sawmill and chipping plant, expanded woods staff to 400; Fort William to build a $1 million hotel; Nipigon—Northern Plywoods Limited—

An hon. member: What did the government have to do with it?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: It could never have been done if this government had not been in power. And I am giving just last year's figures, this has been going on for years. If the roads had not been built by this government, if the hon. George Drew when he was Premier had not stopped the export of pulpwood, there would not be a pulp mill in our area. These things were done by a Conservative government, not a Liberal one.

Kenora—Trilake Lumber Limited, new wood treatment plant; B & B Stone—Fort William—to merge Supercrete plant with proposed new $200,000 plant; Sioux Lookout—Forest Products Limited, incorporated by local interests to develop district resources. We built a new road for them and a bridge to do that. Rainy River—Ontario Sphagnum Moss Limited, to develop peat moss resources—a local enterprise which my good friend from there (Mr. Noden) has so much to do with; Pickle Lake—Fish Processing Plant, capacity 1 million pounds per year; Motorways Freight Terminal at Port Arthur; Trans-Air Limited, inaugurating passenger service—Winnipeg to Fort Frances; Steep Rock—Hugh Roberts open pit being developed, to ship in 1962; Nickel Mining and Smelting, up in my friend's area—Wurner Lake—$35 million development to produce nickel in 1926; a $1.5 million road to be built which was decided about two months ago and now the hon. member says, "Where is the road?"

If it had been under a Liberal regime, it would not even have been decided upon. We have spent $50 million in the Kenora riding in the last 10 years.

An hon. member: What do we get for it?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Do not talk foolishness.

Consolidated Mosher—Geraldton—began production January, 1962: CanFer has announced production for 1963, rate 1 million tons annually; Red Lake—six gold mines expanded operations in 1961; Lindsay Explorations Limited, carrying exploration and development work—near Sapawe; Anaconda—exploration and development of big iron ore body. Well, I have become so enthused to see what this government has done that I cannot understand how any of the hon. members have the heart to criticize.

Now just let me tell you something about highways, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Highways—

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): What about Elliot Lake?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, unfortunately we have nothing to do with Elliot Lake. All we do is look after the people. We cannot supply the market, but we are supplying a market—do not write Elliot Lake off. As Minister of Mines I am telling hon. members not to write Elliot Lake off. Uranium will be of value again, perhaps before they think.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): In spite of Robert Winters.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Now, The Department of Highways—planned or under construction. Somebody mentioned—I think it was the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy)—the Rainy Lake causeway. We are going to try to get it called the Bill Noden causeway. A project of greater value than $5 million, across a tremendous lake, and we are going to take hon. members up there this summer to see it. The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) I hope will make the announcement later. But here is a wonderful piece of construction, and the road from the Lakehead through to Winnipeg will be completed in three years, too. Put that in your pipe and smoke it.

And the roads in Geraldton, Longlac, Manitouwadge area, Savant Lake, Picke Lake, highway connection to Trans-Canada; Atikokan—Fort Frances road under construction; the new Pigeon River road and bridge.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Chapple) knows all this, but when he gets on his feet he dodges around and asks about something that has not been done.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): But nobody can drive on them.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: How did the hon. member (Mr. Chapple) get down here?

Mr. Chapple: I flew; what else?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I have been over that road as many times as the hon. member has, and if anybody says, after they have ridden over it, that that road is not in beautiful shape, I will give them $100. Definitely. But I would want somebody in the Opposition to prove it; I would not take their word.

The Department of Health, hospital construction—new or additions at Kenora, Port Arthur and Geraldton. What about the new addition to Kenora's hospital?

The Department of Education—vocational training schools at Kenora, Dryden, Port Arthur and Geraldton; total cost $4 million.

Federal government—school for Indian children at Fort Frances; Seaway Terminal at Lakehead to be completed this year, $8.5 million; a branch of the Industrial Development Bank at Port Arthur.

Mr. Speaker, when I hear the northern members decry this government, honestly I hide my head in shame. They go around crying gloom and doom. And gloom- and doom-mongers in this day and age are doing one thing—they are selling Canada short; they are emissaries against good selling for Canada. And that is what I object to.

I do not object to these hon. members opposite trying to get into power. That is natural in politics. But I do object to them harming the Canadian economy and upsetting people's minds in telling things that are not factual. And I always think, Mr. Speaker, that this party of ours has been a party of optimism and enlargement and constant advance. In other words, let me give you a little—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I remind the hon. members very respectfully once again that the hon. Minister (Mr. Wardrope) requires no help with his speech. We have given good order to all the hon. members so far this session, and I would like that to continue. I can guarantee the hon. members who follow the present speaker that they will receive order, too. I would ask the hon. members to bear that in mind.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I would just like to bring to your attention something that points up what I mean in this gloom and doom thing. Because this party is a party of builders and there is an old poem that goes like this:

I watched them tearing a building down,
A husky gang in a busy town.
With the old heave-ho and a lusty yell,
They swung a beam and a sidewall fell.
I said to the foreman, "Are these men skilled;

The kind you would hire if you wanted to build?"

He gave a laugh and said, "No indeed.
Common labour is all I need.

I can wreck in a day or two

What others have taken a year to do."

I thought to myself as I went my way,
"Which of these roles am I trying to play?"

Am I a builder who works with care,

Living my life by the rule and square,

Living my life to a well made plan,

Trying to help everybody I can?

Or am I a wrecker who walks the town

Content with the labour of tearing down?"

Mr. Speaker, that is something I pass on to the Opposition. We are trying to build Canada, we are trying to build the economy of this province, and constantly we are hindered and decidedly disheartened by the actions of those who are wrecking and pulling down. I would like to tell them that in the future, there is some advice and information that I pass on to them: "Try to get into the field of builders with the rest of us to make Ontario the great place that we are trying to make it for the future of all our citizens, both young and old."

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate you on the marvellous job you are doing. I would like to also congratulate our new hon. Prime Minister and welcome the new hon. members to this House.

I want to deal first with a matter that has caused general annoyance across Ontario and, in many cases, genuine hardship. I refer to the 3 per cent provincial sales tax.

Now, as you know, we of the New Democratic Party opposed this provincial sales tax and we are still of the opinion that it was neither desirable nor necessary to establish this tax. However, this Conservative government, with the help of the hon. Liberal members to my right, saw fit to impose this additional tax burden on the people of Ontario and I suppose we will have to live with it, at least until the next provincial election.

But the Act has in its present regulations many that are unreasonable. For instance, the Canadian Girls In Training, which is a group of young girls attached to various churches, raise money by selling little bags of candy from house to house for 25 cents. According to the regulations, this is taxable. Now I know the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) caused the sales tax to be waived in this particular case and I suppose in other similar cases but surely the regulation should be changed to exempt groups like this and other charitable and service organizations. Another more outstanding case was the sale of poppies by our war veterans.

The most unfair aspect of this provincial sales tax, to my mind, is the method by which it is computed. It is really a compound tax, because when an article is sold the 11 per cent federal sales tax—where it applies—is calculated and added to the selling price. Then the 3 per cent provincial sales tax is calculated on the total arrived at by adding together the selling price and the federal sales tax, so that the provincial sales tax is not 3 per cent but is much nearer to being 4 per cent. It is actually 3.6 per cent.

If this government is not prepared to rescind the provincial sales tax—and I don't suppose it would ever take such a progressive step—I urge that it cause the provincial sales tax to be applied to the actual selling price before the federal sales tax of 11 per cent is added.

While I am on the matter of regulations, I would like to tell you of a case I had in Hamilton in connection with hospital insurance. A resident in my riding applied for admission to the maternity ward of a hospital in Hamilton. When her husband was discussing her admission, he asked for nothing more than the standard ward accommodation to which his insurance entitled him.

Following the delivery of the child, he was alarmed to discover his wife was in a semi-private room. He discussed this with the nurse on duty and she told him they were unable to provide standard ward accommodation for his wife but that he would not be expected to pay the higher rate for the semi-private room. However, in the course of time, he was billed for the difference in the two rates. He protested to the hospital and was told this was correct.

Now, most people would drop the matter here and pay the difference. Fortunately, he brought the case to my attention. I took it up with the hospital and got the same reply. I then followed it up with the commission and they, of course, agreed that it was the responsibility of the hospital to provide accommodation and if it was necessary to provide higher priced accommodation than that requested and covered by the applicant's insurance, the applicant was not required to pay the difference in emergency cases.

Of course this story had a satisfactory ending but I am convinced that the situation has been repeated many times in many communities with the result that the individuals just paid and made no further protest. It seems, therefore, desirable that Ontario hospitals be required to post this information in their admitting rooms and further that they be instructed to draw this matter to the attention of the incoming patient and/or the person accepting financial responsibility for their hospitalization.

Before leaving this point, I do want to make it clear that at no time did I feel the hospital was making a deliberate misrepresentation. It was, I know, an honest misunderstanding on their part. My point is that I do not feel an area of possible misunderstanding should be allowed to exist and that they should be cleared up as they arise, and I want to commend the hospital commission on their prompt and thorough action in this case.

I noticed that the Throne speech pointed out that 95 per cent of Ontario citizens were covered by the hospital insurance plan. I suspect that the remaining 5 per cent is composed of the very people most in need of this coverage. I refer to the old age pensioner, those unemployed people on unemployment insurance benefits, those in receipt of low wages whose employers are not required to deduct for this protection because they employ fewer than 15 people, those in domestic service and so on.

The hon. Minister can, and no doubt will, say that the old age pensioner who is solely dependent upon his pension is not denied hospitalization even if he does not pay his hospital insurance premiums. This is true, but if he is hospitalized under these circumstances he must, except for a small sum for spending money, turn over his pension cheque to the hospital.

What happens to his personal property such as furniture, clothing and so on when he is unable to retain his room or pay for storage I do not know, and I do not suppose this government worries about such things. Nor do they worry about where he goes when he is released from the hospital because obviously he must then look for new living quarters.

The pensioners, like all the others I mentioned, must pay their hospital insurance premiums three months at a time. It would be difficult for them to meet the $2.10 individual monthly premium or the $4.20 monthly family premium. It is impossible in nearly every one of these cases for them to pay a three-month premium at one time. So of course the result is that they drop this protection.

But an even worse fate awaits the man who transfers from a group plan to pay direct. He is billed four, five, six up to nine months in advance. If he leaves the group plan because he has been laid off or pensioned off and therefore his income has been drastically cut, and he then gets a bill from the hospital commission for $25.20 or even more, he just decides there and then that he obviously cannot afford this type of insurance and he lets it lapse.

Hon. members may say that this is short-sighted, but if I had to house, clothe and feed my family on $36 a week, if I am lucky enough to draw unemployment insurance, my decision might have to be the same. Today, hospital insurance is provided on a means test basis for persons whose annual income is $960 or less. This is a totally unrealistic ceiling and should be increased immediately. In addition, the provincial government should pay the premiums for heads of households who become unemployed and are on either unemployment insurance or general welfare assistance.

I have recently had several cases of parents faced with the necessity of placing a retarded child in one of our provincial hospital schools. I have never yet been able to have the child admitted immediately. Although the doctors in charge agree they should be admitted immediately, the best they could do was to give them a high priority rating on the long waiting list because of the lack of accommodation.

Obviously this shortage must prevail across Ontario and I suggest, unless current building will take care, not only of our present needs, but those of the next few years, this situation will become even more serious than it is today. My suggestion is that a number of small building projects be undertaken immediately right across the province, so that parents have an opportunity to visit their children as often as possible. These smaller establishments could be used for children who do not require a high degree of clinical care, and we can reserve the large hospital schools for the more serious cases.

Unless the hon. members here have actually had some first-hand knowledge of the difficulties these parents undergo, it would be hard for them to understand the need. I am sure the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) must be aware of the problems created by a severely retarded child. More often than not the parents are in financial difficulties and are living in crowded quarters which makes an already almost impossible situation even worse.

The city of Hamilton has appealed to the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) to have a technical school for the training and retraining of the unemployed established in Hamilton. However, the hon. Minister has seen fit to by-pass Hamilton and establish one in London. Clearly this is an indication of a lack of planning, and I shall explain why.

In the January 31 issue of the Labour Gazette, there is a very interesting table, classifying the labour market areas across Canada for December. Hamilton is listed as having a moderate labour surplus, while London is shown as being approximately in balance. I might add that only four other places in Canada are fortunate enough to be in this classification and there is no listing under the classification of labour shortage. So London is in the most preferred listing. Yet this is the place where this government saw fit to build a school to train or retrain the unemployed! I might also suggest that that is where the hon. Prime Minister lives.

Hamilton is an industrial city and, as such, is very sensitive to the slightest depression in our economy. The first to be laid off and the last to be returned to work is the unskilled worker. At the end of January, we had 16,306 people seeking employment and this represents roughly 10 per cent of our labour force in Hamilton.

While I admit this would seem to represent an improvement over last winter, I am not convinced that this is a true picture. I say this because the number of people on our relief rolls has increased from 6,531 to 7,181. In money, this represents an increase of $64,000, from $166,000 a year ago, to $230,000 this year, for the month of December. This also represents an increase of $7 on a per capita basis of those on relief.

A considerable portion of this increase is caused by people who have been unemployed so long that they have exhausted unemployment insurance benefits and must now be supported by public welfare. These people could well have benefited from a retraining programme. A new school is desperately needed in Hamilton to accommodate them. Many would need an up-grading in the field of general education as well, and this could certainly be given at least in the subjects related to the trade in which they desire to be trained.

Now I know this is not looked on with any great favour by this government but the need is there. The February 1 issue of the Observer, a publication of the United Church, outlines a pilot project which several Toronto churches are undertaking to provide elementary grade education to the unemployed in their neighbourhood. Some of these people quit school at grades 2 and 4—not because they wanted to but because of family problems.

It is a good thing that someone has accepted a responsibility that really belongs to The Department of Education of this province. I cannot urge too strongly that a school be established immediately in Hamilton and that, in addition to training in various trades, courses be given in general education at both elementary and secondary school levels.

I had an interesting experience the other day. It seems that patronage dies hard in Ontario. Actually I am convinced that it will never die with either a Conservative or Liberal government, since its seems obvious their parties have been built on this system. However, I had a visit from a man seeking employment with the province of Ontario. He came to me because he was told that it was useless to apply unless he had the support of his member.

This was not someone trying to make a fast buck through some well paid contract with the government. He was just a man seeking a job to provide his family with the necessities of life. We can look back at the big scandals of contracts let to political friends, and to people being given inside information on stock deals such as Northern Ontario Natural Gas, and these are bad enough; but it never stops there. It seeps down until even the most minor job becomes the victim of the patronage system.

Now that we have a new hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), I am wondering if we can expect some changes in The Labour Relations Act. I do hope that the peevish attitude which the hon. Minister displayed when he was unable to force the union to agree with the demands of the Royal York Hotel does not indicate that he will look upon labour's requests for changes in the Act with disfavour. I would expect that the minimum he would do, would be to clarify labour's right to strike, particularly in view of the decision recently handed down by Justice McRuer in direct contradiction to that of Magistrate Ellmore who had declared that labour had no right under the Act to strike. This has been taken to the Ontario Supreme Court and they agree with Justice McRuer.

It would take a foolish man indeed to deny working people their only economic weapon in labour disputes—that of their right to collectively withhold their labour. I am sure the hon. Minister is not that foolish.

However, we do have some very foolish representatives in the various levels of government. And I am sure the hon. Liberal members to my right will be interested in the story of one of their party members, who is an alderman representing ward four in Hamilton, and how some less foolish Liberals on city council managed to bail him out.

As some of the hon. members will know, the Operating Engineers Union in Hamilton was forced to strike their members who were employed by the city of Hamilton. While this union was on strike, and during the time that negotiations were also under way with the Hospital Workers Union, whose members are employed in the city-owned hospitals, Liberal Alderman Kostyk was foolish enough to move in city council to have workers in all the city's essential services, as well as transportation, subjected to the process of compulsory arbitration.

Now the senior alderman in ward four is Alderman Powell who is a trade unionist, and it would have seemed proper that he be allowed to speak on this subject on which he is extremely well informed. But Alderman Kostyk had previously given notice of his motion, and some of his more knowing Liberal friends on city council were prepared to bail him out. Liberal friend number one was Mayor Jackson, who quickly recognized Liberal friend number two Alderman John Munro, the Liberal Federal candidate in Hamilton East, who moved a motion that it be sent to the legislative and reception committee. In the course of time the committee sent the motion back to the city council with a recommendation of non-concurrence, and no one voted against the recommendation.

Now I do not really think Mayor Jackson and Alderman Munro are really very well informed on trade union matters, because Alderman Munro especially is like a lot of other Conservative and Liberal politicians who run around claiming a knowledge of the trade union movement on the strength of a union card they gained as school boys working a couple of months during their summer holidays.

However, following the notice of motion, the trade union movement made their thinking very clear because there was not a trade unionist in Hamilton that did not know the type of contract these workers would have to accept once they were deprived of their right to strike. They all knew that this would be the opening wedge to spread compulsory arbitration into other union operations.

In case there is any doubt in the minds of the hon. members that Alderman Kostyk is a Liberal, I point out that he is an executive member of the Hamilton East Liberal Association.

Section 89 of The Labour Relations Act should be deleted because it is being used in negotiations as a threat by the municipalities. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that this is the section that permits a municipality to remove its employees out from under The Labour Relations Act, even though their union is properly certified and has in fact been operating under a signed contract. During the negotiations of the Hospital Workers Union in Hamilton, a member of the hospital board of governors publicly stated through the press that it might be necessary to invoke this section.

This is a type of blackmail designed to force the union to take whatever settlement the city offers. Kitchener used the same threat and there are others.

I am sure it was never the intention of this House that this become a weapon in the hands of the employer but that is how it is being used at this time.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House we will go on tomorrow to second readings—anything on the order paper might be called—and the Throne debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.30 of the clock, p.m.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), a copy of which has been given to him. Since the sport of skiing is experiencing the greatest boom of modern outdoor sports and so many ski tows are now in operation and others are in the stage of construction, would the hon. Minister advise if ski lifts and ski tows are inspected by his department? I specifically ask this question because of a fatal accident that happened in the State of Michigan not too long ago.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to this question posed by the hon. member, I think I should give some specific information as to the operation of ski lifts and ski tows.

At the present time there are in operation in Ontario 175 ski tows and 5 chair lifts, that is, ski lifts. All of them are licensed by The Department of Labour and all of them are inspected at least once a year by the inspector of the elevator inspection branch of the department. Sometimes chair lifts will be operated in summer seasons for sight-seeing. If they are so operated, they will be inspected twice a year.

Drawings and specifications of all new ski lifts and tows must be submitted to The Department of Labour for approval by our engineers before construction and installation may proceed. Upon completion it will be tested and inspected before a licence is issued and it may be put into operation. During the present fiscal year specifications and plans for 35 new tows and lifts were examined and approved.

Mr. Newman: My thanks to the hon. Minister.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions to ask the hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Macaulay). The first question is: Does the government plan to reorganize the Ontario Northland Railway Commission?

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Economics): I would say to the hon. member that the answer to the question which he has asked cannot be given in a yes or no fashion. The department at the moment has undertaken a three-prong survey in relation to the Ontario Northland Railway Commission and it will depend on the recommendations which come out of that survey as to what policy we will contemplate in connection with it.

I would, however, say that the surveys are designed to look into the operations of the railway, their integration with the northern development programme which the government will be announcing in the House before long, as well as our economic programme for the development of the province, to see that the railway will be in a position to carry out its functions in the most efficient and advantageous manner. When the survey is made available to the government—which I hope will be in a matter of a few months—I will be in a better position to give a direct answer to the question which the hon. member raised.

Mr. Troy: Just as a supplementary question: does the hon. Minister not agree then that the programme, that is, reorganization, is in order?

The second question: will the report of the preliminary survey made to determine the feasibility of the port of Moosonee as an ocean port be tabled in the House and, if so, when?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There has been no preliminary report, of which I am aware, of the nature referred to in the question of the hon. member. There has been, and I referred to it in the House some time ago, a report prepared by the federal Department of Mines which was a hydrographic, hydro-metric, topographic and soil test survey. Is this the one to which the hon. member refers?

Mr. Troy: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is not a feasibility report.

Mr. Troy: Well, I presume it has something to do with feasibility of Moosonee as a port?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, it does not.

Mr. Troy: It does not?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to address another question to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), a copy of which I have submitted to him through you.

Has the Langford committee reported on the problems related to gas storage; secondly, will the House have an opportunity to discuss the recommendations of the Langford report before the energy board makes a decision on Imperial Oil's application for a sizeable storage area?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I can only say in answer to the hon. member's question, part 1, that the report has not yet been received. However, I am advised it will be available before very long. That is, within the next few weeks.

As to the answer to the second question, the energy board has power to deal with applications which are made in relation to storage, but the board has been asked not to deal with the application of Imperial Oil until such time as the Langford report is available. Now, I want the hon. member to understand that I have given no undertaking as to debate here in the House in relation to this; all I say is that the energy board's decision in relation to this matter will not be given until such time as the Langford report is available and the board is made aware of the policy of the government.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question. Is the hon. Minister then in effect saying that the government will come to a decision on the Langford committee report without an opportunity for debate in this House?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, I am not saying that; all I am saying is that the report is not yet available and when the report is available the government will make known both to the House and to the energy board what its policy is in this matter.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to give the House an outline of the recommendations which I propose to make in connection with the representation of the people of Ontario in the legislative assembly and the redistribution of electoral districts.

The last redistribution of seats took place in 1954 and was handled by a select committee consisting of hon. members from both sides of the House. As I recall, the committee was unanimous in its recommendations. The situation which confronted the legislative assembly and the select committee in 1954 was in most respects similar to the conditions that exist today and which in my opinion again make it imperative that steps should be taken to provide for a more realistic and complete representation of our people in this assembly. By 1954 our population had grown tremendously and there had been marked changes in its concentration. The urban centres, particularly Metropolitan Toronto, had expanded much more rapidly than other parts of Ontario, some of which indeed had experienced little or no change.

The amendments which were made in The Representation Act at that time reflected the increase in our total population and the build-up of population in specific areas. You will recall that there were eight new constituencies established at that time, three of which were in Metropolitan Toronto and one each in the Sudbury, Ottawa, Hamilton, London and Oshawa-Ontario county areas. As I say, the situation today is very similar to that of 1954.

Since the last redistribution, our total population has increased from approximately 5,200,000 to 6,300,000, which is slightly more than a 20 per cent rise. The population increase has not been spread evenly over Ontario and a great deal of the increase has occurred in the urban areas of the province.

For example, a very rough estimate suggests that while the total population of the province has increased by about 20 per cent since 1954, the population of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto has jumped upward by at least 25 per cent, with even greater increases in some of the townships and towns bordering on, or just beyond the borders of, Metropolitan Toronto.

Within Metropolitan Toronto itself, the population of the city proper has remained static since 1954 while the increase in the entire area has taken place in the suburban municipalities which have mushroomed. So not only has a definite disproportion developed in the representation, between Metropolitan Toronto and the whole province, but also as between the various parts which make up Metropolitan Toronto itself. Disproportion, I would say, to a much lesser degree exists in other parts of the province.

The population in several of the electoral districts has become extremely large and this has placed a very heavy burden upon the members themselves, making it difficult for them to represent the interests of all their constituents as fully as they might desire.

There can be no disagreement that fairness to hon. members involved and the best interests of the people they represent, warrant our taking steps to adjust constituency boundaries in order to bring about a more equitable distribution of seats in the House.

A great deal of thought has been given, Mr. Speaker, to the method by which these ends might be achieved most satisfactorily. As I understand it, the previous practice has been to refer the matter to a select committee representative of all parties in the House and thoroughly familiar with the problems involved.

However, in view of the very close study which must be given population trends, concentration of population in certain areas, the development of certain political entities within our province and the traditional boundaries of many of our electoral districts of lesser expansion, it is considered that this task might better be handled at this time by an independent commission with full powers to investigate these matters which I have mentioned.

(Applause)

I am delighted to observe that I can do something which will get complete approbation from the other side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I intend therefore to recommend that this House, by resolution, appoint a commission consisting of three impartial and independent persons who would inquire into the distribution of electoral districts and recommend to the assembly such changes and additions as they deem appropriate.

I shall also recommend that the House instruct the commission in formulating its recommendations to take into consideration the population picture, the varying conditions and requirements of representation as between rural and urban areas; the traditional boundaries of the electoral districts of the province; the community or diversity of interests of the population of the various districts; the means of communication and the physical features within various areas and, with particular reference to rural electoral districts, the existing municipal boundaries.

Having reached its conclusions, the commission would be expected to make its report to this House. I assume that a major factor in the commission's deliberations will be the figures contained in the reports of the 1961 census.

Those reports have not yet been completed. When they do become available I shall take the necessary steps in this House to give effect to the plans which I have outlined to you and which I am sure you will agree are a reasonable approach to the problem of insuring the fullest measure of democracy and efficiency in the operation of our system of parliamentary government, and adequate and effective representation for the people of our province.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask, before I make these remarks, just one question of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts)? I was not too clear in my mind whether the task to be assigned to the independent commission is going to recommend actual redistribution, or recommend principles on which it should be based.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it is my intention that it will recommend actual redistribution.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the hon. Prime Minister for taking this step. To my mind, and I think certainly to the minds of my hon. colleagues here—

Mr. Speaker: Is there any point of order?

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think there is. I think that the hon. Prime Minister has made a statement and surely someone on this side is entitled to say something to it.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Ministers are expected to make statements such as this. It is their duty to make them. It does not necessarily mean that it sponsors a debate on the matter of the statement.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thought the government would be happy to hear us say some nice things about them for a change.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), but would you permit me this one brief comment? We are running into difficulties here, sir, and that is if the government—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a very good idea who is going to be leaving that party first and maybe he should be silent. And he will not be leaving voluntarily—from what I view from this side of the House.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I did say that I would answer a question, but I was not prepared to sit here and listen to the comments made which are completely out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the point I just wanted to draw to your attention is, that I agree that it is the right of the hon. Ministers to make statements, but when the hon. Ministers make statements on a policy issue and then indicate as the hon. Prime Minister has just indicated, and a few moments ago the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), that we will be denied the right of a debate before that decision goes into effect, I suggest to you that this is an affront to the right of this—

Mr. Speaker: Order! A resolution to this effect will be presented, at which time full debate will be allowed.

Mr. MacDonald: But the hon. Minister of Energy Resources indicated earlier there would be no debate on the issue. However, I do not want to argue that.

My question to the hon. Prime Minister is this: can he give us some indication as to the likely timetable of this, in view of the fact that Mr. Hees indicated to the House of Commons—the day before yesterday if I recall correctly—that the census figures would be available very shortly? Is it the intention, for example, to have a report back from this commission before the end of this session, or is it the fall session?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Hees, I believe, said that he expected the final census report to be available in June; as I read the news report this would mean that it would be impossible to get a report back this present session. But we will see how these census figures come out and what they are.

I do not know what shape they are going to take. All I know is that there is not sufficient information available from the census at this time for this commission to commence an intelligent approach to the job that I envisage they will do. However, the commission will be set up prior to the end of this current session.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE HOSPITAL SERVICES ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) moves second reading of Bill No. 51, An Act to amend The Hospital Services Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PUBLIC HOSPITALS ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) Bill No. 52, An Act to amend The Public Hospitals Act.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, on Bill 52 I would like to state that in this particular instance I cannot see why in The Public Hospitals Act the hospital commission should have the right to be responsible for hospitals—as far as cost is concerned—for the distribution of lands. There is no reason why the present system cannot be carried out, as far as hospital boards are concerned, in the handling of their own affairs. I think that the hospital services commission at the present time has all it can do to look after the area in which it is now operating. If you will look at your budget statement you will find that in the year 1960-1961 there was $277 million handled by this particular commission. For the year 1961-1962 $334.7 million is estimated.

We do not know, we have no indication at all, how much this particular commission will handle in 1962-1963. There does not seem to be any indication that the commission will stay within any reasonable amounts. When you have a commission that seems to be operating in this manner, and in this direction, you wonder whether you should give them control of this particular responsibility. I feel that the commission itself should be looked into—to the point where we have a little more idea of the economies which they have, or intend to, put into force.

I have seen at the present time no indication of any economy. Anything that this particular commission asks for it gets, apparently without any criticism or any indication there is going to be any curtailing of their operation or desire. When the Blue Cross was in charge of this particular type of operation we had it within reasonable bounds. At the present time this commission does not indicate that it is going to make even an attempt to stay within reasonable bounds. Regardless of what it does, apparently we are willing to accept it. This year the government is tossing in $32 million in lieu of asking the voters to put up more in insurance to cover the extra money which the commission says it has to have.

Giving this commission further responsibility—taking into consideration the experience we have had with it—I do not think is entirely justified. I feel that we should look at this thing very, very carefully before the bill itself is put into legislative force.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could throw this in before the hon. Minister (Mr. Dymond) replies. The explanatory note states that there is no change in the principle of the bill. I think, Mr. Speaker, the problem here is that this bill is so small that it is in essence a technical matter and I do not know how one avoids detail and principle. But may I ask the hon. Minister this question? What are the circumstances that have prompted this amendment; are they detail or principle?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, this principle now exists. My hon. friend from Fort William (Mr. Chapple) speaks about holding Blue Cross within bounds. The Department of Health had this responsibility while Blue Cross was operating, and this is simply transferring it to the hospital services commission as all responsibility for general hospital was transferred in 1959. The only difference is to clarify this, beyond any doubt. Apparently there have been some questions raised by the legal people as to whether or not all land, all property belonging to the hospital board, board of governors or trustees—or whatever the body responsible may have been—as to whether or not they must apply to the commission for permission to dispose of any part of the property. This is only to make it absolutely clear that no public general hospital in this province can dispose of any of its property without prior approval by the hospital services commission. This does not place any financial responsibility on the hospital services commission in any way whatsoever, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour) moves second reading of Bill No. 54, An Act to establish the Ontario Code of Human Rights and to provide for its administration.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): In rising to move second reading of Bill No. 54 I should like to say that it gives me special pleasure to place it before the House at this particular time; first, because it is Brotherhood Week—an occasion when the principle of the bill is very much in the public mind; and secondly, because the national co-chairman of this year's Brotherhood Week is the distinguished and beloved member of this House whose name will always be closely associated with our Human Rights Code. I refer, of course, to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost).

Mr. Speaker, I think all parties in the House can feel proud of the fact that our province has pioneered in this field of legislation and that the bill before us today is a further and very important step in a development which began as long ago as 1944.

Now, what is the aim of our human rights legislation? Let me quote from the remarks made here some time ago by my predecessor, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Daley), who, I think, summed up its objective very well indeed:

The aim of Ontario's human rights legislation is to create at the community level a climate of understanding and mutual respect in which all our people, of whatever racial, religious or cultural background—new Canadian no less than native born—will be made to feel that all are equal in dignity and rights, that each is a part of the whole Canadian community and that each has a rich contribution to make to the development and well being of our province and nation. Few will disagree that this is a prerequisite for the development of a truly healthy Canadianism.

To the extent that this concept has been practised down through Canada's history it has brought us very great rewards—and in every aspect of our community life. Just stop to consider for a moment what our culture has gained in enrichment from the contribution of those who have come to us from so many lands—in music, in art, in drama, in science, in education, not to mention sports.

Now, nobody would suggest that prejudice can or has been dug out of our provincial community and eliminated by the mere passage of statutes, but there is no question that its outward manifestations can and have been curbed. Through the body of laws which has been built up during the past two decades, significant advances have been made in the breaching and the removal of artificial barriers denying equality of opportunity to our fellow human beings.

The first law on our statute books was The Racial Discrimination Act of 1944 which prohibited the publication or displaying of any notice, sign, symbol or other representation expressing racial or religious discrimination. That provision was retained in toto in The Fair Accommodation Practices Act of 1954 and is incorporated into the bill before us today as its very first section. In 1951, the Legislature passed The Fair Employment Practices Act and three years later, as I have indicated, The Fair Accommodation Practices Act. In 1958, The Ontario Anti-Discrimination Commission Act was placed on the books and a commission was appointed to plan and conduct educational programmes designed to eliminate discriminatory practices. Last year, this House changed the name of the commission to the Ontario Human Rights Commission and redefined its functions. This House also amended The Fair Accommodation Practices Act to prohibit discrimination in the renting of dwelling units in buildings containing more than six units.

Up to the present time, The Fair Employment Practices Act and The Female Employees Fair Remuneration Act—better known as the equal pay for equal work law—have been administered in The Department of Labour by the fair employment practices branch. The Fair Accommodation Practices Act has been administered by other officers of the department. The Human Rights Commission, with its educational functions, has been a third entity operating within the context of our total human rights programme.

Now, what we propose to do is to bring all of these operations together under one roof and make the enforcement and administration of the anti-discrimination provisions, as well as the planning and carrying out of educational activities, the responsibility of the Human Rights Commission. To my mind, therefore, a very important principle is involved in Bill No. 54. Legal sanctions, as contained in the F.E.P. and F.A.P. Acts, or alternatively, the educational programme which has been the main responsibility of the commission, are each only one side of what must be a co-ordinated, two-front assault on the problem of discrimination. Optimum results in this field, as experience indicates, can only be obtained through a marriage of law enforcement and education. The bill before us today accomplishes that marriage and, in doing so, places the province of Ontario once again in the forefront of the human rights field.

I am pleased to be able to inform the House that in the very near future we shall be announcing the appointment of a full-time officer, a distinguished and gifted citizen of our province, who will be responsible to the commission for the direction of its greatly broadened programme.

The commission, in addition to administering the legislation, will continue and accelerate its education programme. I may say that, under the leadership of Mr. Louis Fine, the commission has, during the past two years, been carrying on an intensive campaign to win active allies in its work. I am happy to inform the House that these efforts have met with notable success. We now have the active support of over 7,000 individuals throughout the province who are assisting us in a practical way. These include 1,200 clergymen of all denominations, newspaper editors, librarians, school teachers, the managers of radio and TV stations, trade unionists, hotel and resort proprietors, service clubs, women's institutes, home and school associations and the leaders of a wide variety of community organizations.

Among other things, they have assisted us in giving effective distribution to over 600,000 copies of our two main publications, "Social Justice in Ontario" and "Human Rights are in Your Hands," and of our other literature. I doubt if there is a single city, town or hamlet in Ontario in which some of this material has not been distributed in the past two years. I should mention that two editions of these publications have appeared in the French language. We have already published four issues of our bulletin, "Human Relations" and will soon produce a fifth. This publication has drawn very favourable comment from readers across Canada and it has been warmly welcomed by the Labour Committee for Human Rights and other groups in the field of civil liberties. I am sure that all hon. members of the House would want to join me in expressing our warm thanks to all those who have co-operated with us in this work.

I should like also at this time to express our very sincere appreciation to the Postmaster General of Canada who recently granted us permission to display our human rights posters in Ontario's 3,500 post offices.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that we have attempted, while incorporating the various provisions of our several human rights statutes into this bill, to clarify a number of points so that the protection afforded to our people will be strengthened and broadened. These matters will, of course, be discussed in detail in the committee of the whole House.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say at the outset that, as far as this group is concerned, we will support the principle of this bill wholeheartedly.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I am certainly glad to know that.

Mr. Bryden: At the proper time we will make—

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): We developed it.

Mr. Bryden: —we will make some suggestions for improvement, as we see it. But any suggestions we have are, relatively speaking, of a minor nature and there is no question that in its broad principles this is a very important bill which represents a very important step forward in this province. We, in this group, congratulate the government and the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) on having brought it in.

When the bill was up for first reading, Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. Minister at the time if it incorporated any new principles or was merely a consolidation of existing legislation. As I recall his answer at the time he stated it was merely a consolidation; there were no new principles in it. I think, Mr. Speaker, that in that answer he did not really do justice to his bill. There are, as I see it, one or two new principles which are very important principles and I think they represent an important step forward.

First of all, I think it is an important principle in itself to consolidate all of this legislation into one statute. This has been quite a slow process in the province of Ontario. I will concede and give credit to the government for having brought in legislation in this general area, but, in my opinion, it has done so very slowly and often reluctantly, and in bits and pieces. It is only now really that the government has been prepared to recognize the total subject matter of this bill as one problem, whole and indivisible.

I can remember debates in this House a decade and more ago—I was not then a member but I sat in the gallery often and listened to them—where members of the C.C.F. group of that day were enunciating that very principle and were asking for enactment of one overall comprehensive statute dealing with the entire problem of human rights. At that time it was not possible to convince the government.

In fact I can remember one occasion in this House when the original—what is the name of that old bill? I am glad we are getting rid of this name at least—Female Employees Fair Remuneration Act was first before this House. The C.C.F. members of that day urged the government very strongly that that legislation should be consolidated with such other legislation that existed at the time to deal with discrimination and that it should all be put under one commission for administration.

The hon. Prime Minister of the day, now the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), scoffed at the suggestion that was then put forward. I can remember very well he made quite an eloquent speech in which he pooh-poohed the idea that we should tell the women of this province that they are a minority. He suggested that in what I thought was a very specious argument and still do. His objection to the proposal at that time was that the women of this province were not a minority. He said we would make ourselves ridiculous by suggesting to them that they are a minority and then he went on to ask—in a question that he never quite finished: “Why, what are our wives to think of us?” And at that point Miss Agnes MacPhail, who sat on the Opposition benches, interjected: “I often wonder.”

Mr. Speaker, I am glad now to see that that rather obscurantist attitude has finally dropped out of the thinking of the government. This legislation is not really legislation for the benefit of minorities. I think it was a false premise on which the hon. Prime Minister of the day based his objection to including equal pay provisions in general legislation of this kind.

After all, all of us are in a minority in some aspects of our lives; but this is not legislation for the protection of minorities, it is legislation directed against discrimination. To put it in a more positive form: directed or aimed at establishing and confirming basic human rights. And it really does not matter whether it is the minority or the majority that suffers. When human rights are interfered with, it is desirable that public policy should try to prevent it.

As a matter of fact, there have been cases where members of majority groups have been discriminated against.

I remember quite a remarkable case in the state of New York where a white man appealed to the Human Rights Commission of that state because he had applied for a job as an elevator operator in a residential apartment and he had been refused employment because the policy of the management was to hire coloured people only. He appealed to the commission of New York state, on the ground that he was being discriminated against on account of his colour and he won his case before the commission; and it was quite proper that he should have done so, because that was exactly what was happening.

So it is not really a problem of minorities we are dealing with; it is a problem of human attitudes and the establishment of human rights, and it is desirable that all of these matters should be consolidated into one statute as is now being done and what is even more important should be put under one single administration.

This is a second important new principle enunciated here which previously the government always resisted. I am glad now that they have accepted the logic of the situation and are putting the administration of the Act, including its enforcement, in the hands of the human rights commission. For a decade and more it was always—well, it was impossible—to persuade the government that is the way the matter should be handled. Enforcement was really in the hands of the Minister of Labour.

Even when the human rights commission was established, it was not established until just two or three years ago, but even after it was established, a complainant made his complaint to the Minister, under most of the statutes at any rate, and then the Minister was authorized, though not required, to institute certain proceedings. We all know, Mr. Speaker, that over the years it was often, in fact I would say it was usually, very, very difficult to get the then Minister of Labour to act on complaints under these various statutes.

I would go further and say that there would have been little, if any, enforcement of these statutes in the past if it had not been for the interest that the labour movement took in forwarding the cause of human rights in the province.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That is not true.

Mr. Bryden: The labour movement has frequently been subjected to very much abuse both outside this House and sometimes, I regret to say, even inside it. But this is a field where I think, as in many others, they have shown their great interest in human rights and human welfare quite apart from any benefit that they or their members might personally derive.

They have always devoted part of their resources towards having formal educational machinery, not only for the education of their own members in matters of this kind, but also to assist in the elaboration and application of public policy. The activities of the labour movement through the joint labour committee on human rights in calling the attention of the government to violations of some of our human rights legislation in the past and in insisting, and sometimes in having to go to great lengths, to organize public pressure to get action from the government, are examples of this. In all those activities, they have performed a great service to this province in the field of human rights and I think at this time their service should be recognized.

I do not, in making specific reference to them, wish in any way to belittle the very important efforts of other organizations such as the Canadian Jewish Congress, which has also done great work in this field. But one thing that should be borne in mind is that this was a particular area where the labour movement itself could not possibly, in anybody's mind, be thought to have a vested interest of its own that it was trying to promote. Therefore, in a way, I think it may have had greater influence on public opinion than some other organizations which did very fine work as well but had a clear interest of their own in the field.

At any rate, though we now have reached the stage where we have unified administration, I regret to see that the administration is still not entirely in the hands of the commission.

The procedure for enforcement that is set forth in part 3 is certainly an improvement over the previous procedure. I still think that it is a little cumbersome and complicated. Under section 12 a complainant goes to the commission, which is good, and the commission looks into the complaint and tries to adjust it on the basis of education and persuasion if it can; that is all good. But then if it is unable to effect a settlement, the matter must go to the Minister who may then set up a commission of inquiry, and then certain other procedures follow.

In my opinion, that is unnecessarily complicated. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, it would be better if the government would consider putting the administration entirely in the hands of the commission. Let it try education and negotiation first but, if that does not succeed, let it hold hearings and let it make directives. Then let the enforcement procedure follow in much the same way as the Act now envisages.

I think that the machinery which is now proposed, although it is an improvement, is still unnecessarily cumbersome.

I would also like to congratulate the government on incorporating into the bill the principles set forth in section 17 which I believe was in one of the Acts being consolidated but not in the others. That is where there is a conviction, the Minister may apply to the Supreme Court for a continuing order.

I think that is a very useful enforcement procedure in those cases which I hope will be fairly few, where it is necessary to adopt punitive measures. I think probably it is more useful than the penalty that may be imposed to have the continuing order, and I am glad to see that the hon. Minister of Labour has now made that principle applicable to the whole range of human rights legislation.

There are one or two other points I would mention, Mr. Speaker. We have argued this out before. I will merely mention it at the moment.

With regard to apartment buildings, I believe that to restrict the provision to apartments or buildings with more than six self-contained dwelling units unduly limits the effect of the bill.

I would certainly say that six-plexes ought to be subject to legislation of this kind. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would say that even smaller units should be.

I realize there is a problem of judgment here, and one does not wish to interfere in the domestic affairs of any person, but a six-plex is really quite a large building. I do not think the landlord in the six-plex has so close an association with his tenants, even if he lives in the building which is not usually the case, that he should not be asked to comply with this legislation along with all others. In fact, I would say landlords in four-plexes ought to be required to comply as well.

One other point that I would mention is with regard to the equal pay section of the bill which is now section 5.

I notice that the government has not seen fit to improve upon the previous legislation which is now being consolidated into this statute. The prohibition against discrimination in regard to pay rates as between men and women apply only in cases where the same work is done in the same establishment. Now that is very narrow and restrictive terminology, Mr. Speaker, it means that in a very large number of cases the intent of the legislation can readily be evaded by an employer simply making a very small difference in a job that he gives to a woman as compared to one that he may give to men, yet on the basis of that he can make a very large difference in pay.

These, however, are matters of detail. As far as this group is concerned, we will deal with them again when the bill is in committee.

But, notwithstanding some of our reservations on detail, I would like to reiterate again that we regard this as a very important piece of legislation, a great step forward. Certainly the members of this group have always been extremely interested in legislation of this kind. We have for many years advocated a consolidated statute with a unified administration. In recent years even the Liberals, who a decade or more ago, when these matters were before the House, showed very little interest, are now taking a substantial interest in them. I feel quite satisfied that the principle of this bill will be adopted with enthusiasm and with unanimity by this House. I envy the hon. Minister his opportunity to present such a bill to the House, and I congratulate him on having done so.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to tell you and the House that we of the Liberal Party are wholly in agreement with the principle of this bill, we always have been and we always will be.

There will be others in our group who will speak on this, but I do want to take this opportunity to express my commendation to the government in its efforts to improve human relations in this province and to congratulate the government for their efforts in introducing this particular piece of legislation at this time.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to repeat the comments of my hon. leader; however, I would like to bring to the attention of this House the second "whereas" and that is:

And whereas it is public policy in Ontario that every person is free and equal in dignity and right without regard to race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry or place of origin.

We still forget one bit of discrimination that we do find, and that is age discrimination. I think here we have an opportunity to show what we think of our older people. In this Act should be written in that word "age", so that an individual writing to The Department of Education would not be confronted with a reply such as the following. This was received from the Ontario College of Education, February 8, 1962.

Please note again on our printed sheet that a candidate should not be over 45 years of age.

Now, surely age alone should not disqualify an individual in the teaching profession. Were that so then possibly all teachers reaching that age should be retired instead of being allowed to continue. So I would only like to reiterate that the government should take into consideration inserting the word "age".

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, so seldom do I agree with the hon. members on the other side of the House that this is one occasion where I wanted to rise to add my words of agreement.

I think that one reason why we can all agree on the principle of this bill is that the principles that are in it are in many ways the history of our race and of our people. We in this nation have had a peculiar background where we have been—in comparison with many societies over the years that have gone by—outstanding in what we have done to help the individual. Our system of government is so greatly opposed to that of the Russian system, we emphasize the individual. That is why we can join together in agreeing that no one should be discriminated against because of their race, their creed, their nationality, colour or ancestry.

But I would like to emphasize what the previous speaker just said about age. I have in my district many people who cannot find work simply because they are over the age of 40 years and I think that we have still a long way to go in this regard.

The Apprenticeship Act forbids anyone over the age of 21 being an apprentice, and certainly this is something in the principles of our legislation we must do something to improve. Despite the numerous occasions that have been brought to the attention of this government, they have still sat back and done nothing and I think it is time that they went to work on it.

Finally, there is the enforcing of the bill. I do think, because of the Ontario Human Rights Commission, that this can be enforced.

That body has a good reputation, and I hope that the government does its best to see to it that this bill is enforced; because if we use, as an example, how they enforce labour safety regulations, this department has got a pretty black record. I hope that, from the enforcement clauses in this bill, this department sees to it that the principles are enforced and does much to improve its poor record in this regard.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words concerning this bill because, as I have suggested on a couple of occasions, I consider it to be a very important piece of legislation.

If you go back to the beginning of this type of legislation and the human rights legislation that has been introduced here, I think you will find that over the years there really has never been a sharp difference of opinion on the underlying principles between the various groups in the House.

The principles simply stated are these, and I will read this.

If you discriminate against any person because of race or creed in respect of his ordinary rights as a citizen you deny that equality which is part and parcel of our democratic way of life. If you deprive any particular group of people of the ordinary rights enjoyed by all other people then those who should be most indignant are not the people against whom the discrimination is practised but rather those whose basic principles of justice and equality have been insulted.

These, Mr. Speaker, were the actual words used 18 years ago when this particular course of legislation was commenced.

Just for a moment I would point out to you what we are trying to accomplish with legislation of this type. There are two principal and closely interrelated purposes. The first is to make secure in law the inalienable right of every person, and the second is to create at the local community level in our society a climate of understanding and mutual respect among all our people, so that every person, new Canadian no less than native born, will be afforded the unhampered opportunity to contribute his maximum to the enrichment of our society, of our province and our nation.

I am quite certain that none of us here today has any doubt whatsoever that this measure—as well as those that have gone before and of which this is the logical and natural follower—I am sure that none of us would doubt that this legislation does reflect in large measure the conscience of the people of the province.

I would never deny that there are still pockets of prejudice in Ontario. There are matters that have been raised by other speakers here this afternoon; and I think that as time goes on we must set our minds to these problems as well. However, we must recognize, in addition, that law alone will not be sufficient to accomplish what we are after; because if law alone would make us sinless we would be certainly pure as the driven snow because we have plenty of laws in this province at the present time.

What we are really trying to do, and the purpose of the bill, is to combine the sanction clauses of the existing legislation with our extensive programme of education and enlightenment and thereby make the law the ally, if I may put it that way, of sense and decency.

I think the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), and I, all realize that this bill is an important step in what we are trying to achieve. The codification of the Act will promote understanding and acceptance of the principles involved in them. What we are really attempting to do is to place education and legal sanctions together, Mr. Speaker, in one administrative setup in order that we may co-ordinate and promote the entire human rights effort of the government and of the thinking portions of our society.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CROWN TIMBER ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests) moves second reading of Bill No. 56, An Act to amend The Crown Timber Act.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I gave an explanation on first reading and I think that the explanatory notes that are attached to the bill are quite sufficient. I would be pleased to answer questions if there are any.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am puzzled by the second section in the principle involved in this. Up until 1953, if I recall correctly, when The Crown Timber Act was passed, there was no obligation at all upon any company for regeneration over the land in which there had been a cut. In 1953 the Act absolved the companies of all responsibility for regeneration for the cut until that date, but fixed them with the responsibility for regeneration from that date forward. I am a little curious as to why this change, which means that instead of it being a statutory obligation it is now going to be subject to negotiation and special agreement with each one of the companies.

I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister would explain why the government has felt that this change should be made and whether it is not going to open the door to an uneven application of the law. In other words, in one area a company would be forced to carry through with a regeneration policy that is much more vigorous and in another area another company would be permitted to get away with a less vigorous regeneration policy.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, I would remind him that the natural regeneration in the forest is not the same in all forests and for that reason, where in some cut over areas that have been affected by the forces of nature in a different degree to other places, the planting of trees is required, or some type of scarifying or similar forestry activities. In other areas the natural regeneration is more than sufficient. By having this amendment to the Act, the foresters then will be able to analyze the needs of the regeneration of the forest based upon the actual situation as it exists from time to time. From that we will be able to enter into agreement with the particular operating company or companies so that the regeneration which will be required to be assisted, that is, assisted beyond the forces of nature itself, will be decided upon for a particular area.

I do not know that I can explain it to any greater length than that. I think that gives the House the general picture of what the situation is and how the foresters intend to deal with the matter. It is not possible of course, to say immediately after an area has been cut over exactly what will have to be done to it in order to rebuild the forest. It takes time; sometimes two or three years may be sufficient and in another case it may take twice that long or even longer. So the foresters advise me that in their opinion this would be the proper method of dealing with this.

I might say that I have had officials of my department studying this question of regeneration for quite some time. We have come to the conclusion that this would be the better way of handling it rather than attempt to make some general rule that is intended to apply throughout the province when such general rules have not been found to be the logical manner of handling a situation of this type.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. Minister very much for his explanation. I think I now see the kind of thing that is in the government's mind and the department's mind. In fact, on two or three occasions in past estimates of his department, I had raised with his predecessor the need for the government to lay down some standards because—as I spelled out in some detail, I think, about two or three years ago after visits that I made personally in the Marathon limits and the ones just to the west—the Marathon Company operated on the basis that 85 per cent was natural regeneration; therefore you needed a little more. Whereas, just to the west a company was working on almost precisely the opposite kind of assumption that you could not count on natural regeneration, therefore you had to have a great deal of the artificial planting of trees.

As I take it, the hon. Minister is now in effect saying that you cannot lay down a standard that is applicable everywhere because you have different weather conditions, different soil conditions and everything else, therefore you are going to do it on the basis of negotiations with each company. Mr. Speaker, this is an answer to the problem that previous Ministers had indicated they were working toward, and it may be an effective answer. I think we will have to wait until experience gives us some sort of indication.

However, there is one aspect of this which still interests me, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to raise this with the hon. Minister. Is there going to be any obligation, in the agreements that are made, for a regeneration of the species that were there before—or more particularly of the premium species? There is this kind of a situation, for example, in Marathon where—because of the particular mills that they have and their product—they are not as interested in having as high a proportion of the regeneration of spruce as some other companies. Does this mean that, in effect, in the regeneration of the forests the government is willing to tolerate—because of the nature of the industry that has been established there—a regeneration of the inferior species rather than trying to keep as high a proportion of the premium species in our forests?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, in every instance we will attempt to improve the forest by regenerating the superior species, as the hon. member calls them.

There is another matter which should be brought to the attention of the House. At the present time, particularly in southern Ontario, we are attempting in our Crown management units and similar plans of management to regenerate the good hardwood species, and I would say that the procedure has met with much success during the past few years. But we are bearing in mind that the best forest is, of course, that which is of the species which will bring the greatest return to the economy of the province. I want to assure the hon. member and the House that those are our plans and, of course, we are dealing with nature and we have many problems to contend with—insects, fires and so on and so forth. But I would say the department people have made great advances in comparatively recent years, in forest management in all of its different phases.

Mr. Chapple: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister a question on this? To what degree is the person who does the cutting responsible for this reforestation? Does he have to do the work himself—plant the trees, develop the area—or is this done by the government, so that he takes over when the forest or the trees reach a certain degree of maturity?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, there are perhaps as many different kinds of agreements with timber operators as there are actual numbers of agreements, and where the foresters are able to analyze the needs for reforestation it can be—and in many cases, is—provided for in the agreement entered into before any cutting is done. In other cases the agreement provides that, if the natural regeneration is not sufficient then the reforestation will be done on a co-operative basis between the department and the operators. It depends on what the local and the actual conditions of a piece of forest land are. From that the foresters will decide what work will be done in the way of regeneration practices. It may not entail the planting of trees at all. It may entail the type of logging operation which is used. It makes a difference to the forest and to the soil as to whether the logging operation uses tractors or horses. All these things are considered by the foresters. And today in The Department of Lands and Forests we have, I would say, sufficient number of well-trained foresters who are working through our different district offices. We have 22 districts in the province. The foresters are able to figure these things out on the ground, on the site, and from there come up with the best proposal that can be established—bearing in mind their knowledge and the actual conditions of the soil site and the timber area itself.

Mr. Chapple: It is all a matter of negotiation, then?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: That is correct.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LAKEHEAD COLLEGE ACT

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves second reading of Bill No. 58, An Act to amend The Lakehead College of Arts, Science and Technology Act, 1956.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I recall the statement of the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) last year, before the private bills committee, when the bills to grant charters to Northeastern University and North Bay College were being deliberated. He then made the statement that no more charters would be granted until the university committee had considered them. Has the university committee—of which the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) is the chairman—approved of this particular charter?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment to an existing Act which brought the college into being. To go into the history of this, the Lakehead College of Arts, Science and Technology, started originally as an institute of technology. Then, in order to serve the needs of that area of the province, they were given the power and, I believe, developed the first two years of a university course. In other words, they have been giving university courses there in first year and in second year, and then sending their students on to other universities in the province. They have done this by working out—in co-operation with the other universities in the province—the courses they would give in the first two years. The other universities would accept those students into the second, third and fourth years of honour courses.

Now, in the logical development of this institution the time has come for it to give a third year of a general arts course, and they therefore want power to be able to grant degrees when they give the complete course of studies leading to a degree in their own institution. That is the purpose of this bill. It is not a new charter. It does not create a new university. The college is there, it has been functioning as a university in the first two years. Therefore, this is not the creation as the hon. member seems to think, nor is it the granting of a new charter. They have had their charter for some years. It only gives them power to grant degrees now that they have developed to the point where they are going to give the third year of a general arts course.

I am quite sure that this matter has been discussed by the university affairs committee but I do not sit on that committee any more myself and I cannot state specifically—however, I would be happy to send the bill to the committee if anybody would like me to do so. But I point out that this is just a logical development of a plan that has been going on for some considerable years.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no objection to Lakehead College being given the opportunity to grant degrees. But I cannot see any difference between that particular institution and North Bay college which has a charter also. All we asked for was a charter to grant degrees in that college. It was denied them, and under the statement of the hon. Prime Minister—his particular statement to that committee—that no further approvals of any university to grant degrees would be given until this particular committee, which had been set up, had approved of it. They were going to make a survey of the whole province. The North Bay college also has had a charter for years, but it was refused.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, just to complete this, I am quite certain that this matter has been considered by the university affairs committee but, as I say, I was not there when it was so I cannot give a 100 per cent assurance. But I will check and find out, because I am quite sure the legislation was checked out with them before it was brought in.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in this debate, I commend you for the very efficient way in which you conduct the affairs of this House. I would say that you are growing in wisdom. And also I wish to add my words of welcome to the new hon. members who have recently taken their seats. I believe they will add much to the debates in this House in the near future.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I was not intending to speak in this debate but the matter I wish to bring before the House I could not bring in any other way than in this manner. And I agree with your judgment; I think you were correct in your decision.

The reason I am speaking on this debate is that this morning I had a telephone call from our industrial commissioner of the industrial commission in Brantford. He was very much concerned with an address that was made last evening by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) as leader of the New Democratic Party. In the address of which I am speaking, the hon. member dealt at some length with the Cockshutt farm implement company which was known for many years as the Cockshutt Plow Company. Now, the Cockshutt company started many years ago, with a very small beginning, and it expanded to a very thriving industry in the city of Brantford—until these last few years. It fell on very lean periods, and the men working there were working probably only six or seven months a year, and it was getting progressively worse.

But last night, the hon. member for York South, and I quote from his speech, said:

Thousands of Canadian farmers who bought Cockshutt equipment have no assurance that they will be able to get parts and services, so that they may have a $1,000 machine idle sitting in their fields, for the want of a $5 part.

Farm leaders in Ontario approached the government in December with an urgent request for a Farm Machinery Act such as the one the New Democratic Party leader Tommy Douglas gave the farmers of Saskatchewan back in 1949. This would have obligated any company selling machinery to provide parts and services for ten years, precisely the kind of protection needed in a case like the Cockshutt sales. But the Conservatives, with the support of the Liberals, sent the request off to the Minister for study, a familiar way to avoid real action. Now Cockshutt is gone. There is no continuing obligation for parts for the farmers who bought its equipment. One wonders whether the delay was not designed to relieve the Cockshutt firm of its obligations to persons who have patronized it for generations.

Well now, the Cockshutt farm company is still in business and this kind of thing just hurts the farmer. I am interested in the hundreds of men who will be employed in that industry. It has been taken over by a new company and it will take some months before they get organized.

I have no doubt that some of the older employees will be hurt, I do not know how badly. Everything is being done that they will not be hurt. But I would like to point out that the old Cockshutt labour force was approximately 1,200. These 1,200 people averaged about seven months a year and this has been going on for some years. This figure included the foundry and forge employees.

This new company, the White Oliver Company—by the way, I have met the principals of the company and spoke with them—purchased the old Cockshutt firm. They did not buy the foundry and the forge for a reason, and the reason was that it was an old, dilapidated, inefficient and unprofitable foundry. The new Cockshutt company is farming out its foundry and forge work to local industry so it would be done locally anyway, thereby cutting their costs and at the same time assisting other Canadian companies in maintaining their labour force. The new Cockshutt labour force, less the foundry and forge—listen to this, hon. members—will build up to one greater than previously carried and will have a 12-month production schedule rather than a six-month to nine-month schedule.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): They are just kidding the people of Brantford.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. members are kidding themselves. I am living with those people and I do not want them to be kidded, and I do not think hon. members are kidding them either.

When the White Company bought Cockshutt they did so recognizing that the Brantford plant, while operating at a loss on some production terms, was able to build several machines such as the swathers and the combines and the discs and the cultivators more efficiently and economically than any of the White Oliver plants in the U.S.A. Consequently, the Brantford plant will build not only for the Cockshutt organization, but for White Oliver, U.S.A. and increase the export market as well. Those items that they produce will be turned out with much more efficiency.

The Cockshutt products which are not being processed economically in Canada will be produced in the White Oliver U.S. plant but will be marketed under the Cockshutt name through the Cockshutt dealer organization in Canada.

The general manager informed me this morning that the hon. member's suggestion that farmers will have no assurance of getting repair parts for Cockshutt machines could not be farther from the truth or more irresponsible.

The new Cockshutt company is maintaining and will continue to maintain the highest possible standards of parts, services to their customers. "To us," he told me, "they are the most important people in the world and since we intend to stay in business and to expand it, that will be our continuing philosophy."

Now, you do not think for an instant, Mr. Speaker, that a company will come over and put $15 million into this company and make nothing out of it. They are here to make money, and the only way they can make money is to do business. As long as there is any Cockshutt machinery in Canada parts will be available.

I gave my reasons for speaking about this: because I am very concerned about the Cockshutt company, I do not want them to be hurt. I am concerned about the hundreds of men who will be employed there. This kind of propaganda, I think, will really hurt them and the employment that they so wish to have.

As I rose to speak I said I had only just one subject. Generally, as hon. members know, in the Throne debate we are allowed to roam all over creation, but I will not take the time of the House any longer. I think I have made my point, and I hope—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. member has missed the point.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what results the hon. member speaks about, but I am speaking for the little fellow in Brantford.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I should like at the outset to join with the others who have congratulated you, sir, and add my congratulations to you.

The hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) capably pointed out yesterday that your job is a difficult one and we on this side of the House respect your position. We have admiration for you in the way you have conducted your duties and we are sure that this trend will continue.

Although I have not been here very long, I should also like to add my congratulations to the new members who have already entered this House, and of course I need not say that I am a little bit delighted that more of the new members are Liberals than subscribe to the other party.

With respect to the by-elections, it is interesting to note that in the early session of the present sitting of the Legislature there was much said from the other side about how these by-elections were to be a little election in the province of Ontario and how they would test the feeling of the people. The Conservative members were very certain that they would of course support the ruling party. It is very interesting to note that very little has been said on that side of the House since the election and I am sure that you can understand that we on this side feel that we do have something to contribute when we suggest that the people of Ontario are finally getting wise to the type of administration which has been practised in this province over the past 18 years.

It is also interesting to note the fence-mending which has been going on. It is noticeable in the press; the Cabinet Ministers are running here, there and everywhere, trying to create a new image for the present government, but I am afraid it is not going to be possible to create that new image. I think the people of Ontario have now had a little bit of an object lesson, shall I say, in the presentation of the retail sales tax which they must be reminded of each day they make a purchase.

It is also interesting to note the caucus meetings on the government side of the House which are becoming much more frequent. Up until this point, Mr. Speaker, it has been "be nice to government day"; the government has been commended on two or three pieces of legislation, and I would like to hasten to assure you that it is not my intention to carry on with that philosophy. But before turning to that point, I should like to comment very briefly on the matter which was raised by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Gordon) when he referred to the speech which was made last night by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). He made mention of the Cockshutt Plow Company in Brantford, and he went on to great lengths pointing out that these things, of course, could not happen under the New Democratic philosophy because they were going to present a planned economy which would take care of everything.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): I thought you were going to do that, too.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, that shows how misinformed the hon. member can be. I do not think our party has ever indicated that we were going to enforce a planned economy throughout the country.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, it just so happens that a few days ago a paper came to my desk which indicated the success of this planned economy which, I might tell you, has already been practised in one province of this great country of ours. I thought this information might be interesting to the House. This planned economy took place some years ago in the province where I was born, the province of Saskatchewan. At that time they decided to have a planned economy and to set everything in operation and have the government run many of these things and have a prosperous province. It is somewhat interesting to note that there are less people in the province now than there were several years ago.

Mr. Bryden: That is not true.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: The first project which was set up was a leather tannery in the city of Regina. Its purpose was to tan cow hides. Well, it operated for about two years, lost $73,000 and closed down. This is not original; my informant tells me about the only hides that were tanned were the hides of the Saskatchewan taxpayers. So then this planned economy group decided to establish another factory. They established a shoe factory, also in the city of Regina, and the socialist premier of the province boasted in his speech that the plant could manufacture shoes for $2.75 a pair and still make money. But despite his verbosity, my informant tells me that within several years the plant was bankrupt and closed down with a loss of $83,000. On and on we could go. A spray paint company was formed whose purpose was to paint the rural buildings in Saskatchewan, but I guess the farmers did not have too much confidence in that operation; they did not buy the service, and so the company ceased its operations.

A woollen mill was set up in Moose Jaw, and when it finally closed down it had a deficit of some $830,000. And so it goes.

I should suggest to the hon. members that before they buy—

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Which company was it that fired all its employees on Christmas Eve? And told them if they did not come back and work and do some decent production they would all be out of work?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What does the hon. Minister think he is doing, re-enacting Weyburn?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I thank the hon. Minister for bringing this to my attention. I would say to him that I only have 12 or 14 companies here and that one is not included, but I am sure there are others which I do not have.

Mr. MacDonald: The information of the hon. member is both faulty and inaccurate.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, I am sure the hon. member for York South will be pleased—he states that my information is faulty and inaccurate, and I am sure he will be pleased to get the right facts and bring them here and present them to the House so they might be properly stated.

Mr. Speaker, my real purpose here is to point out the faults of the government. You see, the real people, the real villains I might say, are the hon. members in the benches opposite. Before doing that, I should like, through you, Mr. Speaker, to direct some remarks to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts)—I am sorry he has left his seat—with respect to the matter of accommodation which is provided to private hon. members of this Legislature.

Theoretically, sir, the hon. members come to this Legislature to represent the people of their own riding, whether or not they are supporters of the government in office. As such they are representatives of the people of Ontario to whom this Legislature is responsible. Yet it has been a constant source of irritation to me since arriving here some three years ago that the present government has shown little respect for the representatives of the people. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that if it were commonly known that many private members of the Opposition must search from pillar to post to find a place to work while in Toronto, that the public would demand some remedial action.

Surely the government would not think, Mr. Speaker, of hiring the lowliest clerk without providing a desk at which he could work and yet it is a fact that hon. members of this House are left without even a chair and desk at which to sit when outside this Chamber. If a constituent comes to this city to talk with his representative on business it is necessary to meet him somewhere out in the halls. If he wishes to talk to him privately, about the only place available is the members' dining room. Certainly you would not call this privacy but it is at least, Mr. Speaker, a place to sit.

I wonder if a corporation spending over a billion dollars yearly would suggest that the persons having any say with respect to the control of that corporation, should not at least have a reasonable place in which to do their work. This matter has been brought to the attention of this House previously. How the government can justify its action in building great pretentious buildings such as the new Department of Highways building on Highway 401, as well as the many other promised buildings such as the one in Kenora—when they were trying to influence the voters in a by-election—and fail to recognize the need for the members themselves is beyond reasonable comprehension. In my considered opinion, such an attitude can only be considered as gross inconsideration of the electors of the province of Ontario who have elected these members as their representatives in this House. In this matter I am somewhat bewildered and almost jealous of the fortunes of the members of the NDP to my left. I was quite surprised when I walked past their door on the third floor to find that there is provided a desk with telephones for each member so that they can conduct their business. Perish the thought, Mr. Speaker, that I am suggesting that anything be taken away from them, more power to them; however, I am wondering if their good fortune is not due to the fact that perhaps they have been a little bit more vociferous than those of the voices of the official Opposition.

In any event, even the amount of accommodation available to the hon. members of the NDP would be an improvement to the private members of the official Opposition.

Surely the time has come for the hon. Prime Minister to have this situation rectified. Once again I appeal to him to show that the Opposition members receive the same courtesy that is extended to nearly every clerical employee of the government. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this is a reasonable suggestion?

I have made this suggestion in all sincerity. I hope that the hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, if he is really trying to create a new look for this government, will take a serious look at the accommodation with which he provides the hon. members of this House in which to do their business.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that because of this attitude, which seems to reflect from the government down, toward hon. members of the House that it is sometimes difficult to understand the attitude of some of the officials. I cannot but think that the attitude of some of these officials in many cases are dictated by the responsible Cabinet Ministers in charge of their departments.

For some time now I have been receiving representation from members of the public who reside in my riding who have all been complaining of the fact that Hamilton has been overlooked with respect to a trades training school. Accordingly, sir, I wrote to the deputy Minister of Education asking why Hamilton had not been considered. I would think, sir, that this would be a reasonable request coming from an elected representative of the people in the area which was concerned. You can imagine my surprise and consternation when I received a reply stating that the hon. Minister (Mr. Robarts) had been in touch with the mayor of the city of Hamilton, who was aware of the situation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am led to wonder whether or not the responsible Minister has any knowledge of the chain of representation to this Legislature. The mayor of Hamilton happens to be a very good friend of mine. He is a fine fellow and I like him, but he is elected as the mayor of Hamilton; I am one of the five representatives that are elected to represent the people in the Assembly and I would think that such matters would be the concern of the direct representatives of this House. This answer is not different from the attitude of some other departments of government, where it is the policy of the Conservative government to avoid the member of the constituency, particularly if he happens to be a member of the Opposition.

An hon. member: Shame.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Perhaps it might be a good suggestion, Mr. Speaker, to give all senior members of this administration a refresher course in the matter of electoral representation.

I might say that it was only after I made a direct appeal to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in his dual capacity as Minister of Education, that I was supplied with any kind of an answer to my question.

I would like to say here, sir, through you, to the hon. Minister of Education that I believe that Hamilton is a city which should be considered in this training plan. Certainly it is a centre of industrial activity, and one where these training plans might be of some benefit to the people participating, when they have completed their training. I draw this to the attention of the hon. Minister of Education at this time, and I can only hope that since there are two hon. Cabinet Ministers from the Hamilton district who sit on his side of the government, that some positive action will be forthcoming in the Hamilton area without undue delay.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I turn to a matter which we, on this side of the House, consider to be of paramount importance to this Legislature. I would refer you, sir, to the motion which was made on February 20, 1962, by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer). This motion, which called for an immediate adjournment of the House to discuss a matter of great public importance, was, in your wisdom, not permitted. My purpose is not to question that matter in retrospect. A vote was held and the overwhelming majority of this government supported your ruling.

The next day, sir, on a matter of privilege, the hon. leader of the Opposition rose in his place and attempted to place on the record of this House some of his reasons for suggesting that the hon. Prime Minister had misled the hon. members of the House. My hon. leader endeavoured to do this by reading from the text of the speech in question, which was delivered by the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) on Monday, February 19, 1962. After repeated interruptions from some of the hon. Cabinet Ministers opposite, you and your wisdom ruled that the hon. leader of the Opposition might not read into the record from this address.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Cabinet Ministers were particularly vociferous at that time because they knew full well that there was merit in the statements of my hon. leader, and they were prepared to use every means possible to see that he was not allowed to continue.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would point out to the hon. member that Cabinet Ministers on this side of the House had nothing to do with the Speaker's decision on that occasion. It was strictly a Speaker's decision that it was not a point of order, and was ruled upon as such. I must draw that to the attention of the hon. member.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I thank you, sir. I should like to point out that I said at the very beginning I was not questioning the wisdom of your decision. I merely was trying to indicate to the House that I felt that the Cabinet Ministers opposite were endeavouring to influence that decision, sir.

Mr. Speaker: That is the point. I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the remark that the Cabinet Ministers were influencing the Speaker on that particular point of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! It is well known to the hon. members of the House that this point of order was taken at that time and it is allowed to rest at that.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw any inference that seems to be held that I, in any way, suggested that you were influenced, sir. I trust that this meets with your approval.

An hon. member: I wonder if it has ever happened in the past.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I consider this a very serious matter, and it is my intent to stay fully within the rules of this House and to conduct myself as an honourable member of this House.

I do not intend to be upset by the political manoeuvring of the hon. members in the benches opposite. I would hasten to point out to you, sir, that I hold no brief for any hon. member of this House who would use the privilege accorded to him as a member to personally attack any other hon. member of this House. I emphatically state, sir, that the remarks I am about to make are not intended to be personal attacks.

I have a personal admiration and respect for the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Attorney-General of this province; on the other hand, sir, it is the solemn responsibility of the Opposition members in this House to ensure that justice is done and to prevent, where necessary, the government from presenting a wrong impression to this House.

Does it not seem to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is extremely coincidental that not only the hon. Opposition members of this House, but also a great majority of the press, would incorrectly interpret the intent of the hon. Attorney-General's address?

The hon. Prime Minister in this House on February 20, 1962, stated by inference that small portions of the speech were being removed and that certain conclusions were being drawn from those portions. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, he refused to table that speech so that hon. members of this House could judge for themselves whether or not such was the case. I have now had the opportunity to read that speech in its entirety—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): The hon. member read it because I gave it to him earlier.

An hon. member: Well, that is good.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: —and I cannot agree with the observations of the hon. Prime Minister. The hon. Attorney-General of this province—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That it not the first time the hon. member has misinterpreted me.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: —the hon. Attorney-General has stated on numerous occasions that the efforts of the Opposition in this whole matter of crime were aligned for the purposes of political expediency. One would think, Mr. Speaker, that if his own intentions were pure he would refrain himself from any comment of any kind with respect to any of the aspects on the now constituted Royal commission to investigate crime in this province.

I suggest through you, sir—and the hon. Attorney-General is not in his seat—I suggest through you, to the hon. Prime Minister that it is the duty of the hon. Attorney-General to refrain from any comment whatsoever, now that the matter has been handed to a Royal commission.

He, Mr. Speaker, more than anyone else in this House, should be discreet with respect to this matter, and yet he, more than any other person in this province, seems to be doing all in his power to lampoon this commission in the public mind before it is even given the opportunity to demonstrate its effectiveness. The hon. Attorney-General has from the outset been outspoken in this entire matter. He stated at the beginning that this commission was not necessary. I suggest to you, sir, that he is still of the same opinion as emphasized in his recent speech, and it now appears that the hon. Prime Minister supports that view as evidenced by his defence of the hon. Attorney-General's speech when he answered the question of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald).

I propose at this time to show the hon.

members of this House that the hon. Attorney-General still holds to his original view, notwithstanding the fact that a Royal commission has now been established to investigate this affair. As I said, Mr. Speaker, I do have a copy of his speech and, as the hon. Prime Minister has correctly stated, he sent a copy over to the hon. leader of the Opposition. I should like to quote from somewhere around the middle of page 12 of this particular speech, and I now quote the hon. Attorney-General. He states, and I quote:

Another inquiry, this time by a Royal commission, apart from certain specific matters to be dealt with, has as one of its terms of reference inquiry into crime and the efficiency of the law enforcement agencies to cope therewith. Sometimes inquiries of this kind can be helpful, sometimes they can be harmful.

I would underscore those last five words, Mr. Speaker. I continue to quote. The hon. Attorney-General said:

For myself, I have maintained and continue to maintain my own confidence, speaking by and large, in the very fine party of men composing our police forces, the Ontario Provincial Police and the large Metropolitan Toronto Police forces.

He further stated:

I have always been a believer in the direct approach to crime, namely, searching out culprits, bringing them into the court and letting the courts determine the guilt or innocence according to the well established rules of evidence.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister supports this theory as he did in the Legislature on February 20, 1962. I ask him to explain how such reasoning is compatible with the terms of reference of the Royal commission. If this preconceived opinion reflects the attitude of his government, how can the people of this province have any confidence that the co-operation of The Department of the Attorney-General will be available as it should be to the Royal commission in its endeavours? When the hon. Attorney-General is supported by the hon. Prime Minister in these statements, one can but doubt whether the commission will achieve the co-operation that is necessary from the government. The very noticeable attempts by many of the Cabinet Ministers to stop the hon. leader of the Opposition yesterday indicates clearly that this opinion is shared by the Cabinet and that all are in complete support of the expressed opinions of the hon. Attorney-General.

Mr. Speaker, let me quote from another paragraph of the speech of the hon. Attorney-General, and I quote directly from page 14 of the text given to this side of the House. I quote from the hon. Attorney-General. He states:

The present Attorney-General of the United States is waging war against a big crime problem facing him. He has to smash them and rid his country of them. In this province we must keep them out, which is a vastly different situation in our favour.

Notwithstanding the comments of the hon. Prime Minister with respect to deleting portions of the speech and drawing conclusions, I am sure that all hon. members of this House will agree with me that it is not necessary to read the whole speech to understand the intent of the comments of the hon. Attorney-General in this statement. He has already made up his mind that there is no reason for the Royal commission, and I suggest to you that these statements prove it. He declares that the big difference between the United States and Ontario is that big crime exists in the United States but not in Ontario, where the problem is simply to keep them out. The hon. Prime Minister and the Cabinet in supporting these views are clearly in agreement with this principle.

I would ask hon. members of this House to consider with me to determine whether or not the statement of the hon. Attorney-General, when implying that the forces of organized crime were prevalent in the United States and that we must keep them out of Ontario—would any reasonable person not think that this was a categorical statement? Would any reasonable person not think that this was an attempt to influence the commission? How does such a statement, Mr. Speaker, fit into the terms of reference to the Royal commission, and I quote, "to inquire into and report upon the extent of crime in Ontario and the efficiency of the law enforcement agencies to deal with it." I ask the hon. members of this House to ask themselves this question. Would not this statement, Mr. Speaker, indicate to any unbiased, reasonable person that the hon. Attorney-General has indicated a lack of confidence in the commission already and in the terms of reference?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): That is not the first time you have misinterpreted me.

Hon. members: Oh, sit down, sit down.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): The hon. Attorney-General should have sat down the other night and not made the speech.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It is one of the best speeches I ever made in my life.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, this is more serious than just the remarks of the hon. Attorney-General. I suggest to you that the hon. Prime Minister, in supporting such a statement, is in effect placing Cabinet approval on this line of reasoning, and as such has placed the Opposition members of this House in the place where we now have grave doubts as to the co-operation which will be forthcoming from the government of this province.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If I had no more brains than that I would keep quiet.

An hon. member: What did the Globe and Mail tell you to do?

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Attorney-General is going to drag the whole boat down with him.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, up until January 18 of this year I think, a comment such as just came from the hon. Attorney-General—something to the effect that we have not any more brains than that and I did not get the rest of it—but I would remind him that a large percentage of the people of Ontario do not feel that we have as few brains as he seems to think we have.

Mr. Speaker, in leaving this subject let me hasten to say that these views which are being expressed by us have also been expressed to varying degree by many of the editorials in the press of this province since the speech by the hon. Attorney-General. To the statement, Mr. Speaker, that portions of the speech had been withdrawn and that wrong conclusions were taken from those portions, I would reiterate my earlier statement that the responsible Minister of this department should be discreet enough not to place himself in such an intolerable position in the first place.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chamberlain resigned, so should he.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: It is all very well, Mr. Speaker, for one to stand up and endeavour to create a smoke screen by suggesting that Opposition members are speaking with the thought of political expediency. I think that it is becoming clearly evident to all hon.

members of this House—and to the electors of this province as well—that it is not really the Opposition that have political expediency in mind. It just might be that somebody on the other side of the House might have the same suggestion.

I should like to leave that aspect for just a moment—or for good—as far as this brief talk is concerned.

I should like to deal with another matter which I believe is of paramount importance to a large proportion of the people of this province. I would like to refer to the report of the Royal Commission on Industrial Safety which was presented, and which has been available, to all hon. members of this House since late in the year 1961. I should like, for the purposes of discussing this matter, to read from part of this report in order to lay the groundwork for what I hope to say a little bit later.

Page 3 of the report states:

Each of the Acts and regulations designed for the protection of workers is considered in detail in later sections of this report. And numerous recommendations are made to simplify, clarify and modernize the present legislation. Some of the Acts and regulations were found to be archaic and outmoded. This is particularly true of The Building Trades Protection Act which is almost unknown and unenforced.

Your commissioners have recommended that this Act be repealed and replaced by a construction safety Act incorporating part 8 of the National Building Code.

The ultimate responsibility for the enforcement of the proposed Construction Act and Trench Excavators Protection Act should rest with The Department of Labour, and the legislation should be amended accordingly.

At the bottom of page 4, I read again from the report:

Safety regulations relating to foundries and ionizing radiation have been formulated but not promulgated. And the workers in these fields are not at present protected by legislation.

Your commissioners recommend that regulations covering these fields be implemented at a very early date. The highest accident frequency rate in the province is in the logging industry, yet there is no legislation for the protection of workers in this field as in the sawmills.

It is recommended that this deficiency be corrected by the adoption and enforcement of logging and sawmill regulations.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the publication which arrived at the desk of all hon. members some time during the year 1961. It was entitled The Ontario Economic and Social Aspects Survey, published by the Ontario government, and for which the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Robarts) seems to take full credit since his name, along with the hon. Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. Allan), is foremost in the publication.

The purposes of The Department of Labour are set out in that publication, and I quote from page 32 of that document. Speaking of The Department of Labour this document says:

The department's primary concern is the safety and economic protection of the provincial labour force.

It seems to me that perhaps the responsible Minister, together with the senior officials of his department, should consider very carefully the purposes of his department as set out in this official publication. If the facts, Mr. Speaker, are accepted as set out in the Royal commission, this government must accept full responsibility for having failed to carry out the duties and obligations which it undertakes to fulfil when assuming office. This is all the more alarming, sir, when we stop to contemplate that Canada, and indeed Ontario, is fast changing from an agricultural to an industrial society.

The policy of appointing boards and commissions to take the responsibilities which rightly belong to the elected representatives of the people has too long been the irresponsible attitude of this government. The fact that we have now obtained a new leader of the government, sir, is of little significance. The simple fact of the matter is that it is still the same old party, and responsibility cannot be avoided by simply using a revolving door as far as the responsible Cabinet Ministers are concerned.

Let me attempt to prove my point by quoting from the commission report, in reference to the attitude of The Department of Labour officials on page 7. I quote:

The testimony of the officers of The Department of Labour generally, with respect to the adequacy of their Act, their enforcement and the number of inspections and inspectors required, indicates a degree of satisfaction that is inconsistent with the requirements of keeping pace with a growing industrial technology.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not make this statement. This statement was made by a Royal commission, which was appointed to investigate into the matter of industrial safety. And as yet insufficient action has been taken by the responsible hon. Minister to carry out the spirit and intent of that report.

We discussed earlier in this sitting a bill which came to this legislature and which simply, in effect, appointed another committee to report on the report of the committee which had already reported. This statement, Mr. Speaker, which was made by the commission dealing with the attitude of the department, with safety Acts and regulations administered by the department, points out that the department of government charged with this responsibility has been derelict in its duties and responsibilities.

This point is amplified, sir, when the House is mindful of the fact that in 1950 a Royal commission was led by Mr. Justice Roach. Many of the hazards and weaknesses of the present legislation for safety were pointed out at that time. What is the point in spending trust moneys of the people collected in taxes if the Conservative government does nothing at all with respect to the reports when they are received? The reports become nothing more or less than smoke screens.

The government may be excused for oversights when they are not brought to their attention; there can be no excuse for failure to act on many of the glaring examples which were brought to light in 1950 and which are now being brought forward in the new Royal commission report.

Page 32 of that report sets out clearly a lack of responsibility by The Department of Labour. I quote from that page:

The Department of Labour takes the position that enforcement of the Act is surely—this is speaking of The Building Trades Protection Act—

—the responsibility of municipalities.

The commission disagrees.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I also disagree. If we note that the government itself states that the safeguarding of the worker against various hazards of life and health is the major responsibility of The Department of Labour—as set out in the Ontario Economic and Social Aspects Survey which I quoted earlier—how in the name of reason can this department take the position that any Act, which deals with such matters, is solely the responsibility of the municipalities?

Since this report has been made public,

I have received communications from many of the trade unions in the Hamilton area which represent some thousands of workers. These people are concerned about the inaction in The Department of Labour to take the actions which are set out and suggested in this report. I suggest to you, sir, that if the department does not intend to take the advice and at least act in a reasonable manner on the suggestions which are presented, the commission should not have been appointed in the first place.

I suggest to you, sir, that the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) and the government opposite must assume responsibility for every person who is fatally injured, who is seriously injured or who is injured at all, if they fail to bring forward legislation at this time, which will implement the suggestions as contained in the report, and then proceed to bring them forward at a later date. I think the working force in the province has a right to expect The Department of Labour will carry out its responsibilities and will act on the various reports which they themselves have requested, and which have been made public.

I suggest in closing that the reason the commission, which was recently set up to study some of these matters, was not asked to report to this assembly—as set out in the McAndrew commission—was simply because the government did not want again to be in the embarrassing position of not acting on the suggestions put forward. The fewer people that knew about them the better. Thank you.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure, I am sure, for us all to be back here again in this honourable House resuming our work after the long recess at Christmas time.

Sir, I am going to suggest to you that the experiment which was begun two years ago of dividing our session in half, and meeting in the fall and again in the winter, has not proved quite the success that we hoped. Beside the disadvantages there are to the private members of this House—and they are considerable—I think there is a loss in the continuity of the business of the House, and I would suggest to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and to the government that, beginning next year, the House meet early in January and sit as long as is necessary and complete its work in one phase and not in two.

In this connection I would like to point out that two other important legislative bodies in Canada have already done this; the Parliament of Canada had for a time been meeting in the fall, adjourning over Christmas, and then taking up their work again; the Legislature of our sister province of Quebec had for some time been doing the same. This year, both have reverted to the former system and started their sessions in the month of January.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by speaking of your work and the impartial way in which you regulate the debates of this House, and also to thank you for the co-operation which I, as a private member of this House enjoy, and your helpfulness in many situations. I would also like to compliment the illustrious member for Peterborough (Mr. Brown) on becoming the chairman of the committee of the whole House and your deputy, Mr. Speaker.

At the beginning of the present debate the main motion was moved by the hon. member for Toronto-St. George (Mr. Lawrence) in a very fine speech which demonstrated his talents. Although it is some time since we heard him, I am sure we very well remember the impression that he made in his fine speech.

The hon. member has served for some time on the Fire Marshal's Advisory Committee and for that reason I have seen quite a bit of him in my own riding as he has come to the Ontario Fire College at Gravenhurst, in which he is very much interested, from time to time.

And then the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hamilton) who comes from the same general part of Ontario as I do, seconded the motion, and in his very fine address spoke of a number of matters of interest to our wonderful part of this wonderful province. I may say this, that both our ridings border on the constituency which has, since 1937, so ably been represented by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) and I am sure that all in this House regret the announcement which appeared in the morning paper that the hon. member for Victoria had decided to retire from service as a member of this Legislature.

One of the things that has happened since the hon. member for Victoria retired from the leadership of his party and from the position of first Minister of Her Majesty's government in Ontario, is that he has been sworn in as a privy councillor of Canada. You understand, Mr. Speaker, that in the provinces Cabinet Ministers and leaders of government are entitled to be styled honourable only while they retain office, while members of the Dominion Cabinet and others as privy councillors, bear this title or style during their whole lifetime. And thus the honour given in this way to the hon. member for Victoria has been well deserved and is satisfying, I am sure, to us all. It will be recalled that a similar honour was received some years ago by another former Prime Minister of Ontario, the hon. Mr. Drew.

And now in Ontario we all have a new Prime Minister, the hon. John Robarts. The leader of this House was chosen as the leader of his party in an entirely democratic way, in the greatest and most enthusiastic party convention ever held in the history of the province. It is in fact a convention that can hardly be matched even on the federal level.

In the present debate we have had a great deal of attention paid to that convention by Opposition speakers. The hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), who I am happy to see in his seat, took up nearly half of the time of his speech in the Throne speech debate, sneering at the convention, picking out a few details here and there, but overlooking the general worth of such a great gathering in the political life of our province.

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, of a saying of the late Dean Inge—that a fault of many would-be reformers is that they mistake the particular for the general. And certainly this is consistently true of the famous five that cluster in the area across the House behind the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald).

Then we have had other Opposition speakers doing their worst to deprecate the good results of that great historic occasion. I have said that the choice of that convention was arrived at democratically. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy), who has disappeared from the House for a few moments, said yesterday in his speech in giving what, I would say, was a somewhat semi-frivolous analysis of the convention results—that the—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): It was not semi-frivolous.

Mr. Boyer: Well, perhaps it was frivolous; Mr. Speaker, I will accept the hon. leader of the Opposition's correction that it was a frivolous analysis on the part of the hon. member for Nipissing. I would say, Mr. Speaker, he was offering to us a very wrong conclusion—which is not exactly a new experience for my friend and neighbour from Nipissing because he often gets beyond his depth—but he endeavoured to persuade you that in some manner or other the choice of the convention was dictated by the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker). Now, this is utterly wrong.

I can point out to you that federal members, and Cabinet Ministers from Ontario, were not voting as a unit for any particular candidate; nor was there any suggestion or pressure, from any top source in our party, on the delegates. The delegates voted as they saw fit, and I have to tell you that when I returned home from that convention I found that people who had watched the convention proceedings on television or heard the same by radio were very well satisfied with the choice made.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, it was not an easy choice to make between seven very highly competent and experienced public servants; but when the convention was over, those responsible here for the administration of government in this province returned to their great work and began anew under the new government to promote policies for the advantages of the people of our province.

It was necessary, sir, even though it was not the most favourable time for a government so newly in office, to call five by-elections. These have taken place, and will bring into this House five new members, all of whom will make their presence felt here, I am sure. But the advantages that the chief Opposition party had at that time are not going to be theirs again, and future election contests in this province are going to be on not only a more even basis but will certainly be to the greater advantage of the Progressive Conservative Party. The government, sir, was a new government.

I would like to point out, too, that a factor in the situation was that the third party's character had changed to some extent. People who were familiar over many years with the letters CCF and had at least some idea of what they meant, were quite unfamiliar with this new designation of a group which is pretty well the same, I suppose—NDP, whatever meaning those letters have.

Consequently there was a certain amount of confusion with respect to this third party, and I do not know whether they are going to be able to improve their lot in the political life of the province and country. They have been having quite a few troubles in their own ranks this week, although I am going to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think that the hon. gentleman who left their ranks with such a flourish at the weekend is going to be counted by most people as a sorehead—which is of course not a very appealing attitude in politics.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that day by day there is a fresh appreciation of the leadership abilities of the hon. Prime Minister of this province, and of the continuation and extension of good government under his fine leadership.

Some people have written in various places that he is not a Leslie Frost. Well, of course, he is not Leslie Frost. He is John Robarts, and he has his own particular viewpoints and his own abilities and these will become more and more apparent to the people as the days go by.

The personality of the leader of our province is a most engaging one; is a most kindly one. I know this very well from certain occasions in my own riding when the hon. Mr. Robarts has met hundreds of the people of Muskoka at official events there. He has made friends with them freely and easily. He is just that kind of man, Mr. Speaker, and the people of Ontario will soon get to know this. In this House, I say to you, since the opening day of this session, there has not been a moment, when the hon. Prime Minister has not been on top of every situation which has arisen.

I believe, sir, that I know quite a bit about the attitude of the hon. members of this House who support the government, and I can assure the House that they are united behind the hon. Prime Minister in the tasks he has undertaken. And, Mr. Speaker, he will be continuing to carry on those tasks for a good many years to come.

It is very natural, as we refer to the hon. Prime Minister to think of the advances which have been made in The Department of Education under his leadership. There have been some very notable changes, including the remodelling of secondary schools—

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): You must be a Robarts' man.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that all hon. members on this side of the House are Robarts' men.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): I am glad the hon. member did not say Roberts' men.

Mr. Boyer: Well, the hon. member can take that as read, as well.

There have been some very notable changes, including the remodelling of the secondary schools system so that in the light of world conditions—as they are in the kind of world in which we live—our young people will be better prepared to face the world. This, of course, is bound up, sir, with many matters in which the government of Canada has concern—the problems of employment and qualification for employment in an increasingly technical age—and the great success this week in Colonel Glenn's wonderful exploit demonstrates to us how the age in which we live is becoming more and more a technical age.

So it is that, by agreement with the province, Ottawa is to pay a major share in the construction of expanded facilities for composite schools, and vocational and technical schools across this province. There are to be two such schools established in the Muskoka district, with one in Parry Sound town as well. By this means every young citizen of Muskoka will have opportunity to acquire a high school education of an academic nature, or one of which vocational training will form a part.

This is a tremendous development, sir. It is one that has spread across our entire province. It could not have been undertaken, I submit, on the scale that has developed, had local municipalities been obliged to pay their share of the capital cost, and I can testify that in some cases this development has solved for some time to come the problems of accommodation for an ever increasing number of registered students.

Indeed, the registration of students in our schools is an index of the great growth and development of Ontario over recent years. You can consider that when the war ended in 1945 the number attending elementary and secondary schools was approximately 660,000. In the ten-year period from 1950 to 1960 the increase in enrolment was 646,000 pupils, and it is estimated that in the ten-year period between 1960 and 1970 the enrolment in elementary and secondary schools will add at least another 625,000 pupils.

Now, surely it is an amazing thing that in the years from 1950 to 1960 the enrolment of pupils in Ontario increased by an amount about equal to the entire enrolment at the end of World War II; and in the present decade the increase will again be about equal. In each of these two decades, then, the additional numbers of pupils have been about the same as the total school enrolment in 1945 which had been building up during the entire life of our great province's educational system.

I would say, sir, that I was mentioning some of the facts at a home and school meeting in one of the municipalities in my own riding. After I had left and gone home—after a day or so—I received a letter from one of the gentlemen who was present, who said that he had never realized that there was this great problem in school accommodation in our province. He said that for himself he would never again criticize the sales tax which was necessary for the revenues of this province.

Now I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I think it is a fact that a great many people do not understand the necessity for this tax, and we would perhaps have done a great deal better, if we had called this tax an education and health tax because it is to be used entirely in those two departments. I think people should understand that situation to a greater degree than many may.

I can remember the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) in the year 1957 telling this House that we should not talk about Ottawa giving us any more money, that we should impose taxes in Ontario, raise the revenues we need ourselves. And the sales tax was one that he mentioned. In fact, at other times, in speaking around the province of Ontario, he said that there should be an education tax and this was what he had in mind.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would ask the hon. members to keep strict order during this afternoon. It is very difficult for me at times to know who exactly has the floor. I would ask hon. members also, when the Speaker is on his feet, that at that time at least, the hon. members should all be silent. Now I would ask the hon. member to proceed.

Mr. Boyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to this tremendous development in school population that has called for many changes and has placed a great strain on the provincial treasury. In the present years we have seen the estimates for The Department of Education come to first place among all the departments of government. The expenditure for the current fiscal year will be perhaps around $270 million. This is an overall increase from the amount of $57.7 million of ten years ago, of over 400 per cent. This increase in provincial budgeting has been brought about not only by the grants paid for new classrooms, new buildings, new facilities, which have been constructed almost generally throughout the province, but also by the higher scale of grants paid. This scale is still rising.

One objective of the improved school grants has been to lessen the burden of the cost of education on real estate taxation in the municipalities, particularly on the home owner and farmer. School grants are arranged with the object of creating the greatest possible degree of equality of education, whether it is education for young people in the cities, the towns, the villages or the rural areas. I would mention to you, sir, that in the district of Muskoka we have 25 organized municipalities, 18 of which are townships. They have good schools. Practically every one of them has a new and completely up-to-date central school building.

In the years that I have had the honour to be the member for Muskoka, my wife and I have attended many official openings of new school buildings in the district of Muskoka and now we are being invited to go back to some of those same schools where they are having a party for the opening of an addition to the schools. What is happening in Muskoka I am sure is happening throughout most of Ontario. The school population of Ontario is growing at a faster rate than the general population. The general population rose from 4,471,000 in 1950 to 6,089,000 in 1960 or somewhat less than 50 per cent, while in the same period school enrolment increased from 743,000 to 1,389,000 or just under 100 per cent. This is another indication of the problem of accommodation and provision of instruction staff and so forth that we have in this province.

Now, I do not believe that the standards of education have been lowered; quite the reverse. I believe young people today are very well educated considering the far more complex world in which we live and the greater number of things that they are called upon to understand than we were when we were in school. Just lately the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) announced a change in the certification of elementary school teachers to authorize four standards of certificates. By this means there are greater incentives for teachers in our elementary schools to improve their qualifications and to keep abreast of the latest educational methods, to further education of themselves in departmental summer courses or in other ways. This is a change which will affect many, and yet I believe that all will approve of this as another step in the overall improvement of the educational system of Ontario which is one of the world's finest educational systems.

There are great problems ahead of course, in education, in which so many are involved, and so many have a part in the administration of our school system. Many of the problems of schools must be settled on the local level among the ratepayers and the parents concerned. These cannot be as well decided under our democratic system by centralizing the authority in Toronto or other places and reducing the local authority of school administration. Consequently, those who talk about the province taking over completely in the educational field, or in any other field, and paying all the expenses, are actually advocating full provincial control. The partnership in this field of thousands of devoted people who serve as school trustees should be retained, I submit, in the fullest degree.

Now, sir, there are several other matters on which I would like to speak to the House—one in particular relating to the principal factor in the economy of my own riding. I mean the tourist industry. There are several things that I would like to draw to the attention of the House in that connection. I hope that I will be able to do so in a later debate and I thank you for your attention.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, we will go on to the items that are on the order paper, tomorrow. There will be more second readings and we will resume the debate of the Throne Speech. We will resume at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.45 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1962

The House met at 10:30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: in the east and west galleries, students from Hillcrest Public School, Hamilton; in the west gallery students from Winona Public School, Winona; and under the Speaker's gallery a group of teachers from the Georgian Bay area.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. H. E. Beckett (York East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present an interim report of the select committee on The Municipal Act and related Acts. There will be a copy on every hon. member's desk.

I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, that last March a select committee of this House was appointed to inquire into and review The Municipal Act of the province, and related Acts of which there are about 46, for the purpose of modernizing, consolidating and simplifying such Acts and making such recommendations as may be necessary for their improvement.

In the related Acts are a lot of the important Acts dealing with the municipalities such as The Assessment Act, Local Improvements Act and The Planning Act—and they are all related because they deal with subjects which deal with the municipalities' everyday workings.

This committee, during the short period from April to November of last year, reviewed many Acts with various officials of different departments and different municipal governments, and received many briefs dealing with the various Acts which have been considered. As the interim report indicates, Mr. Speaker, the review of The Municipal Act and related Acts is a huge task and it will take considerably more time to prepare a final report.

I think I can say, and the hon. members of the committee will agree when I say, that it is essential that when you have a revision of any one or more of the municipal statutes you must undertake, with due regard, the whole body of the municipal law. In other words, one cannot just take one Act and revise it and consolidate it. One has to consider all the Acts related to The Municipal Act. And the committee feels that more time is required to give it a thorough study.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

APPROVAL OF IMPARTIAL REFEREES AND ARBITRATORS

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Provide for the Approval of Impartial Referees and Arbitrators.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, anticipating that the House would like an explanation on first reading, I would say there is a problem at the present time in connection with the sufficiency of arbitrators and the qualifications of them, and that the use of judges as arbitrators has been quite extensive. Sometimes people try to simplify it by saying: "Well, if we don't use judges, whom do we use?" Labour and management take the view that there are probably other persons who are competent, but generally speaking they are not known because, again generally speaking, judges have been used.

This bill provides for a panel of suitable persons; it provides for the appointment of a board of supervisors and it would be suggested that one of the chief justices of the Supreme Court would chair that board of three. The board of supervisors would review persons who might apply for use of the title, "Approved Impartial Referee and Arbitrator."

The board would also have power to cancel that approval and the action would be subject to an appeal to the Court of Appeal.

This would not mean that only persons approved would be used as impartial arbitrators. The parties concerned would have the same choice they have now, including judges. This bill certainly does not exclude judges. But there would be this panel to go to look at, if the parties wish to, and choose from.

It does not mean that there would be any work arbitrarily distributed at all; it means that there would simply be a list of names of people who had been selected by this supervisory board, who have been put in this category because of being certified as being capable to be that type of impartial referee or arbitrator. It really means, in a three-man arbitration, the middleman, the third man; or in a single arbitration, the one impartial arbitrator.

The principle is the same as with, say, The Chartered Accountants Act, where certain people who have the qualifications get a degree of chartered accountancy but that does not prohibit other people acting as accountants. The same applies here. This is a selected group of people, chosen on their capacity, certified by this board, but it is in no way compulsory.

The bill, I would point out too, is a bill that does not come into force until it is proclaimed. So there will be ample time to judge its merits and it would go, as I anticipate most of the other bills in this group would go, to the committee on legal bills.

THE POLICE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Police Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, at the present time local boards of commissioners of police are composed, by statute, of the head of the council, a county or district court judge designated by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, and a third member designated by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. The purpose of this bill is to authorize the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to designate two persons as members.

It means, in effect, that the reeve or mayor, the elected representative, still remains a statutory requirement of the composition of the commission, but that the other two are not necessarily in any particular category of citizenship. The choice would be that of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

Nothing is eliminated by this, but we are merely going a step further than we went a short time ago when we took from the statute the specific requirement that a magistrate would be the third member. At the present time, as the statute reads, there is the choice of one, and statutory requirements as to two of the three members. By this bill there would be a statutory requirement as to one, the elected representative, and a choice as to the other two. This, of course, to some extent, fits in with the previous bill that I introduced.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask one question, if I may. Does that mean that the other two appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council would have to be members of the law profession?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The answer would be "no". As I say, there is no specific statutory requirement laid down if this amendment goes through, except with respect to the one appointment.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I should like to speak on a matter which I consider of the greatest public concern. I refer of course to the Cockshutt case in Brantford which the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Gordon) discussed here yesterday.

I would like to say at the outset I agree in the main with those things which he said and would like to corroborate the facts which he stated at that time.

However, I want to say, sir, that the other night I happened to catch the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) speaking on TV. Ordinarily I would have turned off the TV because I see enough of him around here—I am sorry he is not in his seat today—but I should say that when I saw his genial countenance on TV I knew that there was some trick involved in what he was about to say. So, although ordinarily I would have turned it off, I wanted to wait for the—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I have been concerned for some time, as I think many other hon. members have, with the way in which the government abuses the device of making statements before the orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a point of order?

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) is on the point of making a straight debating speech, using a device that will prevent reply from the other hon. members. I submit his statement should be ruled out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I see no point of order on which the hon. member rose.

Mr. Bryden: I submit to you that the hon. Minister is engaged in a straight political debate but is using a device that will prevent an opportunity for reply and I submit it should be ruled out of order in all fairness.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. members will realize that on a previous occasion I mentioned that statements before the orders of the day should not be controversial or argumentative, otherwise they will raise controversy and argument. I have made that quite clear to the hon. members, in regard to statements before the orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, in fairness I must say that my statement may be controversial and for that reason I am prepared to sit down at this time and wait the earliest possible moment to continue on with my address.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a statement to make which I do not think will be controversial, at least at this stage of the game. And I think it is a statement that is of great interest to the people of the province, and perhaps to the hon. members of the House.

I have pleasure in announcing today a new, broader and bolder approach to public housing on the part of the province of Ontario, the first such approach ever made in the province and far ahead of any comparable programme that we can find in any other jurisdiction.

Hon. members: Let us hear it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Just wait for it. If the hon. members wait long enough, they are going to hear quite a few things in the course of time. This programme provides for four immediate things:

1. an immediate and forward-looking attack on the major problems of housing those presently in need of low rental housing;
2. valuable supplements to what is now available through the encouragement of various specialized types of ownership or non-profit low rental housing;
3. it will embody an effort to encourage and assist in the conservation of housing in borderline areas and of the acquisition and rehabilitation of housing earmarked for preservation in redevelopment areas; and

4. it will provide assistance in the solution of new and future housing problems in the province through the encouragement of special studies and research.

The programme upon which we are embarking is a 12-point programme and I propose to go through these 12 points this morning. It involves several proposals which will be carried out by the province alone on a trial basis, as well as three which will be co-operative efforts undertaken jointly with the federal government.

Last week the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) went to Ottawa and discussed with his federal colleague, the hon. David Walker, the Minister who is responsible for the operations of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the programme in its entirety. Studies are now being undertaken by the housing branch, jointly with CMHC, looking towards the submission to the two Ministers concerned of a joint programme on the three points requiring co-operation.

These three points are as follows:

1. The acceleration of the current federal-provincial housing programme and, in particular, the planning of steps to simplify and speed up the operation. It is hoped that shortly it will be possible to announce jointly with the federal government the results of the studies now being undertaken on this point.

2. We are also discussing jointly with our federal opposite numbers the provincial proposal to acquire existing housing for public housing purposes wherever required. Present policy and present legislation, both on the federal and provincial levels, permit the acquisition of existing housing in redevelopment areas, and it is expected that the first use of these powers will be made during the 1962-1963 budget year. If the new proposal were to be adopted, both federal and provincial legislation would have to be amended. Studies are now under way involving both the staff of the housing branch of this government and of CMHC, looking into the possibility and the value of this extension. It is felt that the acquisition of existing housing, outside of redevelopment areas, for public housing purposes might be a faster and more economical way of meeting the requirements for public housing as they exist in the province, particularly in municipalities where housing of a suitable type is available for purchase at reasonable prices.

3. The problems of providing public housing in Metropolitan Toronto are admittedly more complex than they are in any other municipality. This is due primarily to the fact that there are four governments involved in such projects; the federal, the provincial, the metropolitan and the area municipality governments. Because this complication, combined with the greater need for public housing to be constructed on a large scale, is apparent, we have proposed, and our federal partner is considering with us, the possibility of setting up the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority as a company empowered to negotiate, secure approvals, call tenders for, and construct public housing projects within that municipality. At present the Authority is authorized to administer public housing projects and to assist Metropolitan Toronto by undertaking or by participating in research studies concerning housing problems within that municipality. The advantage of extending the functions of the Housing Authority would be to provide one agency to deal with public housing rather than a partnership made up of four separate municipalities. If the details can be worked out and the scheme set in motion—and we see no reason why they cannot—it should result in the simplification and speeding up of public housing development in Metropolitan Toronto. In a sense this is an experimental project and, if successful, it may well be extended to other municipalities throughout the province. This proposal requires no change in the present legislation and it is hoped that an early conclusion to the joint studies now under way can be expected.

4. Item 4 presents a completely new departure in public housing. The province will undertake, on an experimental basis, a new form of public housing operation called a rent certificate plan. The Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority will be authorized shortly to lease existing privately owned housing units, whether single family or multiples, which are available at a moderate rental. The Authority would then place in these units their own tenants, at rents in line with the standard rent scales charged in normal federal-provincial projects such as Lawrence Heights and Regent Park South. The Authority will pay to the landlord rents determined in the lease, but will collect from the tenants rents based on their family incomes just as they would do in normal housing projects. It should be stressed that the units would be available only to families eligible for normal federal-provincial public housing. While the present intention is to carry out this particular scheme in Metropolitan Toronto, it may be possible also to carry it out in other suitable municipalities.

As I have mentioned this scheme is being undertaken on an experimental basis. The experiment is being carried out by the province alone. Should our experience prove successful, and should the federal authorities then be interested in entering into the scheme jointly with the province and the municipalities, the project may be extended. However, I must stress that the experiment will be carried out on a very limited basis only, since nothing is known in practice of the workings of such a scheme. If the programme should, for any reason, prove impracticable, we will withdraw from it entirely, placing tenants who may be in such private accommodation in new normal public housing as it becomes available.

5. We plan to explore what can be done to encourage by practical means, preventive maintenance of housing, particularly in areas which might otherwise ultimately become depressed areas resulting in expensive redevelopment. This will involve detailed studies undertaken jointly with the community planning branch of The Department of Municipal Affairs, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and, perhaps, the municipalities, before a positive scheme can be mapped out. It is hoped that by a year from now a comprehensive programme of encouragement for preventive maintenance of housing stock may be announced.

6. Meanwhile, the programme envisages as its sixth point the provision of assistance to individuals and to municipalities to assist them in acquiring and rehabilitating housing units in borderline districts which do not yet acquire urban development. The province possesses, under the terms of The Housing Development Act, the power to guarantee loans. Studies will be carried out to see how such a plan can be worked out. Similar guarantees or assistance could be available to municipalities interested in acquiring and clearing non-salvageable residential properties in borderline areas, to make way for public purposes, e.g. public buildings, parks, etc. It should be stressed, however, that details will have to be worked out jointly with the community planning branch of The Department of Municipal Affairs, and with various interested municipalities so that assistance of this type will not be given except in areas which are worth preserving. It is also hoped that the joint discussions now under way between provincial officials and those of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will result in joint action on a federal-provincial basis as an ultimate possibility in this field as well.

7. We feel strongly that in addition to accelerating and improving the public housing programme we should also look at other possible approaches to housing of low income families which might provide acceptable alternatives, or, in many cases, preferable alternatives to the present system. There are numerous possibilities under study but it is proposed to initiate this year a programme of encouragement for limited dividend housing. At present The Department of Welfare makes grants in aid of limited dividend housing companies constructing limited housing for the elderly. The housing branch makes, without charge, surveys of need and demand for municipalities interested in promoting such projects. In addition to continuing the present programme we now intend to work out a schedule of grants to limited dividend housing companies constructing projects for family housing and for housing of physically handicapped groups requiring special types of housing units, e.g. paraplegics or the blind. The proposed grants will be paid only to limited dividend companies operating on a non-profit basis. They will not be made available to limited dividend projects carried out by private builders operating on a 5 per cent profit basis. The amount of the grants in individual cases will be determined in accordance with the needs of the municipality concerned and the purpose of the grants is, of course, to encourage the development of such projects and to make possible the reduction of their rents to a level which can be met by low income families.

8. We intend, and this is our eighth point, to do what we can to encourage housing co-operatives producing single family housing units for ultimate individual ownership. Our purpose in doing this is to stimulate the active co-operation of persons willing to assist in constructing their own houses since these are mainly from the same income groups as are public housing tenants. The assistance would take the form of assistance in securing interim financing, that is to say, financing up to the time when mortgage money becomes available to the co-operative. We are studying a plan to assist by guaranteeing loans for interim financing and by providing technical advice and supervision during the interim financing period. Similar programmes have been carried out in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and in certain areas, mainly those of the smaller communities, they have achieved very notable results. Talks with groups interested in sponsoring co-operative housing will commence very shortly so that the study can go forward.

9. The public housing programme, as it has been carried out up to now, cares mainly for the needs of the larger organized municipalities. There are, however, other needs within the province. The ninth item of our programme deals with studies to be undertaken to determine these special needs and to determine the methods by which those needs may be met and the problem solved. The study will look particularly at the needs of communities too small for the present public housing programme; at the special housing such as housing of Indians who have left the reserve to work in mines or mills, etc., and the special problems of new industries locating in unorganized territories. These and many others will be examined and plans worked out to meet their special requirements. Further changes in our programme can then be initiated to take care of these problems.

10. Our 11th and 12th points deal with research and educational grants. Before touching on them, however, I would like to mention, as point 10, that we intend to set up, as soon as possible, a permanent housing advisory committee, either as an off-shoot of the economic council or independently. This committee will be made up of representatives from the various parts of the province, of the various interested professions and special groups whose advice and assistance can be of value. Its purpose will be to assist in the continuous development of the province's housing programme in line with the changing needs of the province and to ensure that the programme also meets the sectional requirements which may vary considerably from one part of the province to another. Membership in this committee will be announced shortly when arrangements concerning its setup have been completed.

11. This leads me to the last two points of this programme. Number 11 deals with grants for research, etc. While there has been in the past no formal policy for such grants, provisions have now been made in the housing branch's budget to make such payments possible. The purpose is to encourage interested bodies or individuals to undertake studies on subjects related to housing, and particularly public housing in Ontario, and to foster research projects aimed at clarifying the general problems within the province and assisting in their solution.

12. Finally, as our 12th point, we are planning to work out, jointly with CMHC and those connected with the house building industry, a means of assisting the house building industry in the form of fellowships or educational grants for individuals in suitable subjects to be determined, to promote development of new ideas or better techniques within the industry. CMHC, on behalf of the federal government, already does a large amount of this type of work, and the province is prepared to carry out its programme either on its own, or jointly with CMHC, with a particular eye to ideas or techniques of special value within the province of Ontario.

I should stress that this programme is being undertaken by the province on an experimental basis. It is obvious that we cannot leap into many of the matters that I have mentioned here without further study and consultation with interested persons and bodies which have had experience in these fields. It is hoped, however, to make an immediate commencement on a number of the proposals and to clarify our position on the others as quickly as the progress of our studies becomes available and we are able to make final decisions as to the actual action that we are going to take.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) advise this House whether it is the intention of the government to introduce any legislation at this session to implement the intentions that were outlined here?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, there will be some legislation, Mr. Speaker. I cannot tell the hon. leader of the Opposition specifically in regard to which point, but there will be as the programme is developed. It will require amendments which will be brought in here. I have not introduced them in the House yet.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Do we have the assurance of the hon. Prime Minister that specific legislation will be introduced during this session to implement the entirety of this programme?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Not the entire programme. Some of it does not require legislation, as I pointed out; some of it does and some of it will require joint studies. As I say, we are conducting studies now with the federal people. But we intend to implement the programme. I have given the whole programme this morning so that hon. members can see the broad range of what we are doing. Some parts of it will require legislation which will be introduced here at this session.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Prime Minister give assurance to this House that we will have an opportunity to debate this whole programme?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, I would think yes. The vehicle for debate will be the legislation which we introduce and I would be quite happy to debate anything that I have said here this morning, in whatever piece of legislation that we introduce, should the Opposition choose to raise it.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): We are all going to be in favour of this anyway.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): This is the first opportunity I have had to speak in the Throne debate and I am very pleased to do so.

At the outset, sir, I should like to commend you, as is the custom, and I do not do this in any perfunctory way, for the fashion in which you carry on your duties as Speaker of this House. I think all of us on both sides of the House will admit, in their calmer moments, even though sometimes there are intimations to doubt your rulings, sir, that you are doing your job in a very competent and impartial way.

Now to get into those matters which I was about to discuss before the orders of the day—and I am grateful for this opportunity of speaking now because it gives me much greater time to go into the details I would like to go into—I started out by saying that I wanted to speak about the Cockshutt incident in Brantford. And I reminded the House that as the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Gordon) had spoken on this matter yesterday during his Throne debate speech, and also I indicated that I supported what he had to say and corroborated those things which he told the House because they are factual.

I should have gone on yesterday before the orders of the day, sir, but I felt that I should wait because I wanted to check certain facts and I believe it is only right that hon. members in this House when speaking should be sure of their facts and not just repeat hearsay evidence or even those things which they make up, which come here as outright falsehoods.

Now, sir, I want to come to the address made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) over TV on February 21. As I indicated in my opening remarks, I happened to have TV on at the time when his smiling countenance appeared on the screen. I kept the TV tuned on, as I say, because it was a most unusual condition it seemed to me for him to be in. I am used to having him appear in this House with his lip curled and his fangs bared, waiting to get at some juicy morsel, or smear somebody, and it occurred to me that I should wait and see just what the gimmick was. Well, I did not have to wait very long, Mr. Speaker, because as he got into his address and turned that smiling countenance to one of more serious mien, it became obvious that he was out to get somebody and this is what he did. That word is spelled "m-i-e-n" but it could be spelled the other way with equal force.

He got into the Cockshutt matter, but what disturbed me even beyond that—not only the smearing of this company, but the smear he made on the fine city of Brantford—but in addition he got into the ideology of his party and left the impression that only through economic planning, as he called it, could many of these great abundant gifts from his party be made available to the province of Ontario.

Here was the tenor of his remarks. I quote from the manuscript which he read from, the night that he gave this famous telecast:

Now, the Cockshutt firm, under the new name, CKP Developments, is going to take its millions, earned over the years from our agricultural communities, and invest them in real estate in Florida.

So all the people involved in an old Canadian firm, with 1,400 jobs and millions of dollars, have been sacrificed to the greater investment prospects in Florida real estate. That's free enterprise.

Thirdly, thousands of Canadian farmers who bought Cockshutt equipment have no assurance that they will be able to get parts and service, so they may have a $1,000 machine idle on their hands for want of a $5 part.

In fact, this whole Cockshutt deal provides a most illuminating commentary on free enterprise, and the problems of government in implementing any real economic planning.

Then he goes on, paragraph after paragraph, and ends up by saying: "That's free enterprise in action!"

Then somebody lowered the boom.

I got into this because Mr. G. E. Vincent, president and general manager, wrote me, dated February 21, the same night as his address, and he starts out by saying:

It has come to the writer's attention that Mr. Donald MacDonald, leader of the N.D.P., is to make a speech on radio and television tonight, and that copies of this speech have already been distributed to the press gallery.

Now I looked into this and I found out that the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) knew that his statements about Cockshutt Farm Equipment Limited were not correct before he made them. Hours before his broadcast time, the CBC in Toronto and at Ottawa had been advised of the inaccuracies of the statements he was to make. Yet he persisted in going ahead with his programme of half truths, innuendoes, mis-statements and falsehoods. This is all given in the letter which was indicated by the hon. member for Brantford yesterday.

I say that I listened with great interest to the remarks made by the hon. member for Brantford yesterday. He was quoting from evidence he had received first-hand; I checked on the information, I find it to be true and I corroborate it; and these are not falsehoods coming from some big American "whatever the term used by the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) is."

Now I know this will not be too acceptable to the hon. members opposite in the socialist group, but nevertheless it is going to be said no matter how long we have to stay here. I am happy in a way that the hon. member for York South did go ahead with his remarks, although they were a smear on the company, the city of Brantford, and probably will result in discouraging other industries locating in that city. As a result of his broadcast we now find—we all are aware—what he and his party mean when they talk about "economic planning."

These CCF socialist, NDP-ers, are bound that they are going to bring economic planning to this province, to this country; and now, after these disclosures over TV, it can well be said that the socialists are caught with their plans down. That is spelled "p-l-a-n-s."

Now what the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) and his national leader should be really telling Canadians is what they will do for Canada with their economic planning. The attack Wednesday night—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I am in no hurry, Mr. Speaker; I can outwait all of them.

The attack Wednesday night by the hon. member for York South on Brantford and one of its main industries is a classic example of just what he and his fellow members of the NDP mean by economic planning.

Let us examine how the ideology preached by the hon. member for York South is able to distort and twist facts, all in the name of democracy and economic planning. Indeed, he made no effort to learn the true facts, and ignored them when they were brought to his attention through the CBC prior to the broadcast.

He charged in his broadcast that all the people involved in an old Canadian firm, with 1,400 jobs and millions of dollars, have been sacrificed to greater investment prospects in Florida real estate. He sneeringly labelled this as free enterprise.

What he did not tell his viewers was that the old Cockshutt labour force was approximately 1,200 people. They worked an average of only 7 months per year, and this figure includes foundry and forge employees. White-Oliver, who purchased the old Cockshutt firm, did not buy the foundry and forge because both were old and decidedly inefficient and unprofitable.

He did not advise his viewers that the new Cockshutt is farming out its foundry and forge work to local industry, thereby cutting costs and at the same time assisting other Canadian companies in maintaining their labour force. The new Cockshutt's labour force—less foundry and forge—will build up to one greater than previously carried and will have a 12-month production schedule rather than a six-to-nine month schedule.

I got this information first-hand, contained in a letter to me, as I say, from G. E. Vincent, the president and general manager of Cockshutt Farm Equipment of Canada Limited, dated February 21, 1962, in case somebody wants to refer to it some time in the future.

Nor did the hon. member for York South feel it necessary to report that this Brantford plant of the Cockshutt company is able to build several machines such as swathers, combines, discers and cultivators more efficiently and economically than any plant in the United States. Contrary to the hon. member's view, the Brantford plant will build these items not only for the Cockshutt organization, but for United States plant and the export market as well.

The charge by the hon. member for York South that farmers will have no assurance of getting repair parts for Cockshutt farmers is just another example of that irresponsibility licensed by his particular brand of economic planning and socialism.

The fact of the matter is that Cockshutt has a tremendous stock of repairs in all parts of Canada. The company maintains this stock of repairs and certainly will continue to add to it as new machines are produced.

For the hon. member for York South to suggest, as he did, that a farmer would be stuck with a $1,000 machine for want of a $5 part is the worst kind of irresponsibility because it is a deliberate attack on an industry which is vital to the future of Brantford. His charges, now beyond recovery, will undoubtedly cause industries desiring to locate in the Brantford area to have second thoughts. And this is one of the most dastardly parts of his whole speech.

Despite the terrible damage the hon. member for York South has done to Brantford, at least we can all now be on our guard. If this is the economic planning envisaged by the CCF-socialist-NDP group, it is well to know what they really mean when they talk about economic planning. They really mean half truths, false statements, innuendoes and the destruction of the plans of communities to attract new industry.

Every citizen of Ontario should realize now what these socialists would do to their own municipalities in the name of economic planning.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my friends from the Liberal ranks for their co-operation in helping the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) to make a statement that he could not make earlier under the rules.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would point out that I called the hon. member to order immediately. I would also point out to hon. members of this House that any hon. member who wishes to rise on a point of order is certainly privileged to do so at any time. However, I am sure you will agree the Speaker must bear in mind that if hon. members abuse that privilege, it is the duty of the Speaker not to recognize them. Now there was no point of privilege as claimed by the hon. member and I would ask him to withdraw what he said, since there was no point of privilege.

Mr. Bryden: I would like to ask, sir, on what basis I am asked to withdraw a statement which is a plain statement of fact? I will apologize to you, sir, if my point was not a valid point of privilege but as to making a statement of fact, I do not see on what basis I should be asked to withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the hon. member there is no equivocation about what I ask; it was not a point of privilege on which he raised his supposed point. Therefore what he said must be withdrawn, purely on that basis.

Mr. Bryden: On the basis that it was not a point of privilege in your view, sir, I will withdraw it.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, may I at the outset take this opportunity to thank you for the splendid way in which you have been guiding this House. I think you carry out the duties of your office with dignity and firmness, and as a member of this House, I am grateful that we have an outstanding person such as yourself in this office of Speaker of the House.

Instead of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) rising on a question of privilege, I think I should have done so. And I would have, except I had this opportunity to speak, because I would not want to be accused of ever co-operating with the Tories. That is something I have never been guilty of doing. I assure the House I do not work along with them at all.

I would like to congratulate, Mr. Speaker, the newly-elected hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson), the newly-elected hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) and also the newly-elected hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Harris).

The two Liberals who have been elected, the hon. members for Kenora and Brant are, I think, something like the pathfinder squadrons that they had in the air force during the war. They set out to find the target, and when they found the target they blasted away and then led the way for the many planes that followed later. Hon. members opposite are going to find that there are going to be many Liberals follow, to such an extent that we are going to take over the government the next time there is an election.

So I thank especially the hon. member for Kenora and the hon. member for Brant for the fine way in which they are leading us on to greater heights and to better government for this province.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House have had quite a bit to say about the need for better health services in Ontario. We have done our best to emphasize the pressing urgency of better services, especially in regard to mental health. The Throne speech always pays generous lip service to the problem but little else. It is not that nothing has been done. Grudgingly, after public embarrassment such as in the case of the Orillia Hospital for Retarded Children, the government makes some small improvement, but a very feeble improvement in comparison with the problem that faces us here in Ontario.

This government will not lead either in the health field or any other field unless pressured to do so by public opinion. That is why I am suggesting a select committee of this Legislature to investigate the state in this province of mental health services and how they can be improved.

I am well aware that this government often uses select committees and Royal commissions as excuses for putting off the making of decisions; to give the appearance of taking action but in effect avoiding this responsibility for leadership. However, a select committee can serve at least one good purpose. It brings into focus public attention on the problem or problems being studied. And public attention is most certainly needed in the field of mental health.

It is shocking how little leadership is shown by this government, when one remembers that mental health—or the lack of it—represents the biggest single social and medical problem in Canada. In its various forms, mental illness keeps more people in hospitals than all other diseases combined, including cancer, heart disease, tuberculosis and every other crippling and killing disease.

In any single day, about 70,000 sick people are living in Canada's mental hospitals; as many people as would comprise a city about the size of Saskatoon, twice as many as Moncton. In Ontario, there are 23,000 beds in our mental hospitals and in a typical year they are used to treat 32,000 patients over and above the very large number who are seen in outpatients' clinics and counselling services.

The true cost of mental illness is tremendous. One expert calculates that the cost of running Canada's mental hospitals for a year, paying welfare charges for families of the mentally ill plus the indirect cost of loss of earnings, family breakdowns, suicides, crimes, accidents, if eliminated would:

Wipe out personal income taxes for every Canadian earning up to $5,000 annually; or present all newly-weds with a $10,000 home; or put a deep freeze unit in every home in Canada; or provide university scholarships to train 50,000 doctors, nurses, dentists, teachers and engineers at no cost to the individual.

This problem of mental health has become such a vast and difficult problem striking equally across all groups of society regardless of race or economic status because government, and this government of Ontario in particular, does very little to solve the problem. Let us take a look at how little is actually done.

There is a hospital for emotionally disturbed children at Thistletown, which is one of our few efforts in research in mental health. There is a brand new, well equipped laboratory for research in this hospital, but it has been empty since the Ontario government took over the hospital in 1957. This government is either not interested or is incapable of finding any qualified personnel to operate the laboratory.

One director of a mental institution in Ontario who looks after 1,600 patients estimated that 1,000 of these 1,600 could still benefit from intensive treatment if the facilities were available. Tremendous strides have been made in the knowledge of mental illness but little or nothing is being done, especially by the government of Ontario.

It is known that occupational therapy is of tremendous help in curing mental illness, yet in spite of all the knowledge that is available to this government, the total number of trained occupational therapists in the provincial mental health service is 44 to look after a patient population of 23,000, the majority of whom could benefit enormously from having some productive pastime.

In one mental hospital in Ontario that has

1,800 patients, there are only two occupational therapy workers.

Despite the fact that every year 15,000 mentally-defective children are born in Canada and that we now have a national total of 500,000, we are doing next to nothing to study this problem, although it is known real progress could be made if personnel were supplied. Ontario is typical of this neglect.

We in Ontario not only lack highly skilled help, we also lack regular staff in our mental hospitals. We spend only $5 per day per patient in our mental hospitals. A bed in a general hospital where patients are treated for physical illness or injury costs the public up to $30 a day.

When one considers that our greatest problem in regard to health is mental health, it is obvious that this government is not doing nearly what is required to meet the problem.

One other matter that has given cause for discontent and has been one of the main reasons why we have not been able to obtain proper staff in our mental hospitals, is the problem of pay of attendants in mental institutions. Attendants in mental institutions must play a difficult, dual role of nurse and warder, and yet they get far less than guards in the Don jail or in penitentiaries; and certainly even these guards and jailers are underpaid. The comparative figures are as follows:

An attendant in a mental hospital for the first two years gets from $2,760 to $3,120, and then $3,120 to $3,600; supervisors receive from $3,600 to $4,050. A guard in a jail starts at $3,480 to $4,050; a corporal receives $4,050 to $4,400; a sergeant from $4,400 to $4,800; and a lieutenant from $4,800 to $5,250.

It is reported in a Toronto daily newspaper that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) has promised to look into this. I will venture to say that he will look into it and then look the other way. The hon. Minister says he is interested and I do not doubt him, but it is more than obvious that the all-powerful treasury board in this Tory government has little interest and could not care less about mental health in the province of Ontario.

Our federal government allots $1.50 per head per year for research on defence, and $3 on atomic energy; but we spend only 4.50 cents per head per year on research into the cause, diagnosis and treatment of illnesses like mental derangement and retardation. The present hon. Minister of Health started a mental health research foundation and from private resources, $500,000 was donated. The government has not seen fit to add to these private funds, nor has much assistance been given to the mental health research foundation.

This government's approach to the mental health problem over the years is in many ways best illustrated by the Penetang Hospital. There are two divisions, as hon. members probably all know, of the Fort Penetanguishene Hospital. One is the Oakridge or maximum security division housing 270 men detained either because of alleged connection with some crime, or because as inmates of another Ontario hospital they have proved unmanageable.

The other division houses 200 men and 200 women patients. These patients are either there on purely civil grounds, either as voluntary patients or because they have been medically certified as insane. Also mixed in with these people is another group of persons held behind bars in Oakridge who have committed no crime nor have they given any trouble. Leonard Bertin, the Toronto Daily Star science editor, has reported that their presence there is: "a reflection on the unfortunate state of the rest of the hospitals, where buildings are long outdated and are in some cases a disgrace to the province."

It is possible for a person to be committed to a hospital for the mentally ill such as the hospital at Penetang for the rest of his natural life. He can be committed to that hospital, either by a court or by physicians, and can be kept there until he dies without any opportunity of a review of his case except by a review of the staff of the hospital; a staff incidentally which is undermanned and underpaid.

Some years ago, there was what has been called the McClure commission which investigated the cases of those people who used insanity as a defence when charged with a crime. This commission suggested that every year a board of independent experts should review the cases of each of the judicial patients in provincial hospitals.

These recommendations were not accepted by the provincial government here in Ontario, but it seems that this will be the solution to some extent in solving the problem of not only those mental patients who are held in our institutions because they pleaded mental insanity, but also it would provide a review board for those people who have been kept in our mental institutions because they were voluntary patients or because they were committed for other reasons.

Mr. Speaker, we had a discussion here yesterday on the bill of rights for people in Ontario. But when we bear in mind that there are people in our mental hospitals that could be kept there for the rest of their lives with little or no recourse, hon. members can see that there are still many facets in our laws that we must improve if we are really going to give individuals in this province a real and true bill of rights.

Our provincial hospital at Penetang has been called a "provincial disgrace", a place for voluntary patients kept in buildings that are long outdated. I am glad to see that it is reported in our newspapers that the hon. Minister of Health hopes to rebuild the section of Penetang which is reserved for non-judicial patients from the local surrounding area, which includes Collingwood and Barrie "as soon as funds are available in seven or eight years".

Imagine, Mr. Speaker, despite all the publicity that has been given to this problem, despite the fact that this is an obvious disgrace to the province of Ontario, despite the fact that the way we conduct the Penetang hospital is contrary to everything that medical science tells us is the right way, this government talks in terms of "hoping to do something". Imagine! Hoping to do something in seven or eight years.

Well, they are not going to be here much longer and there is going to be a new government in this province and the work will be done long before that time.

Despite statements published by the hon. Minister of Health assuring that the police have only to ask the assistance of an Ontario hospital to get an emergency case admitted for treatment, Ontario still continues to jail the mentally ill; and the mentally-ill people who really have a rough time in the province of Ontario are those who have committed no crime. Under Ontario law, as now interpreted by the legal advisers of the mental health department, provincial mental health hospitals may not accept persons charged as mentally sick by the police unless they have been charged as well with another crime. In other words, as long as a person has committed some offence against the law, a magistrate can send such a man to a hospital for examination but if a mentally-ill person has been picked up by the police but has not been charged with a crime, the mentally-ill person is merely lodged in jail.

This fact was brought prominently to the attention of the Ontario public by the warden of the Renfrew county jail who complained of the archaic conditions at his jail which have resulted in violent mental patients being tied to cell beds for a period of days. The Canadian Press reports read as follows.

This is from Pembroke. It is entitled:

MENTAL PATIENTS TIED TO JAIL BEDS—WARDEN

Archaic conditions at Renfrew county jail have resulted in violent mental patients being tied to cell beds "for a period of days", jail warden Thomas Chambers said yesterday.

Reporting to County Council on "utterly impossible" conditions in the jail, Mr. Chambers said that during the last two months the jail has accommodated 10 mental patients.

"Three of these were extremely violent and dangerous. In some instances mental patients have to be strapped to the bed and tied hand and foot for a period of days. In some cases they are kept in jail for a period of 10 days to two weeks before their admittance to hospital can be arranged."

Mr. Chambers said 25 to 35 men are jammed into cells designed 50 years ago for seven or eight prisoners. First offenders, hardened criminals, and alcoholics of all ages were imprisoned together, with no means of segregation.

Two prisoners nearly succeeded in sawing their way out of cells two months ago, he said.

"The situation can be remedied in only one way—expansion", the warden told the council.

Certainly from that press clipping, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that at fault is not only The Department of Health but The Department of Reform Institutions and The Department of the Attorney-General.

Protests of Warden Thomas Chambers brought about a press release from the Canadian Mental Health Association which in part read as follows:

Time and again this association has pointed out that mentally-ill people have been sent to jail by Ontario law officers and has called for a halt to this barbarous practice.

Said Bertrand Gerstein, President of the Canadian Mental Health Association, Ontario Division:

Yet somehow it continues despite statements published by the Minister of Health assuring that the police have only to ask the assistance of an Ontario hospital to get an emergency case admitted for treatment.

We think it is high time for the Attorney-General, the magistrates, and other law officers to take some positive action to get mentally-disturbed people to emergency quarters in local hospitals. Overcrowded or not, jail is no more a place for mentally-ill persons than for a coronary victim. Both need medical treatment quickly, not penal custody concluded Mr. Gerstein.

Now the hon. Minister of Health has publicly given assurance that no person suspected of being mentally ill should ever be taken to jail by police or remanded there by magistrates. However, despite the hon. Minister's assurance, the practice continues.

Officials in the government say, and I quote: "The law is the law and a ministerial direction cannot change it". The law states that where a person is charged with an offence in addition to the charge of being mentally ill, he may be remanded to hospital; but a person who is charged only with being mentally sick shall be sent to a safe and comfortable place.

Because the mental hospitals are not specifically named as a safe and comfortable place, the legal officials seem to think that mental hospitals should therefore not be considered as such. I know that in reply to a question, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) said in this House that he considers a mental hospital a safe and comfortable place, and I am glad to hear that, but despite what he says and despite what the hon. Minister of Health says, in practice the jailing of the mentally ill still goes on.

There are only four beds set apart in the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital for mentally-ill patients picked up by the police and there is usually a long waiting list.

Two recent cases, both reported in local newspapers, indicate what normally happens. One was of a woman who caused a commotion in an Avenue Road church declaring that she was the daughter of God and demanding the money owing her.

She was taken by police to the city hall and seen by Justice of the Peace Stuart A. Williamson whom Senior Magistrate Elmore has directed to deal with such cases. Mr. Williamson explained that he had no alternative but to remand her to the Don jail for examination and she was taken off screaming: "I may be ill but I am not a criminal."

The second case was a man who removed his clothes in a city hall cell and then naked started climbing the cell bars. It was later established that he had distributed $1,000 among people he met earlier in the day. He too was remanded to the Don jail.

Persons who have committed no crimes end up in the Don jail because they are mentally ill.

Once a person has been seen in the Don jail by doctors and diagnosed by them as mentally ill, city hall authorities rush committal papers to the mental health branch at Queen's Park by despatch rider. From then on, the business of finding accommodation in an Ontario hospital and informing the Don jail is normally dealt with by mail. A sick person may remain in the cells for anything from 48 hours to eight days or more. Protestations of the hon. Minister of Health and the hon. Attorney-General to the contrary, very little has been done about this problem.

Now, as late as yesterday evening the hon. Minister of Health was quoted in the paper as the result of his discussions with the Metro welfare committee as follows, and this is from the Toronto Daily Star, yesterday's paper:

Ontario Health Minister Matthew Dymond told Metro welfare committee today his department will look after apparent mental health patients detained by police. In a letter Dr. Dymond said Ontario hospitals at Toronto, New Toronto and Whitby will accept patients at any time but he said they would have to be sent there by the police.

In other words, the same procedure as I have outlined just before making this quotation. It still prevails, that sick persons will still remain in a jail from 48 hours to 10 days simply because they are mentally ill, not because they have committed a crime.

Metro Chairman William Allan said he would ask the police commission to investigate arrangements with the health department to have persons detained in hospital instead of at the Don Jail if they appear to be suffering from a mental illness. I am convinced this distressing matter can be solved quickly, he said. [That is Metro Chairman Allan.] Alderman Margaret Campbell said it was remarkable that the health department had always had facilities while the issue had been debated in public. Swansea Reeve Dorothy Haig said, they just have not bothered.

Well, I do not believe facilities always have been available here in the city of Toronto.

We have only four beds for mentally-ill people picked up by the police in the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital and our hospitals here have far too many people in them now. I can agree if the government says there is not proper space, but if there is not proper space this has been a neglect of the government for a period of 18 years and the responsibility still rests with this government. I think Swansea Reeve Dorothy Haig speaks the truth when she says: "They just have not bothered."

The last part of this newspaper clipping I think has some good advice for the hon. Minister of Health.

Last week Dr. John Griffin, director of the Canadian Mental Health Association, said use of the Don jail for holding mentally-ill prisoners is condemned by police magistrates, municipal officials and psychiatrists, yet nothing was being done to stop it. He suggested banging a few heads together at the official level.

I think possibly the hon. Minister of Health should bang the heads of the treasury board together and get some funds to do something about this pressing problem of mental health.

Dr. Barry Boyd, the newly appointed superintendent of the Penetang Hospital, has said, in referring to the problem of the mentally ill:

This is not a problem that can be solved in Penetang—it is one for the community to solve. Every intelligent citizen should stay awake for a night or two and ponder over it.

That is why I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that a select committee of this Legislature be appointed to look into the problems facing the mentally ill. Perhaps, the resultant publicity will cause enough public interest to pressure this government into far more than it has been doing. Mental health is a major health problem facing our province and our country today and yet government sleeps on. Let us have a select committee and perhaps, just perhaps, this government will try to do something to improve the situation of these mentally ill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I sit down I would like to address myself to one more problem that is facing not only the province of Ontario but all of Canada; and of course I am mainly interested in how it affects Ontario.

In Ontario today, there exists a social problem of such magnitude that it can be rightly called a crisis, and this crisis will continue to worsen unless we take immediate steps to stop it. Thousands of adults are unable to find satisfactory employment, and the consequent unemployment is caused at least in part by insufficient education and obsolete occupational skills. This situation will become more acute with increasing automation of business and industry.

The Canadian economy is bound to suffer, but worst of all, the spiritual and social cost to the community is bound to be enormous. Education, re-training and upgrading of skills is not the whole answer to our problem but it can go a long way in solving this crisis.

In Toronto alone, we spend $1.5 million per week in unemployment benefits to assist the unemployed. We must see to it that these people get more than just a government cheque. We must help the people to help themselves. The unemployment insurance cheque must be combined with opportunities for rehabilitation through work, job training and community work designed to pave the way to a productive place in society for those who were once unskilled.

This is the situation in Canada today: over 70 per cent of Canada's unemployed in one recent year had no schooling past Grade 8; one-third of Canada's children are still leaving school with less than Grade 8 education; Canada has only half as many skilled workers in proportion to population as the United States—one-third as many as Germany.

I was surprised to learn that, Mr. Speaker. We think that we are well advanced, but in proportion to our population we only have half the skilled workers as the United States, only one-third the skilled workers that Germany has.

To continue: a recent national employment service survey in Toronto showed 19,340 jobs for skilled workmen going unfilled and 23,000 unplaced workers—unplaced because they could not qualify for the 19,000 empty positions; an estimated 2 million Canadians are functionally illiterate today, that is, they are not capable of taking and applying further training; the core of unemployable persons is getting larger. Last winter it was estimated at 80,000—and now the estimates run as high as 200,000 for all of Canada.

In the tremendous prosperity of the forties and fifties, many hundreds of thousands of Canada's young people left school for the high-paid unskilled jobs in construction and road-building and mining work. During that period, the number of potential job-seekers in Canada rose by approximately only 5,000 a year.

Then the "war babies" came upon the labour market. By about 1957, there appeared 100,000 teenagers a year on the market. The crop in 1958 and 1959 was 111,000.

To quote from a report by A. V. Pigott, director of the Canadian Association for Adult Education, he says:

In 1960-1970, 1 million young people will need employment at a time when room must be made for immigrants and married women—a time when there are fewer people living on investments and more elderly people hoping to work. The problem will not be solved by keeping out skilled immigrants—we need skills, married women and older workers—we need their ability and experience.

Unemployment is striking hardest at the younger people. In March, 1960, in the city of Toronto 74 per cent of the heads of families and 48 per cent of the single people unemployed and receiving relief were under 40 years of age.

This is a tremendous social waste, Mr. Speaker, and it is coming about because governments, and particularly this government, are taking very little or no interest.

During the autumn of 1960, nearly 40 per cent of the recipients of welfare in Scarborough were under 29 years of age. Even those young people without adequate training who do find jobs must accept those with little future or security. Generally, Grade 10 is required even for menial jobs and Grade 12 for the lowest position in an office. Ontario provides an example of the numbers lost to even these jobs.

For example, in a recent year, we had 397,000 pupils entering elementary schools; 33 per cent dropped out before high school; 35 per cent dropped out before junior matriculation; 24 per cent were out before senior matriculation, and only eight per cent entered university.

Two-thirds of these students, Mr. Speaker, dropped out before junior matriculation; in other words less than one-third of these students are available for training in a nation which needs trained men.

About one-quarter of the secondary school students in Canada are enrolled in vocational courses, however, about three-quarters of those who leave secondary school obtain jobs which are largely technical and for which training ought to be of a technical or vocational nature.

When we say that one-quarter get trained but three-quarters of our students go into vocational work, we can say that we are sending out a huge number of people onto the market that are untrained.

At present, good training facilities are not being provided for this large group of the population. It would appear that far less than two-thirds of the students who will go into vocational occupations have an opportunity for technical training.

If we do not attack this problem, Mr. Speaker, of the poorly trained and unskilled, we will have to pay the bills of our neglect in the form of relief, unemployment insurance at an ever increasing rate. Today, the bill for unemployment insurance benefits alone amounts to $500 million a year. Added to this are the costs of family breakdowns, crime and social unrest.

If we leave a hard core of thousands of people who are permanently unemployed and eventually unemployable, we will nurture a cancer that will give us nothing but trouble in the future. It should be evident to all that we must be able to afford to spend large sums of money on imparting skills to people whether they are employed or unemployed. If we make it possible for those who are already semi-skilled to upgrade themselves, they will climb the ladder and leave room at the bottom for those who at the present time have no employment.

If the thousands of people on whom we spend half a billion dollars a year in unemployment relief had been at work, they would have earned more than double that amount—double the figure again to cover the production they would have brought about, add one job for every so many employed being necessary for their service, and so it goes on.

Unemployment is an unhappy and an expensive condition. Education and training can do much to solve the problem.

And mind you, Mr. Speaker, I am not saying it solves the problem entirely. I am saying that it can do much, it can go a long way to solve the problem of unemployment.

Seventy per cent of British university students are supported on generous terms. The students in Russia receive a salary. In Canada, one student in six receives some kind of financial support.

The demand for unskilled workers is dropping off and will continue to do so. The term semi-skilled is taking on a new meaning at a higher level than it had formerly. Many people are as obsolete in the world of work as are the tools they handled and the machines they tended a few years ago. From 1949 to 1959, employment in Canada increased by 24 per cent. The changes in occupation took place as follows:

Now remember that our employment increased in ten years 24 per cent, but employment in the professions increased 71 per cent; the skilled 38 per cent; the white collar 34 per cent; the semi-skilled only 19 per cent; and the other types, that is the unskilled, decreased 27 per cent. So the unskilled worker and the semi-skilled worker are caught in a vise and this will become a cancer of the future in our social life and in our economic life if we do not do something to solve it forthwith. The demand—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Our federal-provincial trade training school programme, costing over $100 million, instituted last year, was to take care of the situation the hon. member mentions. Our government acts without delay in these matters.

Mr. Trotter: I hear the hon. Minister from Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope) and I will give him very shortly figures as to the record of this government and how little they have been doing.

The demand is definitely in the field of the skilled worker. It is obvious that government is going to have to concern itself much more with the training and re-training of adults and with pursuing the problem of preparing youth for the world of work.

It is a fact that there is a demand in Toronto and elsewhere for skill. Many continuing job opportunities go begging for persons to fill them while we have large numbers of job applicants in our files.

Populationwise we are a very small country and the only way we can maintain a high standard of living is to have a high standard of craftsmanship, to be creative and to be venturesome. We cannot afford to waste either our raw products or our talents.

Ontario's record in re-training the unemployed is mighty poor. Schedule "M"—it is now called Programme 5, but for years it was known as Schedule "M"—of the special vocational training project agreement between the federal and provincial governments first came into effect in Canada in 1945 and has been continued up to the present time through the vocational training agreement and is now referred to within the last year as Programme No. 5.

While Schedule "M" was signed by British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia in 1945, Ontario did not bother to sign the agreement with the federal government until 1948. Even then, Ontario failed to implement the programme. The idea was, under Schedule "M", that the federal government would pay 50 per cent of the cost of re-training unemployed workers. In the past year, the federal government has upped its ante to 75 per cent of the cost.

M. J. Fenwick, assistant to the director, District No. 6 of the United Steelworkers of America, pointed out in an address of February 11, 1961, that Ontario's training record was less than two per cent of the workers training in Canada under this scheme.

Now that is a shocking thing, Mr. Speaker, only two per cent of all the workers trained under the scheme were trained in Ontario. This despite the fact that we are an industrial province, the leading industrial province, and despite the fact that we are the largest province, only two per cent trained in all of Canada were from Ontario.

Of 23,100 people trained under the scheme up until November of 1960, Ontario had trained only slightly over 1,000 people. Mr. Fenwick claimed that his investigation led him to conclude that although Ontario had trainees listed under Schedule "M", no actual Schedule "M" training had taken place in Ontario. He claimed that apparently this province had been registering night class students and others as Schedule "M" trainees to pad the records. When he made this charge, representatives of the provincial government were present and the charge went unanswered.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that The Department of Education, under which this training programme comes, needs a full-time Minister. This is not a part-time job and I think when we see results such as this even when the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) was working full time on the job, they were not doing a very good job. I think this is one more item to point out that the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) should confine himself with that department.

Prior to February, 1961, Ontario had a very poor showing despite the fact of the rapidly growing technological unemployment. In the fiscal year 1957, no workers were re-trained. In 1958, 151; in 1959, 177; and in 1960, 65. All of these, so far as we can find out, were in Windsor. Enrolment in Ontario in the year 1960 under Schedule "M" amounted to a mere 1.4 per cent of the national total. It is a shocking record.

According to a table supplied by the Canadian vocational training section of the federal Department of Labour, Ontario had nine persons in training, ostensibly under Schedule "M" in November of 1960, six in commercial courses and three in welding. This compared with 119 in Newfoundland, and 113 in New Brunswick.

After 15 years of indifference, the government of Ontario in January of 1961 finally instituted a stepped-up programme under Schedule "M", but just how feeble this increased programme is in comparison with the needs of the times I will demonstrate.

Besides Schedule "M", which was included in the federal-provincial re-establishment agreement in 1945, which was legislation of a Liberal government, there were other schedules. For example, under Schedule "P", which is training for primary industries, Quebec has trained over 58,000 people; Ontario a mere 10,000; Manitoba 32,000; British Columbia over 72,000; and yet Ontario, still the largest province and the great industrial province, has trained only 10,759.

It is obvious that Ontario has taken very little interest in the re-training of its unemployed. The hon. Minister of Education who is responsible for this training has paid little or no attention to the advancing technology and the needs of the work force of Ontario.

For example, the total cost of Ontario's re-training programme for the unemployed in the year ending March 31, 1960, amounted to just over $18,000, including the federal share of 50 per cent.

Now the federal government pays 75 per cent of the cost. This means that every dollar of improvement to the programme in terms of facilities, living allowance, instruction, etc., will cost Ontario 25 cents. With this assistance and prodded by a growing public impatience the Ontario government last November made one of its dazzling announcements—one of its better headline-getting announcements—of the millions it was going to spend on re-training.

Let us take a look at this effort. Of 6,893 unemployed people interviewed in Toronto for re-training courses only 1,829 could qualify.

The main reasons why the vast majority could not take the courses were as follows: 45 per cent had a Grade 8 or less education. The courses usually call for a Grade 10 education. A desired course was not available for 16 per cent. Twenty-six per cent could not get by on the living allowance. A married man with three children must live on $36 per week. The average wage in Toronto is $80.00 per week and of all the people that were turned down, only 15 per cent were turned down because it was felt they did not have the proper motivation.

Despite all this 1,829 were available. But even at its best only 515 are on course at the provincial institute of trades.

Hon. members can see that the programme that the province now has comes nowhere meeting the problem and I am safe in saying, Mr. Speaker, that such a programme as announced by the government is a phony programme.

At the present time there are over 60,000 unemployed in Toronto, 120,000 unemployed in Ontario. It should be obvious that the government is making no real effort. No matter how big the headlines, the programme is a phony.

And I think there is no better illustration of that, Mr. Speaker, than the memorandum that each hon. member of the Legislature received from the educational department of the Italian community, the promotion centre here in the city of Toronto. It is a well drawn-up memorandum, it is very terse and to the point and sets out exactly and illustrates very well just what kind of a retraining programme we have here in Toronto and in Ontario. This is from the memorandum:

ONTARIO'S VOCATIONAL RE-TRAINING PROGRAMME

The problem: under existing Ontario laws and practices it has become impossible for an adult to learn a designated trade unless he is prepared either to join the armed forces or unhappily becomes an inmate of a penal institution.

And this despite the fact, Mr. Speaker, that we had headlines last November saying that the government was going to spend $100 million on re-training. But the memorandum goes on:

In November of 1961, in what was widely heralded as a serious effort to cope with the growing unemployment problem among immigrant workers, the Ontario Department of Education gave its approval to a programme for the re-training of unemployed citizens under Schedule Five, which included a series of courses at the provincial institute of trades.

The courses provided for 50 per cent academic training and the remaining time to be devoted to an orientation programme by which the student would move from shop to shop spending approximately 100 hours in each and acquiring the basic skill in each of a number of trades.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this was fine, and so they went ahead in December of 1961 to line up prospective students and then in January of 1962 they hired 13 instructors for the provincial institute of trades to carry out the programme. Then on January 9, 1962, a battery of national employment service counsellors processed 225 applications for the up-grading classes. Mind, even as a pilot effort, this would have some hope, but at the most this is 225 in a city where there are 60,000 unemployed.

Then one day after they processed these 225 applicants this is what happened on January 10 of this year: the provincial institute of trades, where the courses were planned to take place, received instructions from The Department of Education that all practical work in the designated trades was to be stopped.

On the afternoon of the same day, 180 unemployed citizens with high hopes reported for training in anticipation that both theoretical and practical work would be available. They were informed that unexpected problems had arisen re the practical phase of the course and that for now the academic phase only would be given.

Now it has been possible since 1945 to have this type of course; and this government today, after all its big announcements, is still having its practical problems. So for all intents and purposes, these people are getting no training.

On January 14, 1962, the Italian Community Promotion Centre dispatched a telegram to the Hon. John P. Robarts, Prime Minister of Ontario.

They are a group here in the city and I know of one church in my own riding where they have been doing work on this re-training. I do not wish to mention the names of the various people concerned, but certainly responsible people—I again repeat that this is typical. I know of other instances, but because this memorandum is before every hon. member here in the Legislature I am referring to it. Certainly different churches and different social groups in the west end of Toronto have done their best for this particular group of Italians.

This is not only a matter of Italians, this is a matter of all the unemployed here not only in the city of Toronto but in Ontario. It is the question that they need training and I do not care what their racial background is.

On January 14, 1962, the Italian Community Promotion Centre dispatched the following telegram to the Hon. J. P. Robarts, Prime Minister of Ontario:

ITALIAN COMMUNITY OF TORONTO DEEPLY REGRETS REVERSAL OF THE GOVERNMENT'S FIRST DECISION TO PROVIDE TECHNICAL AND ACADEMIC TRAINING FOR ITALIAN IMMIGRANTS AT THE PROVINCIAL INSTITUTE OF TRADES UNDER SCHEDULE FIVE.

IT IS THE SINCERE HOPE OF THE ITALIAN COMMUNITY THAT THE GOVERNMENT WILL RECONSIDER THIS REGRETTABLE ACTION AND IMMEDIATELY REINSTATE ITS FIRST PLAN TO PROVIDE FOR EFFECTIVE TRAINING UNDER THIS SCHEME.

The upshot of it all has been that the government has not seen fit to re-establish its programme or to bring it back into action—to activate it as they promised.

On January 16, 1962, bricklaying, plumbing, steamfitting and painting instructors were informed that their employment would terminate on Friday, January 19.

On January 18, 1962, the timetable at the provincial institute was reorganized and an announcement was made that there was no shopwork in the designated trades. Some practical work was provided in welding and in cabinet-making, since these trades were not considered then designated. Classes operated from 4 p.m. to 11 p.m.

On January 22, The Department of Education, apparently after consulting the director of the apprenticeship branch of The Department of Labour, discovered that any work in cabinet-making was also unacceptable to The Department of Labour.

Then again on the same day, the provincial institute of trades were informed that cabinet-making instructors would terminate their employment as of January 26, 1962, and that this phase of the programme would cease.

Then on January 26 the attendance classes averaged 105 men, of which 28 men were taking basic training in academic subjects, 38 in academic subjects plus welding, 21 men taking blueprint reading plus academic subjects, and 29 men taking for the last day cabinet-making plus academic subjects.

Now, this is just typical of the feeble efforts the provincial government has made in re-training. We have a situation of hundreds of thousands of unemployed in Canada, 60,000 alone in Toronto, and this is the poor feeble effort being made by the government here. Certainly the Italian community's memorandum shows us how feeble this re-training programme really is.

Mr. Speaker, this is a tremendous, pressing, urgent problem of Ontario's untrained unemployed, and if it is to be solved we must, among other things, do the following—here are some suggestions for you, you are so short on ideas over there, so here are some suggestions for you:

(a) encourage our school children to remain in school longer;

(b) encourage vocational training and enhance its prestige;

(c) give those taking the courses decent living allowances;

(d) give municipalities greater access to low-interest funds; special help is needed by certain areas of the province more economically depressed than others; secondary industry needs sponsorship in order to give more stable conditions; and

(e) increase our university population.

But most of all, Mr. Speaker, give the province some leadership. It is a shame and a disgrace that the greatest province of a great nation has thousands of unemployed when the cause of freedom needs everybody at work. We need a new government in this province, Mr. Speaker, and the great win of the Liberals in the recent by-elections is a sign of hope for progress in the province of Ontario.

Mr. H. E. Beckett (York East): It is a privilege—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Is the hon. member the chairman of the redistribution committee?

Mr. Beckett: Why not? I would like to do that. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that would be a privilege.

However, it is a privilege for me, Mr. Speaker, to say a few words on the Throne debate and also on municipal government and the general body of municipal law in force today in the province.

It was over 40 years ago that I first entered Scarborough township council and York county council—and at the time, Mr. Speaker, you really only had to know something about The Municipal Act, The Assessment Act and The Local Improvement Act. However, today, besides many more Acts and regulations, there are scores of private bills of which you must have some knowledge. The field is ever growing larger and therefore much more difficult to understand.

The Baldwin Act of 1849 has well deserved the title of "The Magna Carta of municipal government in Canada." Though the Act of 1849 may appear to many to be merely a matter of historic interest, such is not the case, since it still stands today as the statute upon which all our municipal institutions are based and from which in principle no radical departure has been made.

It brought into existence the basic unit of the township council from which all other councils have been developed, and that Act fixed the number of a township council at five, and the five to be elected annually, with one of them to be appointed as reeve and, if the population was sufficient, another as deputy reeve.

The council back in those days was given general authority to carry out the affairs of the municipality, pass certain by-laws, appoint officers, buy real estate for the purposes of the municipality, establish schools, undertake works, improve roads, license and regulate trades and businesses of various kinds, and impose and collect rates and borrow money sufficient for the municipality. For urban municipalities, there were only a few existed at that date and they were given similar powers. As a matter of fact, it was a common council with no boards or commissions.

In 1924, Mr. Speaker, a similar bill was proposed here, not in the Legislature but before a committee, to have the common council of the municipalities of the province of Ontario; but it only got to committee stage.

It is now well over 100 years since the original statute of our present system was passed, and while many amendments and amplifications have been made to keep pace with municipal progress, the basis has remained unchanged throughout the 15 consolidations and revisions of The Municipal Act made from 1859 to 1960.

During the 112 years which have elapsed since the time when local home rule was first granted, there has been a tremendous development in municipal affairs; and it now seems a far-off day from the time when the problems which chiefly confronted a municipal council centred around the questions of stoning the main roads and streets, providing ditches, laying wooden walks, erecting gas lamps, employing police, pounds, fences, and other matters which now appear simple and inexpensive, though at that time they were very important. But even up to the end of the last century, the conduct of municipal affairs was largely free from the complications of the present age; probably the biggest problem and financial burden which until that time municipal councils had to face, was the subsidizing of railways, and that is something that you wonder about.

I can remember very well, when a proposed railway was to be built east from Toronto, that all the local municipalities were asked if they would guarantee a certain amount in debentures. That was done in quite a few instances, in the subsidizing of these railways, so many of which proved to be disastrous financial commitments for the municipalities.

The past 60 years has witnessed a remarkable transition, revolutionary in many of its aspects, in municipal enterprise and activity. There was a day when municipal undertaking was confined to the provision of works and services of a very limited character and extent, and beyond these limits it was not thought advisable or competent for a municipal council to embark. There was a clear-cut line between matters of public and private enterprise, and any invasion of the territory of private capital was strongly protested.

Nor was it thought proper, Mr. Speaker, for a community to enter into the field of religious, philanthropic and charitable organizations, except perhaps by the granting of some monetary aid by way of encouragement. However, that is all changed today, and it is now somewhat difficult to conceive of any activity or interest into which it would be felt that a municipality could not launch, whether it is a matter of general community enterprise or of a sectional or even individual character.

It is not easy to particularize as to the cause of this revolutionary transition, since it is the multiplicity of these causes, coupled with the remarkable difference in mental outlook upon human affairs, which go to the root of the change. Not only the state, but the municipality, has been obliged to take the place of the parent and assume the responsibilities of the individual in many human relations—as is readily seen and observed when municipal undertakings for schools, recreation, hospitals, charity, child welfare and other moral and social influences are examined. And in the field of public works and services the change is probably more apparent when we look upon our utility undertakings, highway systems and the like.

Around The Municipal Act, however, there has had to be built up that general body of municipal law to take care, in a legislative way, of the various phases of activity and enterprise into which municipalities have ventured or been drawn. To such an extent has this grown that it now occupies about one-third of the statute journals of the province, requiring reference and cross-reference to all manner of legislative enactments of a public nature, and a keen memory for all the special and private legislation which most of the urban and even some of the rural municipalities have obtained to serve local needs.

The consequence, Mr. Speaker, is that the body of municipal law in force today is so vast in extent, so complicated in its nature, so full of pitfalls for the unwary, it is possible for but the few of the legal fraternity who have specialized in the subject to be able to say that they have any intimate grasp and understanding of the law so as to properly interpret it correctly to advise municipal bodies and their officials. It is really to be wondered that the many thousands of personnel, comprising the various municipal bodies and officials throughout the organized municipalities of the province now numbering nearly 1,000, are able to function; and it speaks well for the intelligence and honesty of purpose on their part, and the skilled legal advice they are able to obtain, that so few of our municipalities wander into serious trouble through non-observance of the requirements of the law.

The development of the past 60 years has, however, made such a marked impression upon the conduct of municipal affairs, that the time has arrived when it is not only desirable but necessary to undertake a survey of our municipal institutions and to determine whether our system as originally founded, or as it has been developed and amended, is sufficient for the present and the future. While during the past 60 years or so there have been many consolidations or revisions of The Municipal Act, The Assessment Act, The School Acts and other municipal legislation, such work has to a great extent been confined to the legal and not to the practical and administrative aspects, and there has been no attempt to consolidate or revise the whole body of municipal laws so as to bring it under any comprehensive, co-related and co-ordinated system.

Basically, our present municipal system is founded upon the creation of a corporation formed of the inhabitants of a particular locality, with the conduct, management and administration of their communal affairs vested in an elected body called the municipal council, composed of a specified number of the inhabitants chosen by the remainder of the inhabitants. Originally the council reigned supreme within the ambit of municipal affairs as provided for in the municipal statutes and, except in respect to schools, the reign of the municipal council continued untrammelled for a great number of years, even to the point of incurring debt for municipal purposes without reference to the inhabitants. Gradually, however, inroads began to be made upon the domain of the council as municipal authorities spread and as the calls upon the public purse grew to substantial proportions.

An early limitation placed upon the scope of a municipal council was with respect to its power to incur a debt not to be authorized without the approval of the inhabitants. In other directions, the breach of the council's citadel was enlarged, and specific functions of municipal government were centred in newly created bodies and functionaries. Particularly, Mr. Speaker, has this era of decentralization developed in the past 60 years, until now we find, on looking over the municipal arena, that the municipal council has been shorn of much of its pristine glory and in many respects now serves but as a collecting and distributing agency between the general body of the citizens and the bodies or functionaries managing and administering various municipal enterprises and undertakings.

The result, Mr. Speaker, is that today we are blessed or cursed, as the point of view may be, with a great number of bodies which govern and administer our municipal affairs. In the average city in Ontario today we will in all probability find a council, one or more utility commissions, police commission, parks board, town planning board, board of health, board of education, vocational school board, library board, and perhaps other boards or commissions, the members of which are elected by the people or appointed by their elected representatives. And to this must be added the great number of other bodies of a public or quasi-public nature which, in reality, serve the municipality in their particular fields just as the council and other bodies mentioned may do, although they are not necessarily the creatures of the general municipal statutes.

Under this latter category fall such bodies as boards of trade, chambers of commerce, industrial commissions, harbour commissions, highway commissions, hospital boards and innumerable others. While in the small urban and in the rural communities the situation is not quite the same, yet even there the tendency has been towards the creation of bodies separate from the municipal council to look after some work or project of a special nature. If to all these elected or appointed bodies are added the great host of municipal and public officials, who, in an executive capacity, administer local affairs, it will readily be conceded that we have enough if not a surfeit of municipal government.

While it may be quite easy, Mr. Speaker, to say that the people have been given only what they wanted, when all these additional bodies have been created, it is a question whether such a statement is really true and, even if true, whether compliance with the apparent demand was warranted or sound. The fact is that in the age of legislating for municipal needs there is too great a tendency to wholly absorb prevalent ideas to the exclusion of the lesson of previous events, and without any due regard being paid to the future. We live too much for the present and are satisfied to ask for and to be granted what appears to be the thing of the moment.

Too little attention, I maintain, has been paid during the past 60 years of development to the logical outcome of all the schemes which have been put forward for municipal progress, and the time has now arrived when some serious and conservative thought must be given to the ultimate outcome of our municipal institutions. It behooves the leaders in the municipalities and in this Legislature, and everyone, to consider very carefully whether or not the craze for decentralization has gone far enough and perhaps even now too far, and if it would not be advisable to retrace our steps to some extent and restore to municipal councils, and thereby to the people, greater and more direct control over municipal undertakings and expenditures.

Thank you.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House I would like to move, seconded by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), that this House meet at two o'clock on Monday next and that Rule 2 be suspended so far as it applies to this motion.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Will the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) advise the House whether it is his intention to continue the suspension of the rule indefinitely, or is this for a particular occasion only?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is for a particular occasion. I mentioned earlier in the week that I would like to wind up the Throne debate on Tuesday. Now in looking at the number of people who wish to participate in the Throne debate, I think it can be completed on Monday. If we sit at two, I think it might be possible to complete it without a night session. If we do not complete it by six o'clock, we will have a night session on Monday in order to complete the Throne debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, we will continue on Monday as I have outlined.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Orders of the day.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I rise on a question of privilege.

On Friday last the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) spoke in the Throne Speech—unfortunately I was out of the House at the time with another commitment—and during the course of his speech he delivered something of a blistering attack upon myself with regard to some of my comments on a telecast on Wednesday night. I am not going to discuss the content of that telecast because there will be other opportunities in the House to deal with issues, about which he is apparently extremely sensitive. However, in the course of his remarks—and I have checked with the actual Hansard transcript—he sums up one point in this way: In reference to myself he said, "Indeed he made no effort to learn the true facts and ignored them when they were brought to his attention through the CBC prior to the broadcast." That is the end of the quotation.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Labour was very dogmatic and very assertive but he was nonetheless in error. Nothing was drawn to my attention by the CBC prior to the telecast. I may add by way of explanation that a wire arrived from the industrial commissioner in Brantford on Thursday morning at my office; it was timed for some time on Wednesday afternoon so we checked with the telegraph company and they have apologized for its late delivery and have sent an explanation back to the sender. I had no word either directly from Brantford or through the CBC prior to the telecast. The hon. Minister of Labour, I repeat, was in error, as he often is.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) begs leave to present to the House the following:

The annual report of The Department of Reform Institutions, Province of Ontario, for the year ending March 31, 1961.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, may I first thank you, sir, for your kindness and hospitality to me personally, as I—a new member—have gone through the procedure of becoming a seated member of this House. I greatly appreciated your interest and your co-operation. May I also, through you, sir, thank many other hon. members on both sides of the House for their kind interest in my election and also for their good wishes to me on the assumption of my seat. I have found, during the past week that the reservoir of goodwill that has been bequeathed to me by the late member for Brant, my father, has been almost overpowering and I promise you that I will endeavour to conduct myself in this Legislature always with the thought—and with your help—to maintain this reservoir of goodwill at its present full capacity.

While I am passing out some bouquets and expressing myself in a personal manner, I would like also to compliment various hon. members of the government for the way in which they have handled some small business matters that I have been asked to draw to their attention by my constituents. They must have very efficient staffs working for them because I know these small matters of business have been certainly well attended to, and I thank the hon. Ministers concerned very sincerely.

Mr. Speaker, as a new member of this House I certainly feel all the ordinary qualms when I rise to address this august gathering, particularly when I feel that the late representative whose seat I have taken was such a master of debate himself. However, I am reasonably familiar with the Chamber and the buildings, having been brought here since I was a very young boy and, as I look around the Chamber, I still see the benign countenance of Mr. Stalin admiring our proceedings from the stonework on both sides; and, of course, there are many other oddities about the building and Chamber that are reasonably familiar to me.

As a matter of fact, as most of you know, my father came to this House first at the age of 28, and as a Minister of the government. In those days evidently there were some considerable differences as far as Ministers were concerned, and as far as their facilities were concerned. This was brought to mind just last night when my mother was discussing some of the procedures that obtained in those days and the Ministers of the government in 1919 all had private apartment facilities adjoining their offices.

So, when the Nixons moved into town, they simply moved into the Parliament buildings and set up light housekeeping. It was not until the odour of frying fish penetrated this Chamber that the then Prime Minister decided that this nice arrangement had gone far enough and he called a halt to it. So I would like to call the attention of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) who was just criticizing the office facilities the other day, that even the Cabinet facilities have deteriorated to some extent.

However, all of us on this side have the opportunity of seeing the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) having a light lunch from time to time during the afternoon, so probably the facilities have not deteriorated too much. Actually it is a very good idea, as the hon. Minister of Energy Resources no doubt would know, that a little glucose taken in the late afternoon never hurt anybody.

Mr. Speaker, the riding of Brant has had more than its share of publicity in the last few weeks and I would like to deal briefly with one or two items in connection with it. First of all, we were certainly gratified at the interest taken by the people of Ontario in the by-election that has recently been concluded in that riding, which, as you know, occupies most of the county of Brant, as well as some municipalities in the county of Norfolk and one municipality in the county of Oxford.

During the campaign, we had the opportunity to hear all three of the party leaders in this House, as well as many private hon. members, in addition to several hon. Cabinet Ministers who saw fit to come up to our riding. And in this connection, may I say that we were certainly pleased to hear the interest taken in the affairs of Brant riding by the then hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) and the present hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). In their progress through the riding they made some very useful comments that I think would certainly be of interest to this House. For one, we are now expecting the re-engineering and re-construction of the famous Cockshutt Road—there is that word again entering into debate—which runs south from the city of Brantford through the county. We understand that the re-engineering and re-construction will cost in excess of $800,000 and we are looking forward to its early beginning and certainly a good job being done upon it.

We are also pleased that the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker, saw fit to make a speech concerning tobacco marketing in the areas so concerned in our riding and we were very pleased at his interest in the marketing plan and applaud his remarks on that occasion strenuously.

The other event that has brought my riding and the riding of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Gordon) somewhat into the news in recent days has been the disclosure that meat which has been cut from fallen animals, or dead animals, has been offered for public sale; the centre of this nefarious practice appears to have been Brantford and Brant County, much to our embarrassment, and much to the embarrassment of the many fine, but small, abattoir and meat-sales businesses with which the hon. member for Brantford and myself have been associated in the last few weeks, as they have come to us with their troubles.

As you all know from reading the public press, this meat scandal is actually province-wide, but the names of Brantford and Brant seem to be more closely associated with it than any other in the consciousness of the people who are buying meat.

Mr. Speaker, you are familiar with the fact that meat can be inspected under the auspices of the federal government and much of the meat now distributed in this province is so inspected. If you are not already familiar with the details, however, I would like to draw to your attention that, in order to come up to the levels required by the federal meat inspection policy, it is necessary for very expensive and far-reaching improvements to be made on the many small slaughter-houses in operation in Brant County, as well as the other counties throughout the province. I believe that to come up to the standards of federal inspection is financially out of the question for these small abattoirs. If the government is going to force them to do this—probably by simply allowing the housewives who do not wish to buy uninspected meat, to apply economic pressure to them—it is not realistic, in other words, for the government to expect them to come up to these high standards.

I personally feel—and certainly I am speaking for the people concerned in our county—that the consumer must be protected, certainly by a very careful meat inspection process, I would say, under the auspices of the provincial government, with levels of inspection which can be attained by these smaller abattoirs.

There is no doubt that if the consumer forces these small businesses to come up to the level of inspection of the federal government—which is designed for inter-provincial shipments, or international shipments—many of these small businesses will be forced out of business, and the market will be left to the eight or 10 large packing-houses and we, on this side, certainly feel that this would be a disastrous turn of affairs.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that no member of this House would expect the hon. member for Brant to sit down without referring, in some small measure, to Indian affairs. I, for one, have heard the late member make a lot of verbal mileage out of this topic and I have been subjected to much of it myself, and it is certainly the duty, I would think, of the member for Brant to bring the Indian affairs to the attention of this House since the riding of Brant encompasses the largest Indian domain—at least, with the largest population—in the province.

You may be pleased to know, sir, that in the recent by-election, the Indians in Brant County took part in the election in much greater numbers than they have in the past. We feel that they are gradually overcoming their prejudice against taking part in the affairs of the province of Ontario and we look forward with great pleasure to the day in which this part of our electorate will take full responsibility for their affairs, as far as the provincial government is concerned.

Already, our Department of Highways is constructing an excellent road from one end of the reserve to the other. Now this is something that has been hanging fire for some time and the Indians are certainly very grateful for this construction as it goes forward. But there is one other aspect to this construction, which I would like to bring before the House, and that is that this road, if it were extended somewhat, actually to the extent of about another three miles, would be a great boon, not only to the Indian population, but to the other citizens of Ontario, who make use of, and travel in, that area. You may not be aware of the fact that the Grand river divides the Indian reserve into two parts and, during the past few years, since the ferry across the river has fallen into disrepair and is no longer usable, Indians and others concerned in going from one part of the reserve to the other, have had to make a 16 mile detour to cross the Grand river, either at Brantford or Caledonia. Now this is a considerable hardship and I would heartily recommend to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) and his department that, while he is undertaking the reconstruction of this highway through the reserve, he might look carefully into the reconstruction of the ferry across the river and see to it that it is put in working order for the Indians, and for the convenience of others associated with it.

Now, by a fortunate chance, Mr. Speaker, the location of this ferry is just at the old, colonial homestead once occupied by the famous Indian poetess, Pauline Johnson, whom you may have heard quoted under other circumstances in this Chamber. This is a beautiful home in the centre of the rich, Indian lore and culture of the Six Nations domain, and at present a committee of Indians, in co-operation with a committee of interested citizens, is working on its restoration. I believe The Department of Travel and Publicity has erected a plaque there, but I think that this would be an ideal spot for co-operation between the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) and his department, and the hon. Minister of Highways and his department, because here, in the centre of the Six Nations reserve, in a part of Ontario that is densely populated by other citizens, would be the perfect spot for a tourist attraction involving Indian culture.

Here we would have a beautiful and famous home beside the picturesque Grand river, and it is picturesque largely because of some considerable improvements made by the various municipalities up-river from that point. It would be on the main road through the reserve, and I am sure that if the hon. Ministers concerned would see fit to take action on this, it would make a marvellous contribution to our centennial celebration which is coming up in the near future, and I hope that the hon. Ministers concerned will seriously consider this suggestion. Perhaps, in this connection, Chief Trail-Blazer and even, let me see, Chief Calm Pond, I believe, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), who has not been in the House since I have come in, would use their good offices with the hon. Ministers concerned and speak on behalf of their Mohawk brethren in furthering the suggestions.

Before I leave the topic of Indian affairs, it has also come to my attention that, although the people of the Six Nations reservation are not organized as a regular municipality under The Department of Municipal Affairs, they are, in a sense, a self-governing entity with their own council and their democratically elected chief, but when they apply for certain aid and help, from the various departments of the government, they are denied this help and aid because, as the officials concerned say, they are not a regularly constituted and organized municipality. Cases in point that have come to my attention recently have to do with the community programmes branch of The Department of Education, the re-stocking programme of The Department of Lands and Forests and the availability of travelling bookmobiles or libraries, which I believe are also directed by The Department of Education.

On three separate occasions, the chief and the various committees of Indians concerned, have asked the departments of government for help with the building of a community hall and the institution of a community recreation programme in the Sour Springs area of the reserve. They have asked for help in the re-stocking of the lands and lakes with birds and fish and they have asked for the services of a travelling library. Now as I understand it, sir, they have been denied these advantages because they are not a regularly organized municipality. I certainly hope that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass) will look into this carefully and see that these services are made available to our Indian friends on the Six Nations reserve and elsewhere.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to occupy the valuable time of this assembly, but there is one further point that I would like to draw to your attention and it has to do with a topic that has been previously raised in the Chamber when I have been here; that is the apprenticeship age in the designated trades to which the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) referred briefly, I believe, last week.

As hon. members know, the designated trades are controlled by the apprenticeship branch of The Department of Labour. As the regulations concerning apprenticeship now read, a young person may enter into an apprenticeship in the designated trades between the ages of 16 and 21. It has already been brought to our attention that this is affecting certain people who have been taking training for the unemployed in the Italian community of this city of Toronto. But it has never been brought to the attention of the House that it is affecting other people, in other parts of the province. The board of education in the city of Brantford, by which I was employed until recently, has a very far reaching and broad plan for the re-training of the unemployed.

In this connection they are offering a course in motor mechanics which is available only to people registered as persons being unemployed. This course is of 6 to 8 months' duration. It is not a makeshift course at all; these people have direct access to the very elaborate facilities for the instruction of motor mechanics at the Brantford Collegiate Institute. But since these facilities are in use every day, the unemployed people to whom I have reference have to use them beginning at 9 o'clock in the evening and extending through until 4 or 5 a.m. It seems to me that no one can doubt the sincerity and the eagerness of these people to better themselves in the light of the circumstances by which the course is given. Now it turns out, of course, that since motor mechanics is a designated trade, the people concerned with this course now find that it will not be possible for them to enter into an apprenticeship in the regular way.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a real hardship for the people concerned. In the opinion of the teacher who is conducting and giving this course, some of the best motor mechanics in the area will be turned out by the course and yet it will not be possible for them to enter an apprenticeship because of one of the regulations of The Department of Labour.

It has also come to my attention—and I cannot say this for sure—but I believe that Ontario is the only province in Canada which requires this age restriction on apprenticeships. As the representative of some of the people concerned in this special case that I have brought to your attention, I would strongly urge the hon. Minister of Education and the hon. Minister of Labour to see that this regulation is changed to at least accommodate the people concerned.

Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention once again that we have the threat of a night sitting hanging over our head. My hon. friends on this side have entreated me to be brief, and so I intend to be. I would like before I sit down, however, to say that I look forward to joining in subsequent debates in this House.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to commend the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) for his debut in this House. I think that he has made quite an impression. As he mentioned in his last remarks, I know that we will be hearing from him in various debates throughout this session.

I would like also, Mr. Speaker, to welcome the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), who has just come into the House, because we have not seen him for quite some time, I do hope that he is well.

Mr. Speaker, many hon. members of the House in their opening remarks on the Speech from the Throne have spent quite some time on congratulations to various hon. members who have become Cabinet Ministers and the reshuffling of other hon. Ministers. I am going to combine this in one statement and say: "Congratulations and best wishes in your new positions." However, I will single out the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and say to him: "May God guide you in your endeavours and may you receive the full co-operation of your Cabinet."

May I say a welcome also to the new hon. members. May they be the representatives that they wish to be.

To you, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend you on the efficient way you are handling your very difficult task of maintaining order in the deliberations of this session.

In listening to the hon. members of the House, I find that they may be classified in three categories: one group is here to expound the good that their party has done and why they should continue to govern; we have another group which is here to criticize what the party has done or failed to do; and we have a third group which has talked a little about his own riding and topics in general.

I think from the previous remarks that I have made in this House, hon. members will say that I have been one who has demanded something from the government for the citizens of Windsor. I have spoken on behalf of Windsor because my predecessor had fallen into the category of the first group that I mentioned. He was expounding the virtues of his party to such an extent that he was forgetting the needs of the people he represented. I say to hon. members that if they lose touch with the people who elected them, they are in for a rude awakening some day.

Some of the demands that I have made in the past have been granted, namely, the teachers' college and the Highway 401 overpass. For this I have expressed the appreciation of the people I represent. However, in my participation of the last two years in the Throne debate, I have asked for changes in legislation, which would benefit not only the Windsor area but also to a very great extent this province as a whole.

I am not going to forget it, for I feel it is of utmost importance, not only to this province but to the people of the Windsor area, that such legislation should be enacted. I am speaking about The Succession Duty Act. Time and time again it has been brought to my attention that hundreds—yes thousands—of Americans, who live from one hour to two hours' drive from their home to their place of work in downtown Detroit would be only too willing to establish in Windsor or its suburbs if The Succession Duty Act were changed. They would be from 15 to 20 minutes' drive from work by establishing a home on our Canadian side. However, they do not take advantage of this because of The Succession Duty Act.

The father of a friend of mine was a high official of the Chrysler Corporation; in fact, he was one of the vice-presidents. This gentleman passed away four years ago. For four years his son has been trying to get this succession duty affair settled. He cannot get an understanding between the Ontario government and the State of Michigan. All this time the money left to him has been tied-up and cannot be put to use. For an American to die in Ontario costs money and plenty of it.

Lum Clark of the Windsor Star recently stated that Americans are driven out of Ontario because they find it too expensive to die here. Here we are, a province trying to do all we can to attract new industries, new capital, greater population. The Americans see the opportunities of establishing here and the potentialities that we have, but when they hear of this Succession Duty Act, it knocks them for a loop and they stay away.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that this government can set up its Ontario economic council and its associated organizations for all it is worth and spend thousands of dollars for its growth and its development, but unless it looks into this Succession Duty Act and effect certain changes, the Ontario economic council will not get off the ground. I say: "Start cleaning up your own house before inviting any visitors to it."

I am sure that if a good attempt was made at this, the province, and especially we in Windsor, would have several new industries. For the third consecutive year I urge this government to look seriously into this matter. The Windsor Chamber of Commerce and our Greater Windsor Industrial Promotion Committee say that this change would mean more than 4,000 jobs for the Windsor area. Hon. members of this government certainly know the conditions in the city of Windsor as far as the unemployment picture is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, in my riding there is a little town known as LaSalle, which today is part of the township of Sandwich West. LaSalle was once known as Petite Cote which means small hill. Its residents are traditionally of French ancestry. The people there are gardeners and fruit growers. The area is renowned for Petite Cote radishes and green onions throughout Ontario, Quebec, the States of Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and Indiana. In fact, Mr. Speaker, in order to acquaint the hon. members of this House with the Petite Cote radishes and green onions, I have arranged with the members of the LaSalle branch of the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association to ship in the very early spring to each hon. member of this House a few bunches of these radishes and green onions. I know that after hon. members have tasted them, they will agree with me that there are none finer on the North American continent. They do excel.

These gardeners also grow tomatoes, carrots, beets, asparagus, lettuce, cabbage, peas, wax beans and green beans. They find their market in Ontario, Quebec and the States. Mostly, however, they sell on the Detroit market. Every day during the spring and summer these gardeners go across the Ambassador Bridge to Detroit and sell their produce on the wholesale market of that city. They will leave around 3 o'clock in the morning, sell their produce around 8 o'clock, return, gather fresh products again from the fields, wash, bundle them, pack them and get ready for another trip the following morning.

These gardeners are competing with the gardeners around the Detroit area and the State of Michigan. They must pay duty on their produce when they bring them into the State of Michigan. They have been doing this for generations. Now it seems that their Canadian colleagues, who are not competing with them, are going to cause them trouble. It appears that the Canadian Horticultural Council is demanding that the Canadian government enact legislation that all products shipped interprovincially or exported to other provinces and the States be in new containers or crates. The LaSalle growers, as I mentioned, are in heavy competition with the Michigan growers who sell these products, and they sell them in used crates or containers.

A new crate for a dozen beets costs a Canadian 35 cents a crate, whereas an American pays 10 cents for a used container. If the Canadians who already have paid a duty to sell their products to the States are forced by the Canadian Horticultural Council to use these new containers or crates, they will be forced out of business. I want hon. members to remember that the American buyers are not asking for these new containers, it is the Canadian horticultural group which is forcing this upon the Canadian grower.

I say, how silly can we get in doing business? There must be some very strong lobbying by the Canadian container manufacturers to have this legislation enacted. Our own hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) has assured me that his department will be watching this very closely. I do hope that the hon. Minister will, because this is very important to the growers of that area. To me, such legislation is a detriment rather than a help to us.

Again, I say that it could be of great help to the farmer, to the gardener and the nursery keeper, if their truck licences were not as high as they are at the present time. I would recommend to the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) that he look into the legislation of the State of Michigan concerning the licence fee of these people for trucks which are used only at certain times of the year. The fee is 50 cents per hundredweight up to 2,500 pounds, then 80 cents per hundredweight over 2,500 pounds. I would like to read, especially for the attention of the hon. Minister of Transport, from the Act of the State of Michigan, under the section dealing with road tractors, trucks or truck tractors for farms. It states:

For each road tractor, truck or truck tractor owned by a farmer and used exclusively in connection with the farming operations of such farmer, or used for the transportation of the farmer and his family, and not used for hire, 50 cents per 100 pounds of weight thereof.

And for trailers or semi-trailers for farms for each trailer or semi-trailer owned by a farmer and used exclusively in connection with the farming operations of such farmer, and not used for hire, up to 2,500 pounds 50 cents per 100 pounds and above 2,500 pounds 80 cents per 100 pounds.

Now here they consider the plight of the farmer who uses his truck for his business only at certain times of the year, without restricting him in using it for his own personal use the rest of the year. But in Ontario we do not consider this; we charge him a flat rate regardless of how he uses his truck. A dealer in the city may use his truck for a very great part of the 12 months and pay the same fee as a farmer who uses his vehicle only a fraction of the time that the city dealer does.

Again, I say, is this justice? I do hope the hon. Minister of Transport will consider this very seriously when and if he sees whether changes can be enacted.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I was quite interested in an article which I read recently in the magazine called Industry. This magazine is published by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. The reason I am referring to it is because it coincides quite a bit with the discussion I had with one of my constituents. This person came to this country some 12 years ago from Italy. He recently made a trip to Italy and was amazed at the development that was taking place there. Everybody was working, making good wages, buying freely, and above all, everybody was very happy. He examined the reason for all of this and he found that the government, instead of finding new means of securing revenues and adding taxes, had actually reduced the taxes on several commodities, and this had quite an effect on the buying public. They were purchasing more and hence creating more employment. This article stated, and I quote:

In Canada, the percentage of the gross national product being taken in taxes by all governments is about 26 per cent—almost the same as in the United States. But since the gross national product per capita is about 40 per cent higher in the United States than Canada, this must mean that their tax rate in the States is relatively low, a possibility, perhaps, which most Americans would dismiss, or that ours is too high for the country's good. But is it realistic to urge a reduction in Canadian tax rate at a time when federal expenditures are running ahead of federal income by some several hundred million dollars, and provincial and municipal governments are all spending and seeking more than ever before? To argue that it is not, is to assume that lower taxes would necessarily mean less government revenues. Such an assumption ignores the impact on sales and employment of a worthwhile reduction.

A reduction in corporation taxes means an increase in the nation's productive capital. The raw material out of which new jobs are created. The more new jobs there are, the more people there are to pay taxes, and the fewer to collect unemployment insurance—and I may add, also fewer to collect welfare from the province and municipality. Similarly, a reduction in income taxes may be expected to result in increased consumer spending, with more taxes being paid on the higher sales volume. Lower taxes have even been known to result in lower prices, and a corresponding reduction in government expenditures.

If this has worked in Italy, Mr. Speaker, I do not see why it could not work here in Ontario. Why not investigate? Surely if we want to strengthen our economy, we must look at all angles.

Mr. Speaker, I want to refer now to a question I asked of the hon. Minister of Education, the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), on November 29, 1961, and I would like to quote from Hansard:

In the Windsor Star issue of Friday, November 24, there is a story concerning the new secondary school programme announced earlier this year by the hon. Prime Minister.

Dr. Harry Pullen, deputy business administrator for the Ottawa Collegiate Institute Board told delegates to the Ontario conference on education who were meeting in the city of Windsor, that the new programme was "hastily conceived and prematurely announced," and that "those who had to live with the plan had nothing to do with its conception."

I have four questions to ask the hon. Prime Minister, who is also the Minister of Education: Were the superintendents, directors of education, headmasters or teachers' federation consulted before the adoption of the programme?

Secondly, if so, what groups were consulted?

Thirdly, what provision has The Department of Education made to staff these new technical training schools and fourthly, how many boards of education have made application to establish and increase their technical classes?

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the response of the hon. Minister of Education was quite lengthy and he referred to meetings being held on June 2, to right up until the date of this question. The majority of the meetings were held after the announcement of the programme; this programme was announced in August.

Now at this time, I did not elaborate further on the question, because I knew that on that date, my hon. leader was going to make his reply on the Speech from the Throne. But I do want to say that many of the various meetings to which the hon. Minister referred were held long after the announcements of the changes that were to take place in the programme of the secondary schools. The announcement was made in August and again

I repeat that the people concerned—that is the secondary school teachers — were not consulted before the introduction of these changes in the programme. The meetings were held after the announcement of the changes. This again proves that this government does what it pleases when it pleases them, without regard to the electorate.

Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) the other day to abolish the use of liquor permits was rather amusing to me. For years, this government had been extracting a dollar annually for every individual who wanted to purchase liquor to consume in his own home. This was a licence he had to pay to drink at home. But to drink in a beverage room, a lounge, or a tavern, he did not have to buy a licence. Now, after years of insulting the public, they remove it. But in its place they are going to ask him to pay a few cents extra per bottle purchased. Do they believe that the public does not see through what they have in mind? They want to increase their revenue from the sale of liquor. They must make more. Therefore—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Cheapest liquor in Canada.

Mr. Belanger: Therefore, they hoodwink the public by telling them you no longer will have to pay for a liquor permit. However, they know perfectly well that the few extra cents per bottle will bring them certainly more than the $1,300,000 loss in revenue from the sale of permits. It is a case of trying to fool the public by telling them: We are taking a nuisance away from you, but to take that nuisance away, you, the public, must pay for it.

And then again, in the next breath, they come up—and as they want to keep the people in suspense—they say they want to see how they will react to the lift of the permit purchase and then they say that there will be other changes during the course of this session. They could not come out with all their liquor changes at one time. Oh no! That would be giving the people of Ontario too much at one time. They must keep them on a string and dangle the string up and down and have the people of Ontario act like puppets.

They do not realize that in Ontario, there are hundreds of hotel owners who are contemplating changes in their establishment. "But they forget about you people. You pay the fee."

I say to this government, that the time is not far away when they will be through fooling the public in this fashion. They must remember this. It is an old saying, and it is still true: "You can fool some of the people some of the time but you cannot fool all the people all of the time."

Mr. Speaker, I could go on with the announcement made by the hon. Prime Minister on Friday about the changes in housing, but I am going to leave that until later. They are saying that this is the greatest change that we have had in Ontario. And still, just a little way further down in the announcement they come along and say this is just a trial effort, that we are trying. No wonder we, in the Opposition, do wonder what status we have now reached. Surely it is time, Mr. Speaker, that this government take cognizance of its mistakes and do represent the people of Ontario, or else they should throw their arms up in the air and say, "We can no longer represent you."

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, this certainly looks like education day. We had the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), the hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Belanger) and now myself, three school teachers speaking one after another. Possibly it is a good thing for the House.

Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, may I extend through you to the full-time and regular Speaker not only my compliments but also my thanks for the many courtesies that have been extended by him and his office to me during the past year. My congratulations go out to the new hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the new hon. members of his Cabinet. To the master political timer, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) my best wishes for his continued good health. To the newly-elected hon. members of the House my best as they roll up their sleeves and get into action, serving the people of Ontario. To the people of Ontario the thanks of the Liberal Party for their kind consideration in returning members in the ridings of Brant and Kenora and for their considered intellectual decision in changing horses in midstream and adding to our ranks the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Quilty).

Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of this honourable House an event of great import to Canadians of Polish extraction, not only in Windsor and Essex County but also in Ontario, yes, even in Canada. This event took place in the city of Windsor recently. The opening ceremony in preparation for the one thousandth anniversary of Christian Poland was celebrated with a solemn pontifical mass offered by His Excellency the Most Reverend John Christopher Cody, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of London, at Assumption Church.

If I may interject here, Mr. Speaker, Bishop Cody was honoured by Pope John only last week on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of his consecration as a bishop. Our congratulations and best wishes go out to him on this memorable event.

While we Canadians are preparing for the centennial of our confederation, the Canadians of Polish background are busy arranging for the celebration of the Polish millennium. I am sure that each and every hon. member of this House looks forward to the day when Poland, that western bulwark against all of the forces of communism, will once again regain its freedom and walk proudly on the side of the free world.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I need remind the hon. members of this House that February is St. John Ambulance month. The most Venerable Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem—St. John Ambulance—is that international organization that has done so much so well in the past in providing a specialized community service next to none, is that voluntary group ready to take its place in any emergency, military, civil or as a result of a prank of Mother Nature.

The circular black and silver badge with its eight-pointed cross, that is so commonplace today, is the hallmark of a skilled first-aider. I certainly hope that this, the month of their annual appeal for the necessary funds to finance for the whole year, are successful. We in the city of Windsor are most fortunate having a most capable secretary of the St. John Ambulance in the person of Mrs. Norman Jones, O.B.E., a really dedicated, altruistic, enthusiastic and civic-minded citizen.

Mr. Speaker, back in the year 1845, negroes from the southern states, hearing of the abolition of slavery under the British flag, fled their homes in the United States in search of this freedom. Windsor, the brotherhood city, a community of approximately 2,000 people at the time, was one of the places to which these unfortunates fled. On arriving on the southern shore of the Detroit river, those negroes wished to express their thanks to God and so in 1852 in my riding, a negro congregation under the spiritual leadership of the Reverend A. R. Green built a small frame church. The community prospered and a few years later a substantial church of bricks and mortar was constructed.

These free men and women carried water about one-quarter of a mile from the Detroit river to the site of their new construction. This was well over 100 years ago. Just recently the city expropriated the site and has levelled the area in order to construct a county court building. The present church, under the Reverend I. H. Edwards—this landmark, this religious home of former slaves—is no more. I would ask the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) to have the proper branch of his department consider the erection of a marker on the site of this church, the British Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one comment on a subject that is brought up every year in this House. Normally I would hesitate to raise this, but since we have a new hon. Prime Minister and new thinking, I do so. I would ask him to settle the problem and confusion of daylight saving time once and for all.

Mr. Speaker, on November 8, 1961, I held an open meeting in my riding to which I invited one and all to offer suggestions. Here are some of the suggestions made by constituents:

Mr. Egidio Barei, a construction worker, suggested that government contracts have written into them that a person be allowed to work only 40 hours a week. He complained that there are people working up to 14 hours a day. His suggestion would enable unemployed construction workers to become employed. He also suggested the licensing of contractors.

Mr. James Hogan, president of local 240, suggested that turn signals and safety belts be made standard equipment—that is compulsory—by the automobile manufacturers. He also suggested action on unemployment and portable pensions.

Mr. Bill Bielecki suggested that the sales tax be removed on vitamin pills.

Mr. Emil Zarzecki suggested an immediate completion of Highway 401.

Mr. Oliver Stonehouse, a city of Windsor alderman, suggested:

1. Better legislation to deal with desertion of wives and families so that the deserted do not become a charge on the municipality.
2. Legislation to curb excessive rates of financing. The rate of interest to be charged to be specifically set out.
3. Bonus payments for mortgages to be outlawed, such as the signing of a $5,000 mortgage and receiving only $4,000.

4. Legislation to overcome the shopping-hour chaos which leads to certain suburban sprawls.

5. Standardized readers and textbooks so that two or three members of a family could make use of them, rather than have them quickly outdated.

Mr. Speaker, a housewife, who preferred to remain anonymous, suggested legislation to protect the public against the hazards and obstructions of modern packaging, such as concealing net contents, odd weights and measures, meaningless designations, misleading prices.

Mrs. John Smith suggested that legislation be passed banning crooked sales—going out of business, fire, liquidation, bankruptcy and removal sales. She does not refer to the legitimate sales but rather sales of goods which were never involved in any of the above, and are brought in by the back door.

Mr. Charles Burke suggested that as an inducement to keep students in school, and also as an aid to their future education, the family allowance be given to all children attending school regardless of their ages. He would put an age limit of 21 years.

These were some of the suggestions presented. These are not my ideas, but those of constituents of mine, who are interested enough to express their opinions at an open meeting. Other suggestions made will be taken care of by the people of Ontario at the next general election.

Mr. Speaker, two years ago I spoke at some length on physical fitness. Last year my remarks were very brief because I thought that this government had awakened from its lethargy and was going to do something about it. Today it is over one year since the report of the committee set up to study the problem was submitted to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), yet he keeps sitting on it. Why it takes a full year from the time of submission by a committee until the time of presentation by the hon. Minister, I cannot understand. However, in my few years as a member I must now conclude that such stalling is indeed typical.

The need for the programme still remains. Each year's delay in setting it up is an added year of delay of development of top Canadian athletes. It is an added year in the lowering of the prestige of Canada in the eyes of the nations of the world. May I remind this government that France has proposed a $280 million five-year plan. All we do is talk. The Speech from the Throne in 1960 said, and I quote:

A new physical fitness programme will be inaugurated. Our objective will be to co-ordinate efforts and to establish practices that are conducive to good health and physical fitness.

Two years later, and what do we have? A secluded report. Maybe this report has as its parallel the fluoridation report. If we do not get down to some real action soon Canada is likely to drop out of the bottom of the unofficial Olympic points standings. In the summer games at Rome in 1960 Canada managed only one second-place silver medal. This was won by the University of British Columbia eight-oared crew. This was the worst showing by a Canadian team in Olympic history.

In France a bill was introduced for a total outlay of $280 million over the next five years with the state supplying a little more than one half of this money. Local governments and private groups will supply the remainder. This programme calls for 90 new stadiums, 210 swimming pools, more than 1,000 athletic fields, 933 gymnasiums, and a long list of other installations. This whole programme was brought about when sports writers and fans screamed about France's dismal showing in the 1960 Olympic games when the team won only two silver and two third place bronze medals.

The assembly committee on culture, family and social affairs gave unanimous support to this bill. Now, physical education and sports are obligatory parts of the programme of health, work, studies and military life.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Jim Worrall of Toronto, president of the Canadian Olympic Association—and, if I am not mistaken, a member of the committee that studied the problem of physical fitness and that submitted their findings over one year ago—said, and I quote:

I am very impressed with the French government's report. We in Canada have no reason to be proud of, or even complacent about, our showing in international sports generally and in the Olympics in particular. Relatively we did not do as well as France in the games at Rome, but it is not the fault of our athletes. I think the emphasis must be on government support—not only federal but provincial and municipal as well—to provide facilities and trained leadership to improve the standards of physical fitness of the population as a whole, not merely to produce star athletes. Canadian youth has the potential but must be encouraged and developed.

This has become too big a job for the small army of volunteers who for years have been struggling to keep amateur sport alive. What is required now is government assistance to provide the necessary leadership for overall physical fitness.

I regret very much that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) is not in the House, because my comment was: are you listening, Mr. Minister of Health? The fitness of our young and old is of vital import. The case has been diagnosed. Supply us the remedies, Mr. Minister.

Waiting to implement a programme is the same as waiting to operate on a patient who needs this type of medical treatment. Failure to begin a programme only adds to the cost of operating all the types of medical and hospital services. Let us get started with the job. Do it now. Fitness cannot wait.

Mr. Speaker, today is the kick-off day in the city of Windsor for the community Red Feather drive. This community Red Feather drive is promoted to obtain sufficient funds to operate the many charities supported by the fund. I am sure that each and every hon. member of this House joins with me in wishing that large group of volunteers success in their solicitations as they strive to reach their financial goal. To the citizens of Windsor: never was the need greater, nor the task more trying. Please give.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on a topic that has been of major concern to my area for too long a period of time—unemployment. Its causes are as many as the people who discuss the topic. To each person unemployed, his reason is the most important. Let us look at a few.

(1) Automation on the farm with a steady declining farm population.

(2) Automation in manufacturing bringing on changes in the nature of work.

(3) Automation in office procedure.

(4) Lack of training affecting the young and the old.

(5) Foreign imports affecting local manufacturing.

(6) Shifting of trade blocs and markets.

All of these reasons are compounded by a seasonal surge of unemployed workers.

The unusual aspect of the unemployed picture is that of the skilled and semi-skilled. On page 105 of the January, 1962, issue of the Labour Gazette we see the ratio of unfilled vacancies to registration for employment by classes as being: professional and managerial workers, one unfilled vacancy for each two and one half persons registered; sales workers, one unfilled vacancy for each six people registered for unemployment; personal and domestic service workers, one for nine; unskilled, one for 25—with a total of 134,044 unemployed; skilled and semi-skilled, one for 30.

There are a greater number of requests for employment among the semi-skilled and the skilled than there are among the unskilled. These figures are as at November 30, 1961.

The overall picture for Canada as of January 1, 1962, is 22,268 unfilled vacancies for 615,388 persons registered for employment. From the previous figures hon. members can readily see that even though re-training is a very beneficial programme and does partially prepare an individual for another skill and should be encouraged and enlarged, it is not a complete answer nor is lack of training a basic cause of unemployment. The jobs are just not there any longer.

I believe that it is the responsibility of government in a democratic society to take the lead in introducing action for a solution. Unemployment without income is a soul-destroying, respect-corroding ulcer producing social cancer. For the short term I fully believe in the desirability and necessity of increased social security benefits and payments to those out of work. I feel that it is mandatory in our industrial urban society where food, shelter, clothing and health flow directly out of disposable income that persons capable of working, desirous of working but unable to work, must be provided with an income to maintain life and dignity without work. The issue today is not whether there is or is not unemployment, the issue is how best to take care of the unemployed and how best to return them to work so that the immediate needs of persons and family are satisfied and future employment is guaranteed.

Because the causes of unemployment are many and varied the provision of full employment will be complex and difficult. In the search for a solution, the government of a responsible democratic society has an increasing and unavoidable obligation to lead and labour and management have an ever present responsibility to co-operate with one another and with government in working out that solution.

The object of their joint search and their united efforts must be full, permanent, gainful employment for the whole work force. There can be no other policy, there can be no other goal, there can be no satisfaction with nothing less. The goal is to provide jobs, not power in either management or labour. Because with jobs we have a stable work force, a stable society, stable unions, stable companies, stable profits and stable businesses. Without jobs there is no business, no union, no wages, no profits, no management, no dividends.

On this common ground of finding jobs and providing steady income all the best efforts of government, management and labour can find room for action. The task is not to assign blame for present unemployment to management, to labour, to government, to foreign competition, to changing patterns of production or to automation. The task is to recognize the challenge and stride forward for the credit of solving the problem.

In order to achieve full employment in Canada, we need more Canadians. An industrialized economy functions inefficiently supplying a small population. What Canada needs is more people, still more people and still more again. We need millions more people. We have the raw materials of an industrial society, we have the facilities to process them, we have the knowledge, we have the desire to produce and we do produce surpluses in everything from wheat, butter, and eggs to iron, nickel, aluminum, copper, paper and wood.

What we lack is people to consume our production. The best place to have our consumers and hence our markets is right here in Canada. We need an open-door immigration policy that will attract all the immigrants that we can draw to Canada, all the time.

We should not turn immigration on and off like a tap. We should seek out, invite, entice, encourage and assist immigrants to come to Canada. In the long run, Canadians will prosper more and our country will flourish best if we bring to this country enough people to consume our production.

Foreign trade is the frosting on the cake. It simply means that we are feeding, clothing, or housing someone in a foreign country with the certain products of our labours. Usually foreign trade is confined to the special products the foreign consumer wants at a given time and at a given price.

Domestic trade is unconfined. It supplies hon. members and their fellow citizens not only with one or two special items, but with everything from birth to death, including cradles and caskets. It does this year round, each year, every year without the complications of currency problems, foreign government interference or low wage rate competition or anything else.

For example, since 1945 Canada has accepted two million immigrants. The annual expenditures on servicing these people in Canada far surpasses the value of all of Canada's foreign trade. Canadian secondary industry today is producing, exclusive of our paper products, less than 15 per cent of the value of our exports. The mass market for Canada's secondary manufacturing industry is the domestic market, not foreign markets, and the long-term solution for most of industry's problems is a larger Canadian population.

What else can be done? Well, there are many other things that can be done that could ease the long-term impact of unemployment. For example, more planning could be done on the kind and location of our industry. The mismatching of available skills and job openings could be compensated for by a broad approach to the education of our young people so that they will develop several skills that will give them maximum flexibility in a constantly shifting job picture. There can and should be more teachers and facilities for the training and re-training of unemployed and displaced workers. There is need to study the shift of population from farm to city life with a view to making that transition, if inevitable, at least as painless as possible. There is a great need to devise ways and means of reducing the impact of seasonable change on the work force so that tidal surges in and out of the labour force can be blunted.

There is a vast and urgent need to reform our economic, social and public facilities to care for the unemployed and to create ways and means of feeding the human needs of the unemployed workers and their dependents. I believe that government has a prime responsibility to lead in all these various approaches to the solution.

Mr. Speaker, allow me a few minutes to bring the Windsor situation into focus. It was about one year ago that we had a parade of hon. Ministers attempting to duplicate a New York television give-away programme by offering everything to Elliot Lake. I attempted to bring to the attention of this House the fact that Windsor has had a hard core of unemployed that needed attention, yet nothing was done. The total registered for unemployed was over ten thousand. As of November 30, 1961, it was 8,793, a figure surpassed only by Toronto and Hamilton.

Using 1949 figures as 100, the employment index in Windsor as of September, 1961, is 74.2, or the lowest of any of Canada's urban centres. Toronto's is 134.6; Hamilton's is 110.2. Surely when a centre is confronted with as serious a problem as this, that centre deserves special consideration on the part of the government in an attempt to relieve the situation. Surely projects such as a mental hospital, provincial buildings, should have been constructed there and areas where the unemployment index was very satisfactory could have waited for their projects. Surely such a situation should have commanded considered attention and action on the part of this government.

Highways are often said to be the arteries of a community. The completion of 401 could have, and more than likely would have, assisted to partially relieve this grim unemployment picture. Let us connect Windsor with Ontario by completing Highway 401.

Mr. Speaker, on checking with the unemployment insurance commission, I was told that over 500 unemployed had been transferred out of the city, and only 47 newcomers entered. These figures do not exclude the many who have left voluntarily without notification, just drifted away in hopes of finding employment in another area.

Of the hard core of idle, none want to remain as such, but all are anxious to be doing their share in the advancement of the economy of Windsor, of Ontario and of Canada. Many of these are new citizens and newcomers to our shores. It makes them think as to other ways of life. In some of them rages an internal civil war, democracy versus communism. We are being challenged from without by another way of life. We are being challenged daily by the unemployed, whose minds are ripe for other ideologies.

Mr. Speaker, to illustrate conditions may I state that Windsor's welfare department paid out $174,000 during January of this year to 5,497 persons, as compared with $125,000 to 4,160 persons, one year ago, that is in 1961. That is a 32 per cent increase in the numbers receiving welfare in one year. The January payments continue this trend to higher welfare costs, which have been going on for the past two years, and which saw $1,800,000 paid out in 1961 as compared to $1,200,000 in 1960, an overall rise for one year of 50 per cent.

Last year, high relief costs were the biggest single factor behind the city's deficit. The total Windsor area industrial employment has progressively shown decrease. In November, 1960, 393 industrial firms reported 27,932 employees. By December, one month later, it was 27,242, a decrease of 290. By January, 1961, it was down to 26,908, a further decrease in one month of 334. As of January, 1962, it is at 26,256, a further decrease of 652 people. Such retrogression must be halted.

In volume 8, No. 7, September 1961 issue of Ontario Planning, on page 8, we have the Windsor area story presented very well. Comparing population tables of 1956 with 1961, that is a five-year period, the percentage increase in Windsor was 2.9, representing statistically an increase of from 185,865 people to 191,237. The average growth for the seven largest cities in the province was 17.7 per cent. Windsor, the fourth largest metro area, has the smallest growth factor, 2.9 per cent; one so small that inside of five years it will be surpassed by both London and Kitchener.

It is said by some:

One of the reasons why unemployment is so high at Windsor is that industries formerly located there have been moving away. Why are they moving away? Because they did not feel at home in Windsor. They did not feel that Windsor wanted them to operate peacefully, successfully, profitably.

The above several sentences are a quotation from an editorial in one of the local Toronto papers on February 16, 1961. This is just plain tommy rot. That is saying that municipalities in which there is unemployment deserve to have unemployment. Windsor has bent over backwards in its attempts to induce industry, to promote existing industry and to develop new industry.

The industrial climate since 1956, since the time Windsor's population growth was the lowest, has been excellent and I doubt if it could be much improved. There is always room for improvement, but very few centres in Ontario have gone to the extent that Windsor has in even sending a delegation to the Continent in search of business. Mr. Peter Hedgewick of the International Tools Limited—a Windsor area concern—just returned from Germany where he was successful in under-bidding western German firms on a die contract. This is but one of the examples showing the extent of Windsor's employment seeking activities.

The failure to implement the Bladen Report, the failure of the government to encourage secondary industry, hurts them.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian content of the product of a particular manufacturer, for example, automobiles, is set by federal law. The method of computing and auditing this content is extremely complex. However, I would suggest that instead of physical content, the government study the possibility of using labour content, or man hours, as a scale. A large part of a vehicle may be 10 per cent of the vehicle by content, but the labour involved in its manufacture may be only one per cent of the total man hours expended in its manufacture. I realize that this is a federal matter, but possibly this same labour content or man hours principle may be used in other imports, manufacturing processes and trade dealings with countries, all to the benefit of our people. Were such a scheme given serious study, there is the possibility that much of the unemployment in my city would be eliminated.

Mr. Frank S. Capon, of Dupont of Canada Limited, told a Toronto group recently that in Canada there is a refusal to face economic facts. Technical knowledge, he said, now is sufficient to enable Canada to produce most of what it needs by machines. The ultimate mechanization of all means of production can be foreseen, he said. Failure to face facts and to solve problems can only lead ultimately to a breakdown of Canada as we know it. The remark that is most startling of all in his address is that the country's unemployment may reach 25 per cent of the work force within five years.

All of this leads one to conclude that there is not enough work available to gainfully employ every one for 40 hours per week. Is it not then logical that a committee be set up to study the effects of automation and a shorter work week, plus other things?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read the editorial from the February, 1962, issue of Parks and Recreation.

It is entitled:

THE SHORTER WORK WEEK
—A DEFINITE POSSIBILITY

In this New Year the American public was shocked at the New York Electrical Union's demands. The union pushed for a 20 hour week for the same pay clause. This is a rather unusual case since the union in former contracts had already had electrical workers' time reduced to a 30 hour week. Actually they have been working a six hour day. The demands for a 20 hour week were not met, but they did succeed in obtaining a five hour day or, a 25 hour week.

A great amount of publicity has come about as a result of these demands. The working public was interviewed and it was found that they do not agree with such a drastic time reduction. The interviews brought out two reactions to the publicity. First, some of the groups interviewed felt that there was something basically dishonest in putting in so little time. A typical attitude was, "I work more, my father before me worked more, why cannot these people work the same amount of time? Working so few hours we will get nothing done." The second reaction was "Why should they receive more than I? Why should this group be especially privileged? Privileges of this sort should cover all, not just a small part of the labour market."

The public reaction did not cover the points expounded by unions as the reasoning behind a shorter work week. The union felt that automation had pre-empted jobs, thus creating a surplus of labour. They reasoned further that an economic work load balance would be created by a shorter work week, in that short hours would necessitate more people entering the work market and thereby lessening the labour surplus. The profit margin would be lowered but any increased cost that might be entailed could be passed on to the consumer.

The main point, however, is that the shorter work week has made inroads on public thought and the development of this area in other industries is a definite possibility.

It is believed practical as a way of putting those on relief back to work. The move is rapidly picking up steam and we can look for increases in the shorter work week in other areas of business since New York has brought to the fore drastic changes in the thinking of the public, the unions and industry. Since industry in a large way affects governmental policy towards its workers, the shorter work week is part of the future.

Mr. Speaker, conservation, school drop-outs, untrained youth have always been of great concern. It is about time something concrete was done. The time is opportune to set up pilot training and employment programmes for youth including on-the-job and other appropriate training, local public service programmes and conservation programmes. We should:

1. develop methods of promoting the most effective utilization of the production potential of the untrained and inexperienced youth;

2. provide useful work experience and training opportunities for a limited number of youths through the use of pilot programmes authorizing projects for on-the-job and other appropriate training, local public service employment, and camps to conserve and develop our natural resources;

3. determine the effectiveness of these different types of programmes for the training and useful employment of youth to meet current and future technological requirements of an expanding labour market; and thereby,

4. provide Ontario with tested and proven training and work experience programmes for school drop-outs and other youths who will be seeking work in increasing numbers during this decade. Let us study the feasibility of an Ontario Youth Conservation Corps.

Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to speak at some length on education and the present re-training programme, but rather than burden the honourable House and hon. members of this House any longer, I will simply ask that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) relinquish his education portfolio so that the most important department of this government can have a full-time Minister at its head.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the citizens of Windsor are appreciative of all that has been done for them but today's situation is unique and merits consideration. Institutional employment is stable employment. For example, Assumption University is today Windsor's seventh largest industry. Were some of the projects that are being established in this area, to be set up in the Windsor area the picture would be much brighter. Windsor has had difficult times in the past and has always come through and will do so again. Thank you.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this Throne debate I first wish to congratulate you on the way you are carrying out your duties as Speaker of this Assembly. I might say that I have watched from this seat the very important decisions which you have been called on to make since this session started. I might say that you indicated to me that you are fair and impartial, and to you, Mr. Speaker, I would wish you well in this honourable position which you hold.

Mr. Speaker, since the last session many changes have taken place in this honourable Assembly. The passing of three hon. members—hon. members who made marks in this House, hon. members who took a very active part in the debates of this Legislature—and I might say, Mr. Speaker, their passing was certainly a shock to all of us.

I do want to congratulate the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on being elected to that honourable position, a position which very few in this province ever reach. I might say that his position is no easy one either, following the footsteps of his predecessor—a man who had a vast wealth of knowledge, a man who was well versed in history—and, I might say, Mr. Speaker, he will, I know, try to fulfil his position.

I do also wish to congratulate the three newly elected members who were seated in this House last Tuesday. I might say that these hon. members are all young men. After getting acquainted with them, Mr. Speaker, it looks to me that there is a great future for them in political life, and I wish them well and a long political career.

I would also like, Mr. Speaker, to say how it must have pleased the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) when he looked over the votes that were cast in those five by-elections that 45 per cent of the voters who voted, voted for the Liberal party; and will continue to.

An hon. member: Thank you.

Mr. Spence: Now, Mr. Speaker, in this Throne debate I would be remiss if I did not say something about agriculture. Being in agriculture all my life I am still greatly interested in the conditions of agriculture in this province. I know we have a new hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). I know that it may take some while before he gets in full swing but he has a very important position to fill. I might say in this province the hon. member, I believe, Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) brought to the attention of the Legislature that the farmers in the province of Ontario were facing a serious situation. The big processor entering into the field of production was causing a grave concern to us who are engaged in agriculture.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, over the last number of years—I believe in the year 1959, the hon. Minister of Agriculture set up a study group to go to Europe and look into the possibility of markets there for some of our agricultural products, and on the report, after they returned, Mr. Speaker, it was very encouraging to read that there was a possibility of markets in Europe and in England for some of our agriculture products. Now, before this session closes I hope the hon. Minister of Agriculture will try to report what results that study group's visit to Europe achieved and give us something here in the Legislature.

Today it is markets that are bothering us. Marketing has been a problem with us who are engaged in agriculture for a considerable number of years. From time to time we have been told about efficiency, Mr. Speaker, and we have increased production in this province. We doubled our production; but every time we doubled our production, Mr. Speaker, we received about the same amount of money. The agricultural industry is faced with high costs of operation, and I might say if something is not done for agriculture in this province—something done immediately—that a good many farmers are going to disappear in the future.

I believe that in this inquiry committee's report, which I read very closely, we see very disturbing notes—warnings to those engaged in agriculture—that in the past few years about 38,000 farmers went out of the industry of agriculture. They predict in this report that in the next two decades there will be another 26,000 go.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are in the cost-plus squeeze, a tendency to the larger farms in the province, and I for one think that something should be done to preserve the family farm. The new Canadians who came to this country a number of years ago, came with great expectation and hopes that if they came to Canada, they would own and operate their own farm some day. Now that has happened in the past, but that is fading away. In the future those who will immigrate to Canada—if there is any immigration, I might say, Mr. Speaker—the hope is disappearing that they will be able to own and operate their own farm. I think it is a bad thing when the little family farm disappears, and I think this government should take every action that is possible to do something and make every effort that the family farm will be preserved in this province.

After reading through that report I looked through different newspapers and I find our sister province, the province of Quebec, going to do something for the family farm in the province of Quebec. But, Mr. Speaker, they have a Liberal government in that province and I must say that a Liberal government always takes action as soon as a thing exists.

An hon. member: After a little bit.

Mr. Spence: Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. Minister of Agriculture—I was interested the other day when he announced that something was going to be done in the way of marketing—I hope the step that he has taken will assist the farmers. Last year I had an opportunity to visit the United States and I might say I noticed the agriculture industry in that country seems to be thriving and receiving a fair share of the economy. Also we read that in Great Britain the British government is doing something for agriculture, and agriculture seems to be on a firm footing in that country. Now I hope that something can be done to preserve the family farm in the province of Ontario.

Now I am going to say here, on September 1 the three per cent sales tax came into force and that placed a very heavy burden on the small business people of the province of Ontario. The people who were least able to afford this burden—as we know, many have not been able to afford one of these high-priced cash registers, and in many small places where I have called they are using a scribbler to keep track of the articles sold and the taxes collected to be sent here to the government.

Now this is a hardship and I might say as I did in my last speech in this Legislature, I said that we should have some efficiency in government. This afternoon I am going to try to point out one of these things to the hon. Prime Minister and his government, and that is that the grant system of our public and district high schools certainly needs some overhauling.

We had in my part of Ontario a year or two ago a school section which wanted to enlarge their public school. I might say after they discussed what grants would be available from The Department of Education, they found out that it was better—instead of adding another room on the public school—it was better for them to build an entirely new school, because they would get a lot larger grant. Now today, I might say in that school section there is a new school built and the old school is used for a community hall.

Now I have here, in the News Tribune, dated in September, a high school district which had to add more rooms to take care of the increased enrolment of the pupils in that district. I might say the school board architect prepared plans, proposals for what was needed to take care of increased enrolment, but I might say here, Mr. Speaker, these plans had tentative approval by The Department of Education of the province of Ontario. Now I would like to try to outline to this Legislature that the grant system certainly needs adjusting and certainly needs going into when there is too heavy a burden on the taxpayers of the province of Ontario. I think something can be done here at a time when school taxes are felt by all those who are property owners and people of the province of Ontario.

I would like to say that I am for the best education possible for every boy and girl in this province. I want that clearly understood. I am for new schools if it does not create a burden on the taxpayers, Mr. Speaker, and today I am trying to outline to you the situation that exists in the grant system towards building new schools here in the province of Ontario.

The architect met the school board and he said that there was a proposal to enlarge this school; you could add on eight rooms, repair a number of rooms that were built in 1923 and 1929, and the plan would be approved by the fire marshal of the province of Ontario, the health unit and would be satisfactory to The Department of Education. I might say the suggestion is, with all the improvements on the old portion of the school, that the cost would be $407,000 in round figures. But, he said, the grant on this from the Ontario government would amount to $178,000, leaving a total share for the district high school area of $229,000.

Then he says we have another plan, the second proposal, he said you could build 17 rooms on the district high school but he said you would have to tear down eight of the old rooms, rooms that were added in 1923 and 1929, which would mean building a total of 17 rooms at a total cost—with furnishings and everything—of $513,000. Now if you built a new school, the grant that would be possible from the federal Department of Education would be around $301,000, where in the first proposal the grant would be $178,000, by improving the rooms that were built in 1923 and 1929. Leaving a total for the school area of $211,000.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, and I believe around December 14, if I remember correctly, in this House the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) announced here that in the year 1960, 101 new schools or additions to existing schools were completed at a cost of $100 million. This means two new schools for every working day in the year. Now, Mr. Speaker, if this grant system works the same across the province—as it does in these two proposals that the architect outlined to the school board in this district—I think it is a waste and I believe that we should have some efficiency—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Would the hon. member permit a question? Could I ask the names of these school sections so that I may check what the hon. member is talking about?

Mr. Spence: Blenheim District High School. I could send to the hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, the paper I have quoted these figures from.

This is a serious matter to the taxpayers of the province of Ontario, Mr. Speaker. At the present time when the cost of education is so great, I think the government, and the hon. Prime Minister, should look into these things and see that there is no inefficiency in school grants. If these rooms that were built in 1923 and 1929, if they cannot be repaired and improved and save the province a little money, when the burden of the school tax is so great on the taxpayers.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that maybe if we had a little efficiency here we could do away with this sales tax. Or accept the plan which the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) outlined. He introduced a bill here a short time ago, an exemption of tax on all articles below $25, except beer, liquor, and tobacco and so forth. This would be a great relief to the taxpayers who are practically paying all the taxes they can stand at the present time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I might say that I would like to bring to the attention of the Ontario water resources commission, in regards to the sewage disposal systems in our towns and villages of the province of Ontario. I would like to say it seems to be among the property owners that there is a feeling among them that the cost involved—the Act should give the property owners the right to say whether the town undertakes to instal a sewage system and water mains. I understand at the present time the council makes that decision with the approval of the municipal board. And I might say, Mr. Speaker, a number of the taxpayers in these towns and villages are quite concerned because there are very few industries there or very few industries locating in their towns to help to lighten the tax load of the property owners.

I understand the system is that the community is paying back $2 to $3 interest for every dollar the sewerage systems cost. I feel that with towns of less than 5,000 people, it would be practically impossible to handle this because the ratio of expenses to the assessment will raise the taxes too high. Generally speaking, I would suggest that the Ontario water resources commission re-appraise their thinking on communities of less than 5,000 people. I also feel, Mr. Speaker, that sewage systems in our towns would rank second to a proper water distribution system.

I would also ask, Mr. Speaker, what is being done to encourage industry to come into our towns and villages? This would greatly lighten the burden of the taxpayers. I certainly wish to say it is of prime importance to this government that industry should be encouraged to build or to settle or establish in these towns and villages.

I would like to say here, too, that I asked a question of the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow) on December 7 in regard to an article in the London Free Press, an announcement by the deputy Minister in regard to the portion of Highway 401 from Tempo to Tilbury, which was going to be made a two lane highway. In the article it said that the traffic would not warrant a four-lane highway in this area until 1968. I was pleased with the announcement of the hon. Minister that he was going to make every effort to complete the other two lanes in the year 1964. We in that area will be looking forward to a complete opening of 401 right through to the city of Toronto.

I would like to also add here I am very pleased with the fine job the Western Ontario Agricultural School is doing in our part of the province. A large number of young farmers are making use of the fine course that is being taught in that school. I might say also I was pleased to learn that 80 per cent of those who have attended in the past at that school returned to the farm. I believe these schools tend to improve and help and assist those who are returning back to the industry of agriculture. We are very proud, Mr. Speaker, to say what a fine job they are doing.

There are many other things I might say. I hope I will take part in the budget debate. With those few remarks, I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, in making my small contribution to this Throne debate, I would first offer my best wishes to you, sir, and wish you good health for the coming year. I am sure, sir, that you will continue to show the same impartial attitude in conducting the business of this House as you have in the past.

I would also, sir, at this time congratulate the new hon. members elected in the five by-elections that took place in January. I am sure that they will make a contribution to the political life of this province. It seems too bad, Mr. Speaker, that such intelligent young men should become lodged in the sea of frustration of the Conservatives and in particular the Liberal party, when across this province there are thousands and thousands of young, serious-thinking people now finding their rightful place in the New Democratic Party.

An hon. member: What about Argue?

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): We were glad to get rid of him.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): They have not absorbed him yet.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, in the past seven years in the House, and before I became a member, the CCF party presented to this House and to the people of the province of Ontario a reasonable and logical programme, one that the province needs and one that the people deserve. It seems that we have been talking to a stone wall for so long that it might be considered useless to try to convince the government of the day that they are still on the wrong side. But I assure hon. members that our efforts will increase with vigour in the coming year to the point where we will not have to ask or beg, we will implement the programme that is desirable.

Mr. Speaker, it seems about the only thing that has come out of this session so far is the government's decision to establish what is called the Ontario Economic Council. We need this council, Mr. Speaker, about as badly as we need more members on the opposite side. But the establishment of such a council, Mr. Speaker, is a frank admission by the government that it is now time for some real economic long-term planning. However, even this council will not solve the problems which face us today.

As has been pointed out, this is an "advisory council," not a "fact-finding" or an "action" council. It seems that whenever the government finds itself in a spot it sets up still another advisory council. Then when they do their work, gather the material necessary, the results are shelved once more and their efforts have been of no avail.

What we need now, Mr. Speaker, is some immediate action to deal with the present economic crisis, the problem of creating some 60,000 more jobs in the coming year for the new people going into the labour force. This is going to require some real government planning, both on a short term and the long term basis. It is all right, to say, Mr. Speaker, that we have 113,000 unemployed, chronic unemployed. I would think that 60 per cent of that group are never going to find their place again in the labour force in this province. The jobs they can do are not there, they are considered too old. They are considered not of the educational grade to do the work available.

Then we find we have to create a large number of jobs for the newcomers. We do not know whether they have the proper qualifications to do the type of work that is going to be available.

But there is another serious problem that has been overlooked in the past four years, Mr. Speaker. That is the problem of the hundreds of thousands of unorganized workers in this province who are working for sub-standard wages, in poor conditions and for long hours.

The main point is their substandard wages. They are just not able to contribute to the purchasing power of this province. They are not able to buy the things that we produce in this province. They are not able to buy the things that are produced by the heavy basic industry. This problem is a responsibility of both labour and management. Certainly, where we find the well organized basic plant, we find a healthy industry.

I am pleased to be able to say that the Steel Company of Canada since 1958 has adopted some of the recommendations at the pleading of the local union and the international union inasmuch as they have held the line on their prices since that time. This has got to be done by more of the wealthy industries across this province. Either hold their prices at a stable level, or reduce them so that their customers in the fabricating and the secondary industries can give better wages to the employees in those groups.

What we need, Mr. Speaker, is some action. A vastly expanded public works programme to be undertaken immediately is one of the short-term priority projects. We need more hospitals, more schools, more parks and more recreational facilities. I know that this has been said many times by so many people, but it seems that we just do not recognize the need or do not care.

I visited a friend three weeks ago in the Hamilton General Hospital. His bed was shoved back in a corner so tightly that two persons could hardly get near him to make a visit. The congestion was something disgraceful. I hope that we take a real look at the need for the building of more hospitals.

If we do not treble these then the problems we are going to be faced with in the future will overwhelm us.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there are things that this government could do immediately, not just to set the basis for some economic improvement in the province, but to come up to date with the times. That is to revise their labour legislation—their welfare legislation—at least in line with the many other provinces across this country and make some effort to reach the tremendous social welfare legislation they have in the European countries.

We could immediately, Mr. Speaker, establish a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour for both men and women. This would go a long way towards increasing the purchasing power of our people. At $1.25 an hour, Mr. Speaker—if they worked a 40 hour week—their take-home pay would be $50; or if they worked 48 hours, the legal maximum, they would get $60, a total of $3,120 a year.

That is just under half our indemnity as members in this House for the few months that we have to serve. I am sure the hon. members will agree that this is not exorbitant.

We should establish immediately in this province, Mr. Speaker, a legal maximum of an eight-hour day and a 40-hour week. There is no justifiable excuse to continue on in the medieval thinking that we are carrying on at the present time. This should be without reduction in take-home pay and with not less than time and a half for unavoidable overtime.

Certainly another contribution could be made, Mr. Speaker, by an increase in vacations with pay. Thousands of our people who are working in the sub-standard industries are getting no more than one week. I have explained before what it would mean, if a million of the workers in this province were given extended vacations; have explained what it would mean to steady jobs for the unemployed.

The government should simplify the certification procedures in The Labour Relations Act to give genuine encouragement to the unorganized to get into a union of their choice so that they can help themselves and raise their standards of living.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that these measures are a prerequisite to sound economic planning and a must for the 1960's. Let us see this government take a forward step at this time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the Royal York strike for a moment. This strike has been going on now for almost a year. I do not know the exact number of people involved but I believe it is between 430 and 485.

I do not think that anyone can deny that their strike is justified. Their conditions were inadequate; their conditions were those that hon. members would not find in any other industry.

They had done a brilliant job in maintaining the picket line without violence or trouble and I hope that they continue to do so until they feel they have reached what they consider an honourable settlement. I think they deserve the support of all hon. members of this House; the public; and the people of Toronto in particular.

Many strikes take place, Mr. Speaker. Some are won with emphasis on different provisions. Sometimes a long strike take place for union recognition; sometimes for a better health and welfare programme; sometimes it is specifically for higher wages. But they are all settled at one time or the other.

I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that there have been strikes that the unions have considered they have lost, but in all cases, as far as I am concerned, they have admitted their loss and they have gone back to work, with at least their union intact and with a feeling that they still have their souls.

The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), or I might at this time say the minister of anti-labour, as he is rapidly becoming known, really fluffed his first assignment. As we adjourned for the Christmas holidays, we had an assurance from the hon. Minister that he had evolved a secret plan that would settle the Royal York strike. It was very secret; so secret that it took six weeks to reach the light of day. When the hon. Minister finally revealed this plan, it turned out to be nothing more than a warmed-over version of management's proposals. The hon. Minister was indignant when the strikers, not unreasonably, turned it down.

I am wondering whether the hon. Minister now wishes that his secret plan had not remained secret for all time. It certainly did not accomplish anything, except to have organized labour wonder whether they are now dealing with a minister of management, instead of an hon. Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker, the incompetence and the inexperience of the hon. Minister in his bungling of that attempt was very disturbing to the workers in that hotel. I have often, in this House, criticized the previous hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) for his lack of initiative and for his lack of taking part and trying to put some drive into settling serious strikes. But I could never accuse him of being partial and indignant, or at any time of using coercion to obtain a settlement. If he could not settle it, if he could not do anything about it, he left it alone.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Labour in talking to the television and the press to express his indignation over the alleged failure by the union negotiators to keep an agreement they supposedly made with the hon. Minister of Labour, in my opinion, became nothing less than an agent of the C.P.R. management.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): What else was he? He just put forward the C.P.R. proposal.

Mr. Gisborn: I was not too surprised, Mr. Speaker, because the hon. Minister of Labour has held several portfolios in this House and in my opinion he failed in all of them. Planning and Development, Hydro, Municipal Affairs and now as the hon. Minister of Labour. Certainly he will go down as the agent of management in this particular affair.

Mr. Thomas: He will be rewarded though, later on.

Mr. Gisborn: His efforts and his actions in this situation made him appear to me like the lackey who had acquired a tremendous appetite for the flavour of bootblack. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the leaders of this government will make sure that we have no more of this partial, blatant coercion on behalf of agents of the government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like through you, sir, to have a word with my charming friend, the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay).

An hon. member: When did he get charming?

Mr. Gisborn: Well, I am sure he made a charming speech to his fairy godchild captive audience of 30—it did not say how many—but I am sure he made a very charming speech to them. I noted in his comments that he took the opportunity in an insidious way to draw an analogy between the Communist Party and the New Democratic Party. If he calls this mass communistic psychology, I wonder what those 30 young godchild Progressive Conservatives thought of the malarkey he poured out to them last night.

But the main point of his speech, Mr. Speaker, was this: A news story in last Friday's Toronto Daily Star, February 23, was headed: "Labour Destroying Self by N.D.P. Link—Macaulay." I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, tomorrow's news story should read: Macaulay in Wishful Daydream—Gisborn". Because I want to assure the hon. Minister that the trade union movement is going to continue to take political action, basically because they are convinced that it is the policy and the lack of planning of the government to which the hon. Minister belongs, that are responsible for them being deprived of a job, deprived of a decent standard of living and deprived of the human dignity that they so rightfully deserve.

This concern about organized labour does him credit, though I would like to see him display the same kind of concern for big business involvement in politics. But perhaps the hon. Minister's concern would not be quite so great if organized labour had decided—and here I must ask the hon. members to really stretch their imagination—if they had decided to become involved with the Tory party. I can assure the hon. Minister that the trade union movement will continue its support and become part of the New Democratic Party, not because of any narrow, selfish interest on their part but because they feel that as New Democrats they can join with the farmers, the professionals, housewives, in fact all the people of Canada, to work out a programme that will benefit all the people.

Mr. Bryden: Who took the picture of the hon. Minister at that meeting?

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, maybe at this point while we are dealing with labour's support of the New Democratic Party, I should say something about the policy of the Liberal party in regards to labour. Certainly they have been doing, or attempting to do, a lot of wooing of the trade union groups. I was sure they would like to hear of the three Liberals from Local 1005, out of a membership of 8,000 who expressed some concern about the method of our joining the New Democratic Party. After having three weeks notice that the meeting would take place, there was no one there to speak on behalf of the Liberal party, so we cancelled the meeting and held it a week later. At that meeting they did have a spokesman. But strangely enough, his argument was that we should not join with the New Democratic Party and support the Liberals, he just said we should not talk about politics in a union hall.

For the benefit of the House I would say, Mr. Speaker, that our local union, with over 8,000 members, is proud to affiliate with the New Democratic Party. We will use our influence in the trade union movements across this province and across Canada to tell them why. And for the information of some of those who are so concerned about our contracting-out provisions, we have 38 members out of over 8,000 contracted out. I do not even know who they are myself, contrary to the remarks of some of those insidious thinking people who say we have a black book and we put their names down and then really kick them about after.

Let me take the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, at this time to warn the trade union movement about the Liberal policy in regard to this. In general, it is not necessary. They know that in the federal House they held office for some 22 years and did absolutely nothing towards helping the programme for the trade union movement. They have not forgotten, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Mitchell Hepburn's famous hussars and his famous statements in 1937 that he would drive the C.I.O. out of Canada. Some of this thinking still sticks with the Liberal party.

The hon. member across the way, Mr. Speaker, says that is ancient. Does he consider the dictatorial actions of Joey Smallwood ancient? When this happened the Liberal party in the province of Ontario and across this country sat on their hands. They might, in passing, have said they did not agree with him. But had they disagreed with it in the manner it deserved, they would have risen with strong indignation and condemned Joey Smallwood for his dictatorial actions.

Also, when the B.C. Social Credit government brought in their infamous legislation to bar the trade union movement from participating in politics financially, they accepted it with some glee. No one will kid me that they took any other position on it.

But we have also—

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege. The hon. member is stating inaccurate remarks in connection with the B.C. Liberal party. I would suggest that he read some of the programme that they have.

Mr. Gisborn: I did not mention, Mr. Speaker, the B.C. Liberal party at all. I am talking about the Ontario Liberal party.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Oh, so we are responsible for the legislation of British Columbia.

Mr. Gisborn: I did not say hon. members were responsible for it, but I say, and I still maintain, that hon. members accepted the plea, they sat on their hands.

An hon. member: That is what they did.

Mr. Gisborn: If they did not, I would like to hear one of their labour spokesmen tell us their position on the B.C. legislation.

We do not have to go outside of the House, Mr. Speaker, to get some idea of the Liberal party's approach to labour's movements in this province—

An hon. member: We will never get another labour vote after this.

Mr. Gisborn: We had the now deceased member for Kenora (Mr. Wren) whom I always admired for his forthright position on the problems of the northland and his particular riding. He expounded some philosophy on behalf of the Liberal party when he said we should get away from international trade unionism and get into national trade unionism. He echoed, at that time, the precise thinking of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the propaganda they were pouring out across this country.

We have the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) in this Throne debate taking on the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) about his legislation, his bill to expose campaign contributions, and he said:

Put, also put in your legislation—I would recommend that you put in your legislation that the trade union locals have a secret ballot to decide whether they would join the New Democratic Party or not.

This is an indication of what the Liberals would do—legislate the internal problems of the trade union movement every chance they get.

Mr. Singer: Is the hon. member opposed to secret ballot?

Mr. Bryden: We are opposed to hon. members trying to interfere with their affairs.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): But it is all right for the hon. member to interfere.

Mr. Bryden: We would not interfere at all. It is their own decision concerning their own constitutions.

Mr. Gisborn: That is right, I am talking about interference with their internal problems and their internal rights, not their public responsibilities.

Another indication, Mr. Speaker, that I must mention of the Liberal Party's attitude towards labour took place in Simcoe when a large group of lawyers, I believe the paper stated, voted with the majority to have court action in regard to compensation cases. Certainly if there ever was a move to really upset one of the finest pieces of legislation and provide a bonanza for an up and coming young group of Liberal lawyers, this is it.

An hon. member: Has the hon. member talked to him, does he know what his name is?

Mr. Gisborn: These, Mr. Speaker, are some of the indications and the attitudes expressed by the Liberal Party in regard to the labour movement in this country.

Now for something on a lighter side. I was glad to hear my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) express his vexation with regard to the vocational training school in Hamilton. He did not say very much about the need for it or the fact that a school will be established in London, but he was vexed because he was not contacted instead of the mayor and the committee in Hamilton in regard to the placing of a vocational school or vocational college in Hamilton. I just want to tell him how far he is behind the time. I was part of the committee and helped to elect—

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): And that is what happened!

Mr. Gisborn: —and helped elect a very responsible trade unionist in Hamilton to the committee. They are so far ahead of the Liberal member in Hamilton he does not know how to catch up. They had discussions with the city council, they had been in contact with the Premier of this province, they had been in contact with senior officials of the board of education. I am hopeful that their efforts are going to bear some fruit and serious consideration will be given to a vocational training school in that highly industrialized area of Hamilton.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to conclude at this point and I assure the hon. members that they will hear more from this party before this session is over.

An hon. member: Hear, hear. Is that a threat or a promise?

Mr. Gisborn: I have been waiting patiently, Mr. Speaker, to hear or see something of the Liberal Party's provincial programme. I might as well go into the same wishful thinking and day-dreaming that the hon. Minister from Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) has gone into the last week, because I do not think they have got one—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Tell us about it.

Mr. Gisborn: I do not think they know how to develop one, but I will assure them that this fall when the Ontario New Democratic Party will have its regular convention—

Mr. Wintermeyer: I thought they had one.

An hon. member: Did they not have one before?

Another hon. member: This will be a dumbfounding convention.

Mr. MacDonald: We had them regularly enough—we will not be as dumbfounded as you were.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. members to let the hon. member proceed. I do not believe he needs any running commentary. I would ask the hon. members for order.

Mr. Gisborn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am not bothered in the least. In the fall we will have our second convention and there will be developed and presented to the public the most dynamic programme this province has ever seen. It will be a programme that will bring about the social and economic justice that this province so greatly deserves and has no chance of obtaining through either of the two old parties.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, may I at the start, sir, congratulate you because I sincerely believe that you have earned the respect of all sides of this House for your urbanity, your gentle humour and your kindness. One of the aspects of your kindness which I certainly appreciated is that every Christmas you send me, and I presume you send it to every hon. member of the House, a little book on proverbs for daily living. I decided that I would look in this book in order to try to understand your cool calmness and I suggest that the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) would do well to read it, there are some gems of wisdom—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): I got a head start a year-and-a-half ago.

Mr. Thompson: Well, the hon. member got another one this year as well, which probably he overlooked. But, Mr. Speaker, I am talking to you at this point, I realize that you have obviously read the book, and I realize that you have assumed some of the philosophy from the book. I think that in this philosophy the secret of your own approach to us is described in one of your proverbs: "A little explained, a little endured"—I want to emphasize that in view of having sat here during the last speaker—"a little endured, a little forgiven, the quarrel is cured."

May I add, sir, that I was inspired by the book and thought I would see some proverb that might be fitting for me as I stood today to make my remarks on the Throne Speech, and I saw this, sir. A proverb saying, "A slip of the foot, sir, you may soon recover, but a slip of the tongue you may never get over." This is not the most invigorating stimulant to encourage me to speak, so I looked just ahead of that to another proverb: "Up, sluggard, and waste not life. In the grave will be sleeping enough!"

An hon. member: No wonder he said that to the Liberal Party.

Mr. Thompson: This book was not given to me or my party alone. I imagine you might have sent two or three of these copies to the leader of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That is a very weak comeback.

Mr. Thompson: —but I would say that certainly you have sent it to the other side of the House. Quite frankly I am not feeling as personal about your remarks as the leader of the New Democratic party because I do not think it applies to me completely. But I would suggest, sir, that we should look at the convention, the leadership convention of the Conservative party and perhaps some of these gems from your proverbs will apply there.

Now, sir, a dynasty has passed in Ontario. A chieftain has retired, and I am sure I speak for all the House when I say we wish him a most pleasant retirement. I am also sure that the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) will have to replenish the lakes near Lindsay because the chieftain was very able in luring votes and I imagine he is just as accomplished in luring fish. Before the dust of the leadership battle has settled, I would like to congratulate the new hon. Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Robarts), the man on whose uneasy head lies the crown. I would suggest that he is assuming a very great responsibility and I am sure all of us wish him the best of health in this because we know the personal sacrifice that is required in public office, the sacrifice from his family and the tremendous pressure of work that he has to assume.

Now, I say that the dust of the leadership convention had probably settled, although I was inclined to question this. I noticed last week, sir, one hon. member on the other side of the House who seemed to me to be more concerned about whether the dust had settled or not. I notice him just walk into the House. And I suspected that he perhaps felt he had been scarred by the chase for the leadership and he was pleading, with head bloody and bowed, before the House. I hope that the hon. Prime Minister will deal kindly and gently with those who fell by the wayside because of the choices that they made during that leadership convention.

I would suggest to the hon. members on the other side that I would feel with this hon. Prime Minister there will not be the same need for obsequious bowing to him. Since I have been in this House I imagine there have been at least 10 pages that have been spoken by hon. members glorifying the previous Prime Minister, in the hope that—I would say about 10 pages of quotes have been taken—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): The hon. member has just been glorifying him himself.

Mr. Thompson: But not with the same objective that the hon. Minister has.

Well, sir, there have been 18 years of smug and complacent Conservative rule, and I would like to look just a little bit at the fight that did take place for the new leader. Were the issues discussed—this is the first question—did they get out a platform—the men running for office? Because, believe me, sir, there were issues that should have been discussed. I suppose in the 18 years that this Conservative government has ruled in Ontario it has had the most peculiar record, possibly, in the whole of the British Commonwealth. The immorality that has been exposed with respect to people in public office.

I just emphasize again that there were three of the previous Cabinet Ministers who were forced to resign because of their conflict between private and public interests. We have seen conflict between private and public interests in connection with the scandals in municipal life, in Eastview, in Belleville, in Arnprior, in York township, Vaughan township, Mimico and so on. I think that to me the real blot on the record of the Conservative government has been their lack of ability to face up to the issue of public poverty in the face of private wealth.

This is the richest province in Canada and yet our cities have slums, children are neglected, mental hospitals are overcrowded, and they are backward, and the pleas made that they have not got enough professional staff—the pleas made by the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett) that he cannot attract professional staff; but I suggest if we were waging war in connection with an enemy or nation attacking us, we would train in a very great hurry people to tackle the problem and I wish that this government had seen the urgency to tackle the public poverty in the face of private wealth.

Now, sir, I was interested to see if in the leadership race any of the gentlemen who were running suddenly saw the light and realized that perhaps the record of the previous leader had not been particularly bright. I think it befitting that it was the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) whom I read about first, who saw the situation of the backwardness and the lack of interest in public morality and in trying to help the poverty that there is and the gaps in prosperity in this province; and he said it, I think, in the language that is characteristic of his background, and I quote from the Toronto Star of October 21, 1961, and this is what this aspirant for leadership said:

I ask myself how in the name of heaven can we expect to change from the evils of our government and over-taxation if the expenditures being made during the campaign are representative of the kind of government that these men expect to lead.

This aspirant for leadership, Mr. Speaker, was referring to the others including the one who became successful, and he was referring particularly to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) who had a pamphlet—a handy and expensive pamphlet brochure something like those that we often see on our desks coming from his department—and it was entitled, "Dedication, Experience, Responsibility," and the aspirant, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer), said that as well as dedication, experience, responsibility, he said, "I would add extravagance."

Both the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) and the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe were concerned about too much government. They suddenly saw the wisdom, which they had not seen before when they served under the then Prime Minister (Mr. Frost). Again they are quoted as calling for more activity on the part of The Department of Commerce and Development in reallocating industry into the province.

Another point the hon. Minister of Health talked about was the splendid adventure in the free enterprise system. I am not not quite sure if he spelled out his philosophy in reallocating industry, and his statement with respect to this splendid adventure in the free enterprise system.

There was another aspirant, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), and it was stated that he had campaigned with great energy, but he did not come out with any particularly profound insight into the decadence of the 18 years of rule under the Conservatives. He said, "I have no profound announcement." This was in the Kenora Miner. "I have no profound announcement concerning politics," said the hon. Attorney-General. "I shall use the beacon, the great wisdom of Mr. Frost as is reflected in the prosperity of Ontario, the leader of the Dominion."

Now, may I say, Mr. Speaker, that not all the aspirants for leadership were satisfied with the beacon of the previous hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost). The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) was not satisfied. He obviously wanted to chart his own course and thought that the beacon that the hon. Attorney-General was following might lead into the rocks, because the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, according to the North Bay Nugget of August 10, 1961, said, "With man orbiting the earth the age of the horse and buggy is over."

Again in the Kingston Whig Standard on October 18, 1958, he said, "There must be changes in the Conservative platform if the party is to succeed after Frost's departure." And indeed he mapped out a most unusual course for his party. I think he was guided very much by the policies of the Liberal Party, both in Ottawa and here. I notice a great similarity taking place from the speeches of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) and those that had been fought for by the hon. leader of my party. For example, like the municipal loans fund which the province was going to emphasize.

Let me say another thing that the hon. Minister of Energy Resources had in common with my hon. leader. He had some concern and apprehension about the sales tax because he said, when he was asked about the sales tax, and I quote from the Lindsay Post of October 16:

he was not sure that the sales tax was the fairest method of raising the needed extra revenue. Personal income tax levy might be a better method, he declared.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): I never said any such thing in my life. I never mentioned the sales tax during the whole of the process.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you questioning the Lindsay Post?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do not care what the Lindsay Post says —

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to read from the Lindsay Post and send it over to the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What date is that, may I ask?

Mr. Thompson: October 16—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do not know anything about it.

Mr. Thompson: —1961. I would be very glad to read it:

PC party leader aspirant, Robert Macaulay, is not prepared to comment on the future of the 3 per cent Ontario sales tax, should he become the party leader. He said Sunday afternoon at Lindsay that until the tax was introduced, the province was running in the red to the tune of about three hundred million.

And I would say he had more insight than the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) when he brought this out. He figured the tax revenue would cut this by about half. However, he also said that he was not sure this was the fairest method of raising the needed revenue. And in quotes, Mr. Speaker, and I am now quoting:

Personal income tax levy might be a better way.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I never made any such statement as that.

An hon. member: And to make such a statement on Sunday.

Mr. Thompson: May I say some more which the hon. Minister of Energy Resources has—at least he is alleged to have said—but he has conveniently, or perhaps not conveniently, but anyway, he has forgotten now. And this is from the Peterborough Examiner of October 16, 1961. He decried the past lack of economic planning, especially of northern Ontario, and he added—and I think this is an unusually perceptive thing on the part of the hon. Minister; he added—we have got to have goals.

An hon. member: We have got to have what?

Mr. Thompson: Goals. It might mean jails. Now I would like to say this for the hon. Minister of Energy Resources. He was unique of all the aspirants in that he wanted to have a programme. And he described that he had a disappointment because the others did not seem to have a programme. Frankly, I think that another approach in which he is unique is that I personally think that the hon. Minister of Energy Resources reads. I think that he reads and I think that he has obviously studied, not only the economic programme of the Liberal party, but also some of the programmes around the world.

Now I know that the previous hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) will say that is a dangerous thing for any young man to do, as he has to me. Perhaps it is, in the Conservative party. But sir, this is where the contrasts came in connection with the now hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). Because, unlike the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, the hon. Prime Minister really did not want to discuss any programme. He made this profound statement at Cornwall on September 25. "There are various fields in which I have interests but I am not advocating any great breaks with firm policy."

Now I would be unfair to say that it was just the hon. Minister of Energy Resources who had a programme. The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) also came out with an inspiring programme, which I must say did differ a little from that of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources. But I think what the hon. Minister of Energy Resources had hoped for was that the leadership, or the apparent leadership aspirants, would come out with some kind of policy. However, the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) dodged this, I thought somewhat effectively, in suggesting that it was not up to the leaders to make policy, it was up to the grass roots to do it.

And so, sir, I went to the grass roots, that is to the 40 or 50 who sat in the Conservative convention working out a policy. And I saw the enlightened approach that they were going to develop, the new approach that would solve the problems of this great province.

The first thing that was high on the list was that the liquor laws should be modernized. Then, with the true sense of responsibility of a provincial government, they said that more money must come from the federal government for old-age pensions.

The unsatisfied judgment fund was to be changed and they were going to cover loopholes in the federal Bill of Rights. The other was that there would be some kind of an arrangement to attract immigrant families to work on farms and that immigrants should be able to be covered immediately by The Ontario Hospital Insurance Act.

This is what came out of this great convention that we have heard so much about. Well, sir, I was interested. I was actually out west at the time, so I had to find out from reports on the convention from the newspapers.

I realized the fight that must be taking place in Toronto, as all eyes were watching the performance. I was in Calgary at the time and it was a couple of days before I was able to get my Globe and Mail, because I believed that would be the most objective newspaper to give me an idea of what had taken place at the convention. I picked up my Globe and Mail of October 26, 1961, in connection with this elaborate convention from which a leader was going to stride forth.

The Globe and Mail, on their editorial page, this is how they talked of this great convention: "Organized Idiocy." And they went on to describe—

An hon. member: Who said that?

Mr. Thompson: The Globe and Mail of October 26, 1961. And then they went on to describe how this great Conservative Party, trying to show a flush of youth, had had to invigorate its ranks by hiring young men and some old people, who were supposed to put on phoney demonstrations for each of the seven candidates.

Sir, is this the decline and fall of the Frost empire? This reign, which again I want to emphasize is peculiar because it has withstood the resignation of three Cabinet Ministers, it withstood improprieties in public office, the municipal office, and it withstood the cry of people about the glaring inequality in connection with crowded institutions, with slums, with children in institutions.

I want to emphasize that point. We have been waiting for a long time to see if the government would take responsibility for young children who are in institutions. I asked the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) about this two years ago. He told me it was not a responsibility of government, yet the government gives grants to these institutions. I will be interested in seeing the report that comes out in connection with this.

All I can say about the convention, Mr. Speaker, is what was written up by a very wonderful and penetrating columnist who died some time ago. She was with the Financial Post and had been with the Toronto Telegram. It is Judith Robinson of whom I am speaking, sir.

May I just simply say that she feels that after the leadership election there needs to be a great deal of roof patching. She feels that it is going to be hard for one particular aspirant to be able to fit in with the rest of his Cabinet. Now, I feel that with regard to this man and some of the things that he came out with, and I am referring to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), I would agree with the incisive ability of Judith Robinson to see some of these situations. She suggests that Bob, as she says, should not be in the same government with them and hon. members and I should not be in the same party.

Now, sir, I think that the hon. Minister of Energy Resources is a man who reads. He is unusual from many of our celebrated colleagues on the other side in that having read he has learned. He came out with some very intelligent and able things. The only difficulty is that neither he nor they would be accepted by that old decadent administration which has been warped and shrivelled over 18 years.

Now, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) looked at me as though I might be being a little bit unfair in this.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Oh, no, I do not. I do not look at the hon. member as if he were unfair.

Mr. Thompson: I do not think the hon. Prime Minister should, if he does.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member is not unfair.

Mr. Thompson: In regard to the five by-elections recently, one of the great prides of the old, big dynasty was that: "We never lose a by-election. We never lose a by-election." That is the old refrain, the old refrain.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: A Liberal never died before, they just let the air out.

Mr. Thompson: It is an old refrain. Now, what happened? I would like to suggest in the hon. member's little proverb book here there is a great deal of truth that could be applied to this party, because one of the proverbs, for March 2, I think, said: "All is lost that is poured into a cracked dish."

No matter how they embellish it with words, sir, the Conservative party's dish is cracked. We see this. We see the almost desperate endeavour on their part during the Throne Speech to embellish the plate, to hide the crack, cover it up with sticking plaster or something.

Here was the usual platitudinous statement, looking up to the mountain top. But another little thing in the hon. member's book says, and I say this particularly with reference to the Throne Speech, and this is the motto for today, February 26. It says: "A good example is the best sermon." I would suggest that we naturally will be cynical of these highly platitudinous remarks that come from the Throne Speech, because we have not seen much of a good example from this Conservative government.

Now, sir, are we too harsh with the beat of drums and with the wave of an enormous panorama? The hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman), the hon. Commissioner of Liquor—I am sorry I have not got the title straight but he is smiling at me and I think he knows that I am referring to him—was suggesting there were going to be great provisions in the liquor laws and of course we looked with anticipation to this, because the hon. leader of the Opposition had pointed out very clearly the direction that the hon. Minister should have taken—pointed out very clearly the hypocrisy in the liquor laws.

And I remember a couple of Sundays ago being on a radio programme with the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) and how sorry I felt for him, because I realized that there was a conflict of conscience between the man as a party member and a bright, able, young individual. He could not talk about anything on that programme and in a rather plaintive manner his report to me was, "Well, you know the liquor situation was really started by Hepburn." Eighteen years, and yet they have not changed it.

And then did they change it? What happened? As the hon. leader of the Opposition so aptly said, it was like the squeak from a mouse instead of the roar of the lion. What did they change? The permits. But, oh, they were still nervous about that. Here they stood with righteousness and sanctimonious attitude about the reason for having the permit. I can well recall this. Someone stood up quivering with righteousness and told me in this House that permits must stay to guard our youth in case they should get a bottle of whisky or some such thing. It was the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) who said that.

An hon. member: On March 17.

Mr. Thompson: Was it March 17? Well, it was a suitable occasion to discuss it.

What happened to change the whole situation, as it has done very little? As I look across at the hon. Minister of Liquor Permits, I know that his title is broader but his actions do not distinguish him as being much more than chief of liquor permits. I know he is very restless and hoped to have broader changes and get this from just a hypocritical approach. We are cynical about this, why should we not be cynical about the rest of the platitudes that are being placed before us through the Speech from the Throne?

May I say that to me there was an indication of the priority which this government gives when we had safety regulations which were so urgently needed, when we have asked that these regulations should come before the House, when we have had over 25 men die in Metropolitan Toronto because of the lack of safety regulations, and yet in priority the regulations that are changed are in connection with liquor permits while this regulation with respect to the safety of workers is still delayed as it goes through another council prior to being brought down.

Now, sir, I would be unfair to the new hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) if you should castigate him for the lack of action that has taken place with respect to safety, because I feel very strongly that the McAndrews Report which came out—these conditions were known for many years, and I, as the member for Dovercourt riding, have seen and talked with people in my riding who suffered fear and worry every time they went to work and did not know their rights, and I hope that very shortly we will hear of safety regulations and that they will have the priority that the government has given to changing the liquor regulations.

May I say that I think of my own riding at this time; I think of the very real need, and feel a concern for the people of a minority group whom we have invited to come to this country. Now I know that the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) has been critical of me because he says I speak of ethnic groups and I would say to him I speak of them because I represent them; my riding is a cosmopolitan one.

And I, sir, have been concerned at the tendency for exploitation of newcomers in our society here. And I have seen examples of that exploitation. I just read here from the Toronto Star a new affair of an Italian immigrant who had come to Canada and puts in 48 hours a week and gets $35, and they go on to describe more.

And I would suggest that the hon. Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Yaremko)—and I am sure he is concerned as I am—and I am sure he knows that in his riding as in mine and many of the others, there are these cases of exploitation. I would like to feel that citizenship could mean more than just describing the colour of the maple leaf, even though I must say that was done with a poetry that speaks highly of the hon. Minister's artistic soul, but I would say this, that the hon. Minister knows as I do that citizenship should mean equal opportunity and should not mean exploitation.

I emphasize that one of the ways in which we can check exploitation is by ensuring a minimum wage Act, and amplifying it and seeing that it is carried out. I would say another way is to examine carefully in our civil service that where people are applying through the civil service, who do not have a knowledge of English, or French, that we have people to help them. We have invited people to come to this country who are contributing, but I feel sure that if we look at many of our welfare offices, if we look in the federal department at the unemployment insurance offices, we find that the occasion for a newcomer to go to these offices is one of frustration and apprehension in that he cannot make himself understood and he fears the officials.

And yet surely in this province of ours one of the great things is that the services, the public services, are not feared like a Gestapo, but they are there as a service to the people. And I think it is an obligation for us to see that any minority group who have served us well with their labour—that we also, when they are in need, serve them well.

I would also like to talk about retraining. And I would like to put it to the House in this way. I have listened for example to the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence). I was going through some of his speeches over the weekend. And I was interested in his emphasis on immigration. I know there are many people on all sides of this House who believe in immigration, who are immigrants themselves or their parents were. Yet I would suggest in the world today if we believe in getting new people and if we are going to follow the policies of the hon. federal Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough), which are to select skilled people to come here, then—in view of the European Common Market and the increased prosperity in many of the industrial countries—we are going to have to take people from some of the less wealthy and more rural countries.

And that requires that we take them with the understanding we are going to have to help them to integrate into our industrial society at the start. And if we look on it just purely in terms of economics, I think that it could be justified to give some kind of retraining to these new people coming because, over a period, if they adjust into our economy, their children are going to be consumers and they themselves are going to be contributing. And I would say that an example for breaking the way on this is right now, the opportunity—and it is in connection with the retraining programme which is going on near my own constituency—to develop across this province under Schedule 5.

And I would like again, sir, to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) who is also the hon. Minister of Education, seriously to reconsider the decision for not permitting men—who have had trade training in Europe and who have come here, and who have been encouraged to come here—for not permitting them to be included in a retraining programme so they can adapt into the Canadian economy. I think this is something that should be worked out definitely with Ottawa, as our economy develops more and as we encourage more new people to come in.

May I say, sir, that I do not like to feel that I am being continuously destructive about what the government proposes. There have been some glimmers of light, I think particularly with respect to housing. We certainly know that housing was most vitally needed. I was pleased to see that the hon. Prime Minister on television last night admitted that his housing programme was an emergency. Of course it is an emergency.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I thought I said it was not a crash programme.

Mr. Thompson: Not a crash programme. But the hon. Prime Minister said there was an emergency for this.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, there is a sense of urgency about it; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. Thompson: Well, let me just put to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources just how urgent it is. I am glad that he—I feel a kind of spark of warmth for him, in that he sees this. And I will tell you why, because none of the other hon. members has noticed it. But let me tell you this; for example in Metro unit, in connection with public housing, this is our bold imaginative approach: In Metro there were 3,206 all filled with 10,000 waiting. Ray Timson, writing a series of articles in the Toronto Daily Star, suggested that 6,000 persons in this city—6,000 persons live in multiple family rat-holes, at rents up to $460 per month.

Now I would like to address that to the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope). I have often felt that he lives and exists in an enthusiastic cloud. I remember last year when I was speaking about the tough situation of people in my riding, and he pulled out a handkerchief in that gallant way that he has; he demonstrated to me his cynicism about the problems of my people.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): I was really crying. I could not help it.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I accept it, but I would like to see more than tears; I would like to see action.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I acted as well, which brought more than tears.

Mr. Thompson: I invited the hon. Minister to come with me through the riding.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member was not even there.

Mr. Thompson: I apologize I did not recognize the genuine tears and thought it was cynicism, because when you ask what is a rat-hole, I would be glad to show you, and I think you would be appalled at the conditions under which some of our people, our citizens, are living. I think if you were to see some of these situations that you would not only suggest that this is an experiment which may stop. You would have to say this: It has to go through and it is a crash programme.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We have said those things over on this side of the House.

Mr. Thompson: Let me say how much they have done, just to re-emphasize. I do not think the hon. Minister of Mines heard it, Mr. Speaker. Thirty per cent of the 400,000 dwelling units are occupied by two or more families with two or more children each. These are the rat-hole places I am talking about that get $460 per month. There are over 10,000 people who want to get into these housing units.

Sir, I could go on a great deal. One point that I want to state is in connection with crime. Now I can appreciate what the pressure was on the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) to get action in connection with crime. I am not going to say that it was entirely his fault, but in the sudden period of hysteria I must say I was shocked that in my own riding well-established citizens of a minority group were enjoying a stag party—they are reputable men of the community, lawyers and doctors—and suddenly with this new flush of enthusiasm to catch criminals, instead of looking at the situation, the hon. Attorney-General—and I am not saying that it is his fault completely, but however, he is the final man responsible for it—they took these citizens of Canada down to the jail. The grandfather of the prospective bridegroom was an elderly man who had to suffer the indignation of being put in jail for about five hours. There was one man had had an operation on his leg and he had to stand there.

These are citizens of this country! They waited and waited and waited for a magistrate, and then, finally, it was dismissed; but with no apology to these people. I suggest that this type of thing by the police is hysteria. We have had other examples of this. I suggest that we get at the real roots of crime, rather than trying to show that we are taking action by taking innocent, respectable people to jail.

Sir, I do not want to go on much longer with this. I was going to speak for some length about the inadequacies of the New Party, because the inadequacies are obvious to all, but I thought I would not need to emphasize them because the hon. member who spoke before me I think demonstrated that situation for me. But I would like to say, sir, that in their amendment to our amendment, I felt they showed again they were behind the times. Their amendment is not appropriate at this time and they will recognize it, if they read it. Secondly, in connection with the sales tax that they wanted omitted—

Mr. MacDonald: We got one of the things the hon. member has been talking about, the Royal Commission on Crime.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I am glad the hon. member is hanging onto the coattails, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the delights that the leader of the C.C.F. party gets out of hanging onto the coattails of my hon. leader.

The point is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that you and most of us can see if we look at it. The C.C.F. amendment is not adaptable at this time, and therefore, of course, we cannot vote with them on this. May I say that I must view with some concern their whole financial approach to the many programmes which they are going to initiate. I have never understood it; there is a certain mystical quality about the whole bunch of them, partly because of their vagueness about how they will finance the many projects they are considering.

They, like us I am sure, want to see many reforms take place. But they are suggesting that the government must raise the corporation tax about 60 to 65 per cent.

Here is the man, the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), who just came in, Mr. Speaker. He gave a vitality to the industries in Saskatchewan, which included the shoe business and many others. I am sure they are employing quite a number of men in that province.

May I end, sir, with the example of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) and this is really our basis for not feeling happy at all with the platitudes of the government. This is an ending in the form of a poem, sir, inspired first of all by your little book which had suggested for this day: "A good example is the best sermon." I would like to elaborate this poem because I notice the hon. Minister of Mines got a great hand when he recited some poetry at the end of his address. Mine goes like this:

I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day,

I'd rather one would walk with me than merely show the way,

The eye is a better teacher and more apt than the ear,

Advice is oft confusing but example's always clear.

When we get examples from that government, then we may agree to join with them or vote in agreement with their motion.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, may I add my words to those which have already been uttered earlier, expressing our pleasure at seeing you presiding over the affairs of this House. None of us can help but benefit from the judgment and wisdom you bring to the highly responsible post which you hold. The many qualities you possess, plus your great patience, are particularly evident on the occasions when many who pay lip service to your fairness, challenge your rulings so frequently, and generally on such trivial points.

May I also, sir, add a word of welcome and congratulations to those new members who have recently been elected.

Might I suggest too, Mr. Speaker, if I may, that the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) not leave the Chamber, because I am going to direct some remarks to him.

I wish them success, the new members, not the hon. member for Sudbury, in the discharge of their responsibilities. I am sure they will find great personal satisfaction in this opportunity for public service.

Now, Mr. Speaker, last December, before the House rose for the Christmas recess, the hon. member for Sudbury made certain charges in his speech of Thursday evening, December 14, 1961, in which he criticized certain actions of the liquor control board which I am privileged to serve as chief commissioner. Hon. members will note that I asked the hon. member, and gave him warning, to stay in the House, which is more than he did that evening for the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) when he made charges against him.

The hon. member at that time made some wild charges about patronage in the leasing of buildings for liquor control board stores in Sudbury and Capreol. He alleged huge profits made by the lessors, and so on. I shall quote the hon. member as at page 477 of Hansard of December 14, 1961, and I quote the hon. member:

I am going to give him [referring to me] the facts on two transactions, and nothing but the facts.

I think it is safe to say that the great fountain of patronage in this government is in the liquor control commission. One of the methods of granting patronage in the liquor control commission—a method of which, for reasons which will become apparent, I heartily disapprove [and I will do it in the same fashion as the hon. member did] and which I condemn, and I would want to be no part of a government which carries on this racket—is granting a right to the individual to build a liquor store and then rent the property back to the liquor control board.

In order to get that right, you just cannot be an ordinary Tory, you have to be one of the brass—

(Applause)

I would suggest to the hon. members that they hold their enthusiasm because we are going to soon find out about these Tories.

—you have to demonstrate your devotion to the Conservative Party above and beyond the duty of ordinary mortals.

And that is the end of his quote, Mr. Speaker.

He went on to charge that our leasing of the liquor store in Capreol created a bonanza for the lessor, and by virtue of some rather spurious and unorthodox method of financial arithmetic attempted to create the impression that the liquor control board engaged in some improper conduct in respect of its method of leasing these stores in Sudbury and Capreol.

May I deal—I will deal with the locations as they arise.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): On a point of order—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —just throw them all at me, I will deal with them as they come. May I deal first with the two locations to which my hon. friend has seen fit to refer?

I will speak first of his charges about the store at Capreol. Among other things, my hon. friend said that Capreol was a little community 20 miles north of Sudbury. By the time I am finished I will prove to this House that that was the only accurate statement he made on that evening. My hon. friend went on to say that the lessor in this instance has a $25,000 to $30,000 building on property costing $2,500. A maximum investment of some $35,000, to use his figures, for which he holds a 10-year lease, bringing in $4,380 per year.

My hon. friend then went on to expound the theory that the whole investment would be returned in as little as 10 years; that he, the lessor, would have a tenant forever and would be, in the hon. member's words, "in clover."

Now, in taking the figures as presented by the hon. member at their face value it becomes apparent that he is either devoid of any knowledge of financial matters, or, and I think this is more likely the case, he has little regard for the intelligence of this House and certainly less for the good sense of the fine citizens of the city of Sudbury. He states that the man's investment is $35,000 and that at $4,300 per year rental he will have his investment back in 10 years and then, as he puts it, be "in clover."

He may not know it—but I am sure the citizens of Sudbury do—that if you take any interest figure at all over a period of a certain number of years one could always argue that the capital invested to produce that interest would eventually be paid back. To the uninitiated this might give the impression that somehow or other there is something wrong about this, that a man should be able to get back what his capital investment was in interest alone.

Mr. Sopha: How about bonds?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Quiet! Order!

I would point out to the hon. members of this House that on the occasion to which the present hon. speaker is referring I maintained the very strictest of order because it was a very serious evening and I am going to do the same thing. I think it is just as serious at this time as it was at that time. I am going to see that the speaking hon. member has the utmost co-operation from the hon. members in order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it seems rather peculiar that the ones in this House who are able to dish it out are the ones who seem to be the least able to take it.

Even a government bond, Mr. Speaker, at 5 per cent will return your capital in 20 years at simple interest; and at compound interest would return your original investment in about 11 years. A conventional first mortgage at 7 per cent will return your capital in about 14.5 years and at compound interest in a little more than 10 years.

In playing with the Capreol figures as my hon. friend has done—and may I say parenthetically, even presuming that there are no expenses involved—in figuring this he forgot the figure about the expenses involved and those which should be charged normally against gross rental at this store. He produces a gross income yield of about 12 per cent, which, even at that, would not be such an outrageous figure for a rental investment return.

However, the hon. member, as I have stated, engaged in some fast, if not neat, footwork, by not mentioning the expenses such as maintenance, depreciation, insurance, taxes, and so on, which certainly reduces the net return to this lessor very considerably. Surely the hon. member does not think the people of Sudbury are so stupid as to be taken in by his verbal juggling. I know many Sudbury businessmen who would laugh him out of their offices if he came to them with a proposition that they invest some money in property and regard a gross rental return as clear profit without reference to maintenance costs, taxes, insurance, depreciation, and so on.

The hon. member had much to say about the property on LaSalle Boulevard in Sudbury, including the fact that the principals of the company lived in Sarnia. What a terrible thing! He attempted to make quite a thing about that fact. To quote him, he stated “four of them are from as far as Sarnia.”

I must confess I cannot see anything wrong with people living in Sarnia and investing their money in Sudbury. One would almost think he felt a passport necessary for them to get into Sudbury and invest money there. Perhaps he ought to tell the Sudbury city council to pass a by-law prohibiting “foreign” investments from other Ontario cities.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister would—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it is known to the hon. members of this House that when any hon. member is speaking, an hon. member rises to ask a question and the hon. member does not actually stop his speech, it could be made obvious to the hon. member asking the question that at that point obviously the speaker does not wish to answer the question. It is the same on both sides of the House. Now is there a question?

Mr. Sopha: On a point of order. In view of the fact that the hon. Minister has spoken about the maintenance costs and other incidents of tenancy, I think he is obliged to—I was going to say on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: I was going to say, on a point of order, to table the lease.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. members, as I have frequently mentioned before, to state the point of order.

Mr. Sopha: I am merely asking, on a point of order, that since the hon. Minister has referred to these things, that he ought to table the lease. That is all I am asking.

An hon. member: That is all he is asking.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The trouble with the hon. member is he cannot take it.

An hon. member: That is right! We had to listen to the hon. member for quite a long time, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, any time any of the hon. members want to ask any questions about leases I would be very glad to answer them, if there is anything wrong with any of the leases the liquor control board has. Obviously, I have not seen them all. When an hon. member raises questions, I will be glad to produce them.

Mr. Sopha: All that is true.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am dealing with specific charges that the hon. member made. Now let me deal with those, and if he has any further to make, I will deal with those as they arise.

The hon. member stated that these people paid $24,000 for the land—he put a value between $4,000 and $7,000 on that land—and he thought it might be interesting to inquire why they would pay what seems to be an inflated value for the land. He told us further that they took out a mortgage for $80,000 repayable at $638.90 per month; that they received a 15-year lease from the board at a rental of $11,895 per year, and noted an option to renew for 5 years.

The hon. member has attempted to show us that the lease will bring back about $165,000 in 15 years, and these people, too, would be “in clover.”

Mr. Speaker, the fact that these people saw fit to buy the land at all is, in my estimation, no concern of ours. I doubt that this House cares how much they paid for it, nor how good an arrangement they made to build this building. What does matter, rather, is the basis on which they are doing business with the Liquor Control Board of Ontario. How much we are paying them—

Mr. Sopha: They bought the land only after they had to deal with the board.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if there is anything that I have not mentioned here with respect to the facts, as the hon. member stated them, he is at liberty to bring it out later. Now, if he waits until I finish, if he controls his exuberance, he may find I am answering the questions. What does matter, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, is the basis on which they are doing business with the Liquor Control Board of Ontario; how much we are paying them and whether our lease with them is a just and proper one.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would point out to the hon. members, as I have on many occasions, that all hon. members of this House when speaking will receive equal treatment and I am going to insist on that. There are opportunities to come yet when hon. members can make replies if they wish to, but at this particular time one hon. member has the floor and once again I appeal to the hon. members of this House to give him the same attention as has been given previous speakers all through this Throne debate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member at that time, December 14, last, invited me to get the information relative to these matters. Well, Mr. Speaker, here are the facts. The hon. member might better have asked for them first, before he made his wild and baseless charges, and save the time of this House and also saved the taxpayers some money.

Sir, I had just been appointed Chief Liquor Commissioner when these charges were made. I was considerably upset by them. I was not only interested in satisfying this House about the actions of the liquor control board, but I also wanted to satisfy myself. Being new to the board, I wanted to assure myself that the board was really doing business in the proper fashion.

I am now in receipt of all the facts regarding these matters raised by the hon. member and they completely belie everything he has stated. As a matter of fact, in investigating his claims, certain facts have come to light which puts into question some of the actions of the hon. member himself.

I present the facts as they were, and are—not as we have had them presented to us in these ridiculous charges. To this end, I have had my officials secure the services of a competent and qualified business house to examine the properties involved, the agreements regarding them and to compare these facts with other like properties in the respective communities.

I have here a report of the Montreal Trust Company signed by one of the most highly qualified men in this particular field. I would like to place his qualifications before the House prior to my presenting his views:

The gentleman who appraised this whole situation is Mr. Garth S. Webb, employed by the Montreal Trust Company in Toronto. He is a graduate of Queen's University with the degree of Bachelor of Commerce. He passed with honours a three-year course receiving his Fellowship of the Realtors Institute with the University of Toronto, and Canadian Institute of Realtors. He passed the appraisal course as a qualifying member of the Appraisal Institute and received accredited appraiser, Canadian Institute, accreditation. He has had seven years experience in real estate and appraisal. He is a director of the Toronto Real Estate Board and is president of that board's salesmen division. He serves on the education committee of the Canadian Institute of Realtors; the editorial committee of the Canadian Association of Real Estate Boards; the governing council, the Canadian Institute of Realtors; the editorial committee, the Appraisal Institute of Canada. Listed among his clients are some of Ontario's outstanding business houses, which are listed in his report.

Mr. Speaker, this appraisal cost money and that is why I say that the hon. member should have investigated before making his ill-founded charges.

The preamble to the report reads as follows under

PURPOSE AND METHOD

It is the purpose of this report to analyze rental conditions with respect to four L.C.B.O. retail stores in the Sudbury area. It will determine the market rent for typical accommodation in the respective areas. This will be accomplished by reviewing rents being charged in the district for comparable properties. These are then adjusted to give an indication of a fair rental for subject property. This rental analysis will be supported by a rough capitalization of store costs.

The method employed is well-documented in this appraisal report which contains very complete and detailed descriptions, figures, and even photographs for comparative purposes. I will not burden the House with the voluminous detail contained therein, but will put into the record the conclusions which the appraiser arrived at and will then table the full report so that any hon. member of this House or the press may examine it at will. The summary in conclusion of this report is as follows:

Summary of Salient Facts & Conclusions:

In studying rental conditions in Capreol, Sturgeon Falls and Sudbury relative to the L.C.B.O. stores, the following conclusions can be drawn:

1. In all cases the L.C.B.O. pays less rental than would be indicated by the general market conditions.
2. This reflects the superior bargaining power of such a strong credit position.

3. Sudbury, Capreol and Sturgeon Falls are fairly typical of retail store properties and the comparison is valid.

4. The new Sudbury store is located in a new area and is self-contained. Its rent falls between shopping centre and factory rates and this is quite in keeping with the respective accommodation.

5. The capitalization of the investment confirms the rental figures for the Sudbury, New Sudbury and Capreol stores. Because of the age of the building and of the lease no such estimate was made for Sturgeon Falls.

I might add that the appraiser included Sturgeon Falls to get a better perspective on comparative rentals in the whole of the Sudbury area.

I might also add that in his report to us, Mr. Webb has shown that in respect of the property in Capreol he was able to conclude, as a result of his searching examination, that a fair rental for the property in question would be some $5,636 per year. In actual fact the L.C.B.O. pays $4,380 per year. In other words, we pay some $1,256 less than the suggested fair rental.

With respect to the property occupied by the L.C.B.O. on LaSalle Boulevard in Sudbury, Mr. Webb, after a similar examination of our premises and others, stated that a reasonable rental figure would be anywhere from $10,953 to $12,143. In this instance the L.C.B.O. pays $11,895 which is somewhere in between. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that no one therefore can charge that this is an unreasonable rental. The lessor is only getting a fair return on his investment.

In the concluding remarks of his appraisal of this LaSalle Boulevard property, Mr. Webb states, and I quote:

It is unlikely that other builders under normal circumstances would be willing to provide these facilities for any lower return.

It is interesting to note that even though, in the words of the hon. member, the lessor paid $24,000 for the land, the appraiser in considering its value, valued it at only $15,000 in arriving at what the rent should be and, therefore, if we were to take the amount stated by the hon. member for Sudbury as $24,000, and figured the return on that amount, as the land value, the liquor board's rental figure would show up even more advantageously to the board.

These facts speak for themselves: the liquor control board of Ontario has in every particular been meticulously careful in its dealings with these lessors. The agreement provides good value for the money spent on behalf of the people of the province of Ontario and, of course, at the same time, has been fair to the owner of the properties concerned. We always negotiate leases from a position of strength in the knowledge that we are a good lessee, because our credit rating is good, and because there is very little likelihood of any vacancies and no trouble in receiving the rent moneys. I am pleased to say that in the short experience I have had with the board I have satisfied myself, and so wish to assure this House, that our very competent staff has been able to secure good leases in the interests of the taxpayers of this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me turn to the charge of "patronage" which has been so loosely used in this connection. Let me inform the hon. member that we have numerous stores leased from prominent Liberals. For example, we received an unsolicited letter from a Dr. Lee L. Crowley of Belle River, a prominent and avowed Liberal, who in his letter stated that he had held office both in provincial and federal Liberal organizations. We lease a store from this gentleman and in reading certain charges in the newspaper he, unsolicited, wrote to say that he thinks very highly of our method of doing business, and in his letter stated that he felt the Liquor Control Board of Ontario drives a hard bargain in obtaining a lease. He also notes in his letter that during his relationship with the liquor control board he had never found that his connection with the Liberal association had ever been held against him. I would refer the hon. member to his political colleague, Dr. Crowley, for information as to how we do business.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would also refer the hon. member to the two gentlemen from whom we lease our downtown store in Sudbury—that is, the store at Cedar and Elgin streets. He may just discover, Mr. Speaker, without probing too deeply, that the lessors in this instance are two gentlemen with whom I think he might be at least slightly acquainted.

Mr. Sopha: They are my landlords, too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now, let us just find out whether they are just the hon. member's landlords.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I am going to point out to the members once again that I am not going to appeal to this House only on behalf of the man who is speaking; I am going to appeal to this House on behalf of all members. I know it is a most annoying thing to be sitting close in the vicinity of a member who is continually interrupting the proceedings of the House, and on the basis of our colleagues who sit near to us I think all members should be mindful of our interruptions in the proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I stated, I think the hon. member might be at least slightly acquainted with these gentlemen. They are known by the names of Dr. Michael V. J. Keenan and Dr. George N. Murphy. Just in case the hon. member for Sudbury should have a lapse of memory, I would remind him Dr. Keenan is president of the Sudbury and District Liberal Association.

Mr. Sopha: He is not now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, not just now; maybe yesterday or a week before or a month before.

Mr. Sopha: He has not been for ten years.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, was he ten years ago?

Mr. Sopha: Yes, he was ten years ago.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I am reminding the hon. member because it might just be possible that he might have forgotten these people who the hon. member says were only Liberal members ten years ago; he might have forgotten that there was quite a to-do in the last general election in 1959 because these two gentlemen—in spite of the fact that the store they were leasing was occupied by the Liquor Control Board, had a very large "Vote for Sopha" sign on the liquor store, and also a sign for one Donald Coutur, who was the Liberal candidate running against the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle).

His memory must be awfully short because there was a great controversy at the time about having a sign like that up on a government building and, as a matter of fact, these two gentlemen were forced to remove the sign, as a result of which they took the sign a little further down the way from the liquor store and put it up on another section of the same edifice. Patronage, indeed.

Well, I would say that in Sudbury it seems that the liquor board—if it is engaged in patronage—must be patronizing the Liberal party. Perhaps some changes should be made in this respect. The hon. member has succeeded in encouraging me to look into this patronage with a view to seeing that Tories are not discriminated against. There will be more about Dr. Keenan a little later on.

Now, sir, what motivated the hon. member to attempt to build such a big issue on such a puny base? I will do it in the fashion he does—he amuses me so much I wish I could do it as well as he does—as he is wont to do—you will remember that night in December.

Was it sheer public-spirited devotion to duty? Was it the self-righteous wrath of an indignant M.P.P.? Was it an overwhelming urge to see justice done? Was it an honest attempt to expose patronage, so abhorred by the Liberals when out of office, and so thoroughly perfected by them when in office? As for example when, by their own admission in the records of the Liquor Control Board files, the Liberals during the first two years of holding office fired 913 Liquor Control Board employees, most of them returned soldier, replacing them with 957 Liberal job-seekers?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, as far as I can see from the records I have examined at the Liquor Control Board, I do not see one instance of any Liberal being fired to be replaced by a Conservative or anybody else.

Well, perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I can give this honourable House a clue to the hon. member's motivation in this case. Mr. Speaker, I have never in my public career found it necessary, desirable or attractive to impute improper motives to any elected representative. I have always believed in the principle that if a person throws mud some of it will cling to the person throwing it. I am also conscious of the fact that continued mud-throwing destroys the confidence of the people in all the elected representatives and thereby hastens the destruction of a free society. Therefore, I attribute the hon. member's charges to sheer petulance and vindictiveness at having lost a case for a client.

Mr. Sopha: Not a client at all; a constituent.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will find that out in a minute. That is what we are going into. Mr. Speaker, we are going to examine the difference between a constituent and a client here.

Mr. Sopha: A client pays and a constituent does not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To use the words of the hon. member, they are only constituents and not clients, is that right?

Mr. Sopha: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member says yes, they were not clients. To use the words of the hon. member when he was making a serious charge against the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) on that same night, December 14, "I will merely let the record speak for itself." I am going to quote the hon. member again at page 477, and I would like the hon. member to pay strict attention to this please, although I think it is unnecessary because he has already said that these people were not clients, they were merely constituents. He said here:

To you, sir, and to the hon. members, I must confess my own part because I would not want to mislead the hon. members in any way. I was approached by a group last year in Sudbury asking me if it would be possible to make representations to the Liquor Control Board to get them the right to put up a store, or rent them premises in a shopping plaza that they were building in the section of Sudbury known as New Sudbury the rapidly expanding residential area to the north. On their behalf I made some inquiries and introduced them to the late chairman of the Liquor Control Board. He told me the type of material he wanted to have from them. I never at any time appeared before the board on their behalf. I never prepared any brief or made any presentation. My services were confined entirely to arranging an interview with the late chairman. Certainly they had my best wishes. May I add, sir, that I was not paid one cent for any of those services.

Mr. Speaker, "this group," as he calls them, were actually his clients and certainly his services were not—to quote him—"confined entirely to arranging an interview with the late chairman." I have here copies of six letters which were written by the hon. member and by his law partner.

I was hoping the hon. member would not get up because I would hate to see the hon. member get up and state emphatically they were not his clients because there is going to be a little difficulty here for him if he does.

Mr. Sopha: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Would you hear me please on a point of privilege. My point of privilege is that of the group to which the hon. Minister refers, only one—only one was—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! State the point of privilege.

Mr. Sopha: Of the group to which the hon. Minister refers I know only the identity of one of them; and that one, sir—only on other matters was he ever a client.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have not mentioned any names yet. I do not know how he is anticipating me.

Mr. Sopha: I will clear this up, Mr. Speaker. Let us clear this up. The hon. Minister, if I heard him correctly, said that I was representing a group who wished to build a store. He accused me, sir—he mentioned the fact, or alleged that they were my clients, and I want to set the record straight and say that of that group only one whose identity I know was on other occasions—quite divorced and separate and different and unconnected with this matter—was a client.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Let the member continue.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member only made matters worse for himself, as he will hear as I go along.

Mr. Speaker: I said I had here copies of six letters which were written by the hon. member and by his law partner. None of these was written on legislative stationery, as one might expect, as are all the other letters written by the hon. members of this House when making representations on behalf of constituents. They are all written on his law firm stationery. In addition, in every letter the reference to this so-called group is "clients." I will now read the letters to this House and enter them into the record, allowing these letters to speak for themselves. I shall also table a copy of these letters for the hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: And the lease too? What about the lease?

Mr. Grossman: All you have to do is ask for the lease and I will get it for you.

Mr. Speaker, no one raised the question of the lease, they were only raising a question of impropriety as to how much we were paying and there was no question of that. We admit what we were paying, there was no argument about it.

Anyway, to get to the letters, Mr. Speaker, dated November 21, 1960, on the letterhead of Sopha and Conroy, Barristers and Solicitors.

To the Liquor Control Board of Ontario, attention Mr. Collings, Chairman.

Re: Romaniuk and Liquor Control Board of Ontario
Dear Sir:

We enclose a brief from our clients—
note, from our clients

—who are at present in the midst of planning the construction of a new shopping plaza. We would ask that you consider their brief.

Yours very truly,

(signed)

E. W. Sopha

On November 22, another letter on the letterhead of Sopha and Conroy, relating to this case, re Romaniuk and L.C.B.O., signed by E. W. Sopha. I will not read the contents, they do not have any bearing on this.

Several hon. members: Read it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right, I have just as much time as the hon. members:

Dear Sir:

Enclosed please find two architects' sketches of the shopping plaza, office sketch of the property and a city map which were omitted in our letter of November 21st, 1960.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, apparently the hon. members are shouting: Where is the word "client"? I must presume then when they use the word "client" that really proves that they really were clients. It is signed by E. W. Sopha.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard so many questions this afternoon that I would point out to the members that they are quite out of order, shouting and asking members questions without first standing. I would point out that when a member wishes to ask a question he stands and obtains the floor.

No member of this House can continually shout across the floor, asking questions. If the question goes unanswered it is quite obvious that the member who has the floor does not wish to answer the question and it cannot be made any plainer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members may as well make up their minds from here on, if they are going to make any charges across here, they are going to be subject to the same thing. This is distasteful to me. In December—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would first of all point out to the members of this House that they are extremely out of order, and showing extremely bad manners when there is any speaking while the member is on his feet. I will point out that the members of this House appointed me as their Speaker, unanimously I believe, and at that time I undertook certain obligations to keep order in this House. The obligations I undertook are going to be carried out and if it means standing on my feet a great deal, then I will do it. I have tried all through the various sessions to be on my feet as little as possible but I cannot continue in this way if we have constant interruptions.

I will once again point out to the hon. members that in this session we have had many serious charges made. I saw to it the hon. members making those serious charges had the utmost in attention. I am going to continue in that way, and will continue to be on my feet even more than the hon. members unless I obtain order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, of course on that night of December 14, the hon. member to whom I referred spoke for about an hour making some very serious charges against an hon. member on this side of the House and you could hear a pin drop. There was not a bit of interruption. I think we are entitled to at least a semblance of that kind of attention.

Dated January 5, 1961, on the letterhead of Sopha and Conroy, Barristers and Solicitors.

Attention Mr. Collings.

Re: Romaniuk and L.C.B.O.:

Dear Sir:

Mr. Sopha advised me earlier that you had hopes that there might be some decision or some consideration of the hearing in this matter on or about Christmas time and my client has asked that I write to you asking if you had any knowledge of any decision in connection with this matter.

Yours very truly

(signed)

Edward James Conroy.

—the other gentleman of the firm.

Dated January 12, 1961, on the letterhead of Sopha and Conroy, another letter—nothing too significant about this letter, except that they are referring again to this case, signed Edward James Conroy of the firm of Sopha and Conroy.

Now, dated March 6, 1961—very persistent—now on the letterhead of Sopha, Conroy and, I hope I pronounce it right, Huneault, Barristers and Solicitors.

Liquor Control Board of Ontario,
Attention Mr. Collings.

Re: Romaniuk and L.C.B.O.

Dear Sir:

Our clients are about ready to start construction on this premises and we wondered if your department was near a final decision so that we might consider whether or not to make allowances for a liquor store.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, I think it can be fairly well established from this that this firm was somewhat involved in setting up the plans and so on for these clients of theirs in connection with the plaza.

Dated May 1, 1961, on the letterhead of Sopha, Conroy etc.

Liquor Control Board of Ontario,
Re: Romaniuk and L.C.B.O.

Dear Sir:

Thank you for your letter of April 17, 1961. My client has asked me to contact you in that there are persistent rumours in this district that the decision has not as yet been definitely made, in that the proposed area, as we understand it for the liquor store, is in a light industrial area for which the planning board not likely to give their approval. We are further advised that right across the road from the proposed location is a Presbyterian church and immediately behind the proposed site is the commencement of a large ready-mix plant.

We would appreciate knowing whether or not a decision has been finally made. If there is a reversal of the decision or a reconsideration, must we re-apply or shall we be notified to re-tender on the proposed liquor store?

As you can imagine, my clients are extremely anxious to see the store situated in the commercial area which they have in mind rather than in the light industrial area some miles from the commercial zone and as well on land which they do not own, of course. To that end, I think, they would be willing to discuss rents, design and other features which might affect your decision and if there is any possibility of future consideration, we should deeply appreciate being kept in mind.

This is signed "Edward James Conroy" of the firm of Sopha, Conroy and Huneault. In case I forgot to mention, the letter dated March 6th was signed "Edward James Conroy" of Sopha and Conroy.

Mr. Sopha: Am I my brother's keeper?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member forgot that when I read that letter it said "our clients"—"our clients."

An hon. member: Big deal.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, of course, it is not a big deal if it happens to somebody on the other side.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members will note that on this last letter there is no pretence or suggestion that this group is anything but a client on this legal stationery signed by Mr. Conroy of the firm. "Must we re-apply" or "shall we be notified to re-tender?" So that the presumed altruistic efforts on behalf of a group of constituents has now evolved into "my clients" or "our clients."

Mr. Sopha: We never got a dime.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if he was giving them the kind of financial advice evidenced in the manner in which he used his arithmetic here, I do not doubt he was not paid for his work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we are plunging the depths to discover sinister deals and vile patronage, permit me to add a tang to this little morsel of conspiracy which the hon. member has dredged up.

I am told that the firm of Sopha, Conroy etc. is now located at 7 Cedar Street, Sudbury, which is the same building owned by the same Dr. Keenan, president of the Liberal association, and the same edifice in which our liquor store is located. Quite a connection for a bunch of Tories, I would say.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I am informed on "very good authority"—as the hon. member for Sudbury is prone to remark—that behind Mr. Romaniuk, for whom the firm of Sopha, Conroy, etc. was acting in this case, was the same Dr. Keenan who is the lessor of the store at Cedar and Elgin streets. He, this great Liberal, was to be the financial backer of Mr. Romaniuk in this deal. He is the self-same Dr. Keenan who is president of the Sudbury and District Liberal Association. Patronage, indeed.

The hon. member has attempted to mislead the House by suggesting that his attempt to do something for this so-called group in Sudbury was done out of a sheer desire to do something for a constituent.

Mr. Speaker, the letters speak for themselves. They speak volumes. If there is anything I despise it is smug self-righteousness. I despise it even when engaged in to the accompaniment of Shakespearian histrionics, in which my hon. friend is so well versed.

The hon. member had a field day during that night session of December 14. He was shocked at the actions of the liquor control board; he was outraged at the Toronto stock-ateers; then he made some very serious charges against the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton).

I think the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) should look into his own mirror to find out if he really wears a halo or not. Perhaps he may decide he is not in a position to pass judgment on his peers.

The audacity he showed that night in engaging in such a flagrant attempt to bamboozle this House, by putting on such an air of righteousness and pretending to be hurt because the L.C.B.O. had allegedly jilted his constituents, is amazing.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to put the most generous construction on his motivations in this case and my most generous construction would be that he was motivated by his anger at not being able to get the store lease for his client. The facts speak for themselves.

I will add no more, except to once again repeat that this sort of thing is distasteful to me and I have never had to engage in it. However, being a Minister in charge of a department, I suppose from here in I shall have to accustom myself to being the target of this sort of careless attack, and therefore am required to answer because of the position I am in. This I have done in this case in as generous a manner as I possibly could under the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, I think the evidence I have presented to this House is sufficient to put the hon. member's charges in their proper light and to illustrate to the people of this province just how much credence they can put into most of the charges which come from some of the hon. members across the floor of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, seeing as it seems to be the fashion of this Throne Speech to end with poetry, etc., perhaps I may be forgiven for quoting Theodore Roosevelt in reference to the charges which are so frequently made from the other side:

Men with the muck-rake are often indispensable to the well-being of society, but only if they know when to stop raking the muck.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Lawrence moved, seconded by Mr. Hamilton, that an humble address be presented to the Honourable The Lieutenant-Governor as follows:

May it please your Honour:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

Mr. Wintermeyer moved, seconded by Mr. Oliver, that the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor now before the House be amended by adding thereto the following words:

But this House regrets,

1. That this government has failed deplorably to recognize the peril of the inroads of organized crime into the life of Ontario, and has failed to protect the citizens of this province from the activities of the criminal and the anti-social.

2. That the government's bad management of the province's finances resulted in the imposition of a sales tax and that this tax, ill-conceived and badly-timed, did produce a maximum of inconvenience to the taxpayer and a maximum of irritation for the retailer, when the plan calling for an exemption of $25 would have been far more effective.

3. That, as a result of the wasteful extravagance, unplanned spending and inefficiency of this government, notwithstanding the imposition of a sales tax, the public debt of this province has reached unparalleled heights, and has thereby placed an onerous mortgage on the future citizens of this province.

4. That the government, which has a responsibility to do everything in its power to provide an opportunity for every citizen to work, has failed to discharge this responsibility, with the result that gross unemployment debilitates the morale of the people of this province and attacks the stability of the economy, the community, and the family.

5. That the government has failed to provide leadership in the solution of municipal financial problems by failing to institute a financial reform that would have as its key feature reduction of the property tax for education and assumption of a greater share of the total cost of education by the provincial government.

6. That, in spite of the fact agriculture is still the backbone of the economy of this province, the economic position of the farmer has deteriorated to a point where his net income is the lowest in history. This government has failed to provide assurance to our sorely pressed farm community that government efforts will be directed towards preservation of the family farm as an efficient economic unit and that farmers, working individually and co-operatively with government help, will remain in control of the production and prime marketing of agricultural products.

7. That the lack of government leadership in the field of labour-management relations has brought its legislation into disrepute and thereby caused confusion and chaos in a vital area of our society and economy where clarity and order are imperative for the public good.

8. That the government's rigid policies towards the natural resource and manufacturing industries have failed to recognize the vital role it can play in assisting these industries to be competitive particularly by making available its special services for industrial expansion.

9. That the government has failed to initiate reform in Ontario's liquor laws, which under its administration have become the most widely disregarded and most thoroughly abused statutes in our province, and thereby have promoted a disrespect for law among our people.

10. That this government has failed to recognize that it has an obligation, by virtue of its jurisdiction over northern Ontario, to encourage economic development and habitation in the north.

11. That the government has failed its responsibility as the parent of the metropolitan government of Toronto to improve the structure of that government and thereby provide for the persons in the metropolitan area equity in assessment and taxation, greater balance in representation and leadership in the metropolitan council that is responsible to the electorate.

12. That the government has failed to indicate advances in policies and programmes in the fields of health and welfare.

Mr. MacDonald moved, seconded by Mr. Gisborn, that the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor now before the House be amended:

(a) By striking out clauses 1 and 2 thereof and substituting the following:

1. That the government has refused to appoint a commission to conduct a full, untrammelled public inquiry into the organized crime in this province in all its ramifications, has otherwise failed to take adequate steps to protect the people of the province against this deadly menace, and has indeed, by its negligence and its refusal to face up realistically to the known facts, permitted organized crime to extend its foothold in the province.

2. That the government has not seen fit to eliminate the retail sales tax and to rely instead on more equitable and progressive methods of raising money, such as corporation and income taxes, revenues from natural resources and a weight-distance tax.

(b) By adding thereto the following:

And this House further regrets:

1. That the government has failed to disclose any genuine awareness of the imperative need for comprehensive social and economic planning to provide continuous economic growth, full employment and balanced development of all sections of the province.

2. That the government has failed to act decisively and with a due sense of urgency to remedy the gross neglect of adequate safety precautions in important sections of Ontario industry, particularly the construction industry, and has thereby permitted the safety and even the lives of countless workmen to remain in jeopardy.

3. That the government has announced no plans to encourage farmers' economic organizations but on the contrary is continuing to hamstring such organizations with restrictive legislation, thereby undermining the position of the independent farmer and the family farm.

4. That the government has not seen fit to proceed with a programme of health insurance, covering medical and other related services as well as hospital services.

5. That the government has failed to develop a co-ordinated welfare programme designed to help all those in need regardless of category or residential qualifications, and, in particular, has failed to establish welfare allowances on a budgetary basis in line with the Ontario Welfare Council's suggested minimum income and to negotiate an agreement with Ottawa for a cost-sharing arrangement to replace the present multiplicity of specific grants.

6. That the government has not announced any intention to proceed with a bill of rights for this province.

We will first vote on the amendment to the amendment moved by Mr. MacDonald.

All those in favour of the amendment will please say "aye".

Those opposed will please say "nay."

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried:

Clerk of the House: RESOLVED that an humble address be presented to the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor, as follows:

TO THE HONOURABLE J. KEILLER MACKAY,
 DSO, VD, LL.D, LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, tomorrow we will take anything that is on the order paper and after dealing with routine matters there, we will introduce the estimates of The Department of Commerce and Development for the purpose of receiving a statement from the hon. Minister (Mr. Macaulay) concerning the economic condition of the province, which will be a prelude to the budget which will be brought in on Thursday. Of course, Wednesday is committee day and the House will not sit. We will not deal with the individual items of the estimates of the department; it is just a method by which the hon. Minister can give an economic review of the province, prior to the budget.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.25 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1962

The House met at 3:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: in the east gallery, Earl Haig Secondary School, Willowdale, Christian Endeavour High School Group, Ridgeway, and St. Paul's Cathedral Bible Study Group, London; and in the west gallery, Dewson Street Public School, Toronto and Burnamthorpe Public School, Cooksville.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have here a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay) signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for The Department of Economics and Development for the year ending March 31, 1963, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, on February 27, 1962.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the clerk had received from the chief election officer and laid upon the table the following certificate of a by-election held since the adjournment of the House:

Electoral district of Renfrew South: Leonard Joseph Quiltey.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that, in view of a writ of election dated the twenty-first day of November, 1961, issued by the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario, and addressed to John S. Findlay, Esquire, returning officer for the electoral district of Renfrew South, for the election of a member to represent the said electoral district of Renfrew South in the Legislative Assembly of this province, in the room of James A. Maloney, Esquire, who, since his election as representative of the said electoral district of Renfrew South, hath departed this life, Leonard Joseph Quiltey, Esquire, has been returned as duly elected as appears by the return of the said writ of election, dated the twenty-second day of February, 1962, which is now lodged of record in my office.

Roderick Lewis,
Chief Election Officer.

Toronto, February 27, 1962.

Leonard Joseph Quiltey, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Renfrew South, having taken the oaths and subscribed the roll, took his seat.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the petitions, I would like, on behalf of the government, to extend a welcome to the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Quiltey). I might not have wished it this way before, but now that he is here I am delighted to see him and I hope that his time here will be gratifying to him.

I hope that he will be able to serve the people of that great riding he is going to represent in the manner in which they were served by his predecessor.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. M. Hamilton (Renfrew North), in the absence of Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark), presented the second report of the standing committee on private bills which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. Pr5, An Act respecting the Town of Hearst.

Bill No. Pr12, An Act respecting Ontario Co-operative Credit Society.

Bill No. Pr19, An Act respecting the City of Windsor.

Bill No. Pr21, An Act respecting the City of Ottawa Separate School Board.

Bill No. Pr24, An Act respecting the Ontario Registered Music Teachers' Association.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill No. Pr2, An Act respecting the Village of Erie Beach.

Bill No. Pr16, An Act respecting the Town of Oakville.

Your committee would recommend that the fees less the penalties and the actual cost of printing be remitted on Bill No. Pr4, An Act respecting the Queen Elizabeth Hospital for Incurables, Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves that the order referring Bills Nos. 49 and 50 to the committee of the whole House be discharged and that these bills be referred to the committee on agriculture.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): May I ask the hon. Minister, is it the intention to have these bills discussed at Guelph tomorrow, is that my understanding? And further, is it the intention to have them finalized and a vote taken on the principle of the bill at this meeting in Guelph tomorrow?

My purpose in asking that, if I may elaborate, is that a number of us who are vitally interested in these particular bills will not be able, for various reasons, to be in Guelph tomorrow. It would seem to me that while some discussion of the bill might properly take place tomorrow, there might be a further meeting of the committee here in the building where all the hon. members would find an opportunity to attend, rather than try to finalize it tomorrow when many of us cannot be there.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, if I might just add to what the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) has said. I am another member of the committee who is intensely interested in these bills and will not be able to get out to Guelph. There are about three other things to be looked after back here at Queen's Park.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We can very easily arrange to have these bills presented to the whole committee at some later time and then brought back to the House.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof it do stand adjourned until Thursday next at 3:00 o'clock, p.m.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE BEES ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Bees Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE CO-OPERATIVE LOANS ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Co-operative Loans Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Horticultural Societies Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO WATER RESOURCES COMMISSION ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this is a housekeeping Act and it provides among other things for the investment of moneys by the commission in the Province of Ontario Savings Banks and also for certain by-laws which may be passed by municipalities.

THE ASSESSMENT ACT

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Assessment Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present the report of the Public Lands Investigation Committee, 1959.

The Public Lands Investigation Committee was formed by the former Minister of Mines, the late James A. Maloney, and me under the authority of an Order-in-Council made in 1959. The committee was formed to inquire into, investigate and make recommendations in respect of the disposal of public lands under The Mining Act and The Public Lands Act and to hold public hearings for the purpose.

Public hearings were held at Peterborough, Parry Sound, Haileybury, Kirkland Lake, Timmins, Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie, Port Arthur, Kenora and Toronto. Numerous organizations and individual persons appeared before the committee and presented briefs and presentations were also submitted to the committee by mail.

The report consists of two parts. Part I deals with The Mining Act and the disposition of public lands for mining purposes. Part II deals with The Public Lands Act and the disposition of public lands for purposes other than mining. The departments concerned with the report are now studying the recommendations therein contained and I am hopeful that some of the recommendations will be implemented by legislation introduced during this session of the House. Some recommendations may require such deliberation and study that they cannot be acted upon during the time this session is sitting.

Some copies of the report will be placed in the legislative library and in due course copies will be placed on the desk of each hon. member of this Legislature.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I am pleased to announce that special cheques in the amount of $10 will go out before the end of the month, that is today, to approximately 40,000 persons who qualify for old age assistance, disabled persons' allowances and blind persons' allowances.

This is, of course, in addition to the regular cheque of $55.

Since the legislation received Royal Assent February 15, I am indeed gratified that we have been able to provide the full $65 during the current month.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) a question? Will the people in Metropolitan Toronto receive the full $10 a month or will some be taken from those who are on welfare? Will it be taken away from them, some of the $10?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I did not understand the hon. member; maybe my hearing is not too good. If there is a question, I trust that the Metro people could answer it better than I. However, if the hon. member will table the question, I will obtain the information and let him know.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) begs leave to present to the House the following:

The report of the provincial auditor on the Public Service Superannuation Fund for the year ending March 31, 1961.

The report of the provincial auditor on the Public Service Retirement Fund for the year ending March 31, 1961.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to give the answers to two questions which the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton) sent to me earlier today.

Question No. 1 is as follows: what rents does The Department of Transport pay for driver examination centres in Brantford and in London?

Question No. 2: who are the landlords?

In answer to these questions I would say at the outset that The Department of Transport does not pay rental for any driver examination centres. All leases are negotiated and signed by The Department of Public Works and rents are paid by The Department of Public Works. After due inquiry and investigation I have this information to give to the hon. member and to the House.

The centre at Brantford is located at 221 Greenwich Street; it is owned by the Welsh Fuel Company Limited and the rental paid is $80 monthly for some 450 square feet or $2.13 per square foot per annum.

The premises in London, Ontario, are located at 410, 3rd Street, I believe. They are owned by Piccadilly Holdings Limited and the rental in London is $280 monthly for some 1,500 square feet or $2.24 per square foot per annum.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I rise on a point of personal privilege.

Yesterday, the Chief Commissioner of the Liquor Control Board, the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) accused me of misleading this House in respect of statements I made here on December 14, 1961. Specifically he suggested that I had made representations to the Liquor Control Board on behalf of persons he claims were clients of my law office. I specifically, sir, repudiate these allegations.

Unfortunately, there is a tendency in a law office to refer to all persons who attend therein as clients. The group to which he referred approached me in my capacity as member. The representations I made to the Liquor Control Board were made in my capacity as a member. I received no money; my law firm received no money; there was no expectation or arrangement that I receive any payment in any form. Moreover, I made all this clear in my statement of December 14, 1961, and my remarks can be found at page 477 of Hansard.

The hon. Minister knew this before he spoke, but he chose to ignore it.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to address a question to the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay). It is as follows:

Recent news reports have referred to the preparation and publication of a report by the federal government as to the feasibility of the development of an ocean port at Moosonee. The same reports have said that in the view of the federal government such a development is not practicable. My questions are as follows, sir:

1. Has the government of Ontario obtained a copy of this report?
2. If so, does it intend to table it in this House?
3. Does the government agree with the contents of the report?

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question asked by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), I would advise him that on November 27, 1961, at page 43 of Hansard, the same question was asked by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) and I at that time gave a rather lengthy answer.

Secondly, last Thursday, on February 22, at page 549, the same question was asked by the hon. member for Nipissing and I again gave an answer.

It strikes me as perhaps imponderable common sense if the hon. member would look in Hansard or attend in the House he would know the answer to these questions.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question directed to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell), which has been given to him.

On page 211 of Hansard, December 5, 1961, the hon. Minister reported tenders were going to be called for the construction of a tourist reception centre at Windsor. Would the hon. Minister please answer the following questions:

1. Have tenders been called for the above construction?
2. If so, when is construction to commence?
3. When is it expected that construction will be completed and the centre opened?

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. Newman) for notice of this three-part question which might be answered:

First question: No.

Second question: Not applicable.

Third question: As soon as possible.

However, I would like to amplify these answers in this way. I am sure that the hon. member will realize that we did not want to repeat our customary tourist reception centre design—which was in the first place designed for an open highway setting—in front of the city of Windsor's distinguished new city hall. We have therefore gone to considerable pains to design a prestige building in a park-like setting.

We have considered the architecture of the new city hall and my officials consulted with Windsor city officials last week on the design, traffic flow and other problems. I might say that the Windsor officials are delighted and entirely complimentary, as I hope the people of Windsor will be when the building is completed. Working drawings are now being prepared in our drafting room and tenders will be called in April.

It will be impressed upon the successful contractor that the building is needed as soon as possible and we trust it will be in service for a good portion of this tourist season. I hope to come to Windsor and turn the building over to the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) this summer. Meanwhile, may I point out Windsor will continue to be served by twice as many reception centres as any other point of entry.

Mr. Newman: I thank the hon. Minister.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, my colleague to my right and I have had the opportunity to look at the reference made by the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, and I assert through you, sir, to him, that there has been no previous question of this nature asked and no previous answer given. It is typical of his contempt for the House and for the hon. members on this side that he answers in that fashion.

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with the orders of the day I ask permission of the House to revert to motions.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof, it stands adjourned until 2.00 of the clock on Thursday afternoon, and not until 3.00 as in the motion submitted earlier.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister whether or not there will be a Thursday night sitting this week?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

House moves into committee of supply, Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Chairman, this year we are embarking on a new course in presenting to the hon. members of this House the estimates of The Department of Economics and Development by presenting to the House a statement on the Ontario economy, separate from the budget which will follow as presented by the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) on Thursday. In the past a brief review of economic trends has been incorporated in the hon. Provincial Treasurer's budget statement.

As Minister of Economics and Development, charged with the responsibility of directing the government's policies in the field of industrial and economic development, it seemed advisable that I should render to the House a fuller statement on the economic health of our province, and it seemed that perhaps the best time to do this was immediately preceding the budget, which will be delivered by the hon. Provincial Treasurer on Thursday.

It is not my intention to discuss here the government's financial policies or programmes. These will be outlined in the hon. Provincial Treasurer's budget statement. My task, primarily, is to review current trends in the Ontario economy and to outline the framework within which the government's programme has been formulated.

The economic situation in which we find ourselves has been brought about by the conjuncture of several basic economic forces operating throughout the world. The interaction of these forces, many of which had their origins in the early post-war years, has created an entirely new environment in which our economy must function. To place the Ontario picture in perspective, it is essential that we understand the nature of these changes and their impact on Canada and Ontario.

Foremost among these developments has been the reconstruction and revitalization of the industrial economies of western Europe and Japan. In the immediate post-war period, there was general acceptance of the need to rebuild the shattered economies of the war-devastated nations. The establishment of a viable system of international trade and the facilitation of the flow of capital and resources throughout the world were considered essential. To accomplish these ends, a series of far-reaching international agreements were signed, including the establishment of the International Monetary Fund and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

These are known as the IMF and the GATT arrangements and I am preparing short layman descriptions of how these operate. I will have them available for hon. members of the House, I hope, before too long.

The western European nations and Japan developed a variety of economic controls and devices to assist the rebuilding of their industries. These included quotas and high import tariffs, exchange restrictions, export credits and various controls designed to channel investment into selected industries. The United States and Canada gave direct assistance to a number of these nations to help them through the difficult period of reconstruction.

The remarkable recovery of these countries is now a matter of record. It has become somewhat fashionable to quote their recent rates of growth against our rate of expansion in Canada. Such comparisons are apt to be misleading, for the period of our most rapid expansion occurred earlier when they were engaged in the restoration of their productive capacity. It was inevitable that their later expansion would bring about changes in world trade patterns and cause some maladjustment in the North American economy.

As a result largely of these developments in Europe and Asia, the period since 1955 has been characterized by the emergence of strong competition in world markets. The manufactured goods of the United States and Canada have in many cases lost their competitive advantage to the products of modern low-cost industries in western Europe and Japan. Products which contain a high-labour content were most vulnerable to this foreign competition because of the lower wages prevailing outside North America. One of the results has been the introduction of more highly specialized machinery and automated techniques into North American industries. This development, which is common to both the American and Canadian economies, has reduced the number of production workers necessary in our factories and has resulted in a higher level of unemployment.

In response to the competitive pressures in world markets, western European countries, in particular, recognized the weakness inherent in a limited domestic market.

I might say that this is something that I do not think we have yet realized in this country.

From the first years of the post-war period, plans were being made for some form of European economic integration. The earlier successes of the Benelux Economic Union—Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg—and the success of the European Coal and Steel Community paved the way for negotiations leading to the establishment of the common market. These talks reached fruition with the signing of the Treaty of Rome on March 25, 1957—this was the beginning of the common market when Italy, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Luxembourg and the Federal Republic of Germany joined.

Briefly, the aim of the European Common Market countries was to remove all barriers to the free movement of goods, capital and labour between the members. That is to say, it was designed that they should have no tariffs in between their member nations and that labour and capital should be able to move freely between these countries, but they would establish a common set of economic policies and erect a common tariff around their outside against non-member nations.

The basic underlying conception was to create a vast market, rivalling the largest in the world. Actually the market possesses something in the neighbourhood of 300 million consumers, larger than the United States market. Their desire was to create this vast market capable of supporting large-scale industries employing the most modern techniques of production, so that in the end, Mr. Chairman, the economies of the six nations would be welded into a single economic unit of great power.

In reaction to the development of the common market, seven trading countries in western Europe outside the new entity, the United Kingdom, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Portugal, Switzerland and Austria, formed the European Free Trade Association. However, it was recognized that this was only a partial answer to the problem of dealing with the common market. The continued existence of this organization has been threatened by the decision of the United Kingdom and Denmark to apply for entry into the common market. Since this is likely to be followed by similar action from several other countries, this threat is a very real one.

The establishment of the common market and the possibility of Britain's entry into it poses several problems for North America as a whole and Canada in particular. The growing strength of the western European nations will undoubtedly increase the competitive pressures on Canadian and Ontario manufacturing industries and there is a strong possibility that Canada will lose the Commonwealth preferences it now holds in the British market.

These would be best described by saying that our exports to Great Britain fall approximately 95 per cent in an area where there is no tariff; and some 5 to 10 per cent in an area where there is a tariff, but there is an advantage given to those members of the Commonwealth. Were Great Britain to join the common market, these preferences in many ways would be lost. However, it is worth noting that the common market is also basically interested in our raw material exports. So while on the short run the effect on our exports may not be as severe, in the long-run, certainly in terms of the finished product, it may be severe.

Although the effects of this may take place gradually, there are painful adjustments in prospect for Canada and Ontario, especially for some manufacturers who now have export markets in the United Kingdom. However, the prospects of a stronger and larger European Common Market also offer challenging opportunities. As standards of living rise in western Europe, there will be larger potential markets and greater opportunities for exporters of consumer goods as well as industrial raw materials.

Beyond the immediate effects on our trade by the formation of the European Common Market is the probability of the concept of the common market being utilized in other areas in the world.

That is to say, this is a concept which is attractive to Europe and it is now in the initiation stages in other areas of the world.

For example, a common market is in the process of being formed involving several of the countries in Central and South America. There is a general recognition throughout most of the world that national economies are no longer sufficient to support the technically advanced large-scale industries of the present day. These developments raise problems which are of particular importance to the continued growth and expansion of Canada and Ontario.

In the face of the powerful economic units which are developing in all parts of the world, Canada must reassess its own trading position and consider what adjustments or basic realignments are necessary to take advantage of the wider economic horizons that are developing. I shall be announcing on behalf of the government our plans to combat this tendency in a few days.

Since our economy has always depended on the international movement of goods, it would be unrealistic to try to isolate ourselves from the main currents of world trade. The result of the negotiations between the United Kingdom and the common market will make the alternatives open to Canada much clearer. Each of them will have to be studied carefully and decisive action taken to ensure that our economy will have the best possible opportunity for rapid growth in an international context.

While attention has been focused on developments in Europe there is no denying the fact that the level of Canada's economic activity is to a large part determined by the rate of economic progress in the United States.

The importance of the United States to Canada's economy is best illustrated by an examination of the trade figures. Traditionally, the United States has supplied the market for almost 60 per cent of Canada's exports while almost 70 per cent of our imports are purchased from that country. Recently the percentage of our total merchandise trade which is accounted for by our trade with the United States, has been declining as trade with the European Common Market countries, other western European countries, eastern European and Asian countries has taken on increased importance. Nevertheless, the United States is our major trading partner and will continue to be so in the foreseeable future.

The impact of the American economy on Canada and Ontario is even greater than the trade figures would tend to suggest. This has been caused, in part, by the flow of investment capital into Canada from the United States, the import of technical know-how, managerial skills, product design and a host of other factors. Another important facet of the relationship between the two countries is, of course, the cultural impact of the United States on Canada. As a result of these influences the Canadian economy and, indeed, the Canadian way of life, reflect many of the dominant trends in American society.

The dramatic changes in the economic relationships within the western world have had no less impact on the United States than they have had on Canada. In the last few years the United States has been faced with a mounting deficit on its balance of international payments, a slow-down in its rate of economic growth and mounting unemployment caused by increased competition and the impact of automation.

In recognition of these economic problems, the Kennedy administration has proposed an entirely new programme that would give the President authority to negotiate a reduction or elimination of tariffs on those goods for which the United States and the common market account for 80 per cent of world trade. On all other goods the President would be given the power to negotiate tariff reductions of up to 50 per cent. An important and complementary aspect of President Kennedy's proposal is that provision will be made for the retraining of workers in those industries which would be adversely affected by European imports. Thus, the proposals recognize the need to cushion the industries most severely injured in the transitional period.

This bold approach to changing conditions has been taken in recognition of the long-run opportunities inherent in the strengthening of the economies of the major trading nations in the western world. If this progress and programme is given approval, it will drastically alter the long-standing tariff policy of the United States. This will have a significant impact on Canadian trade relations both with the United States and the European Common Market. Even if the full effect is not realized, changes will occur that will profoundly alter the trading conditions under which we operate.

The present economic situation in the United States should also be outlined briefly since it has a direct bearing on conditions in Canada and Ontario. After four years of sluggish growth, the United States made a strong advance in 1961, pausing only in September when sporadic strikes in the automotive industries arrested production. Since then the economy has moved forward, reaching new peaks in production and income.

The only signs of weakness in the American economy during the year were the relative hesitancy in consumer demand and continuing unemployment. Total retail sales showed no real signs of advance until the last two months of the year. Unemployment remained well above official objectives throughout the year and gave cause for concern in the United States. The seasonally adjusted rate was about 6.8 per cent during the first 10 months. There was a drop in November to 6.1 per cent at which level it remained in December. This was, a percentage or two, it might be pointed out, above that prevailing in Ontario.

On balance, economic conditions in the United States were favourable in 1961 and the major economic indicators point to continuing expansion in 1962.

I would like if I might, Mr. Chairman, to refer to the impact that the present economic condition has had on Canada and on the province of Ontario.

I should like to turn to the changes that have taken place in the Canadian economy, which by their nature have had a telling effect on the development and growth of Ontario.

In the post-war period the Canadian economy has undergone one of the most rapid periods of growth in its history. During this period of growth the shape and nature of the Canadian economy have been profoundly altered.

Underlying most of the developments that have taken place has been the change in the living and working habits of the Canadian population. A simple rural-urban breakdown of the population gives no indication of the fundamental changes that have occurred. Not only is a larger proportion of the population living in our cities and metropolitan areas, but the rural environment has been altered considerably. More than one million workers were engaged in agriculture in 1941, representing 32 per cent of the total labour force. By 1951 only 800,000 workers were engaged in this field of endeavour, representing 20 per cent of the total labour force, and by 1961 this had dropped still further and has gone down to 11 per cent.

The shift of the labour force away from agriculture has been occasioned by increased mechanization on the farm, the growth in our urban centres and the spectacular expansion of our manufacturing and service industries, as well as a change in merchandising techniques and patterns.

Another important development has been the enlargement of the domestic market resulting from natural increases in population, large-scale immigration and rising personal incomes. The creation of a larger domestic market has, in turn, attracted capital investment into the secondary manufacturing sector, and these industries have become increasingly oriented towards serving this market. More recently, the slowdown in population growth, caused mainly by declining immigration, has reduced the rate of market growth.

In the immediate post-war years the expanding Canadian industries were not subject to competition from industrial nations other than the United States. Therefore, Canadian manufacturing was influenced solely by American competition. We specialized in certain fields and imported costly components and capital goods from the United States. In the process, the Canadian manufacturing industry became a smaller scale model of American production, a trend accelerated by the establishment of branch plants to produce goods for our domestic market.

At the same time, world demand for both raw materials and manufactured goods encouraged the export of Canadian primary products and secondary manufactures. With the recovery of the industrial economies outside North America our exports made difficult headway. For a time this development did not seriously impinge on our industrial growth as the burgeoning domestic market was able to absorb the output of our factories.

The growth in the domestic market and the expansion of the industries supplying this market have tended to reduce the importance of foreign trade to our national economy.

Actually we seem to have lost our sense of urgency as an exporting nation and we are convinced in this government that there is a great deal that can be done to revive this sense of urgency. We must be an exporting nation if we are to remain healthy and generate a vibrant economy. Our domestic market is too small to sustain the standard of living we desire for ourselves.

In the period 1927-30 exports of goods and services accounted for about 29 per cent of the gross national expenditure in volume terms. In the 1957-60 period exports amounted to about 23 per cent of the gross national expenditure. This was a drop therefore of approximately 6 per cent and was a serious decline. Nevertheless, this is a far better ratio than in most other nations and more than four times better than that of the United States. Canada is particularly vulnerable to fluctuations in international trade patterns because of its heavy reliance on the export of raw materials and foodstuffs which are subject to wide variations in world prices.

In the period since 1957 a new set of factors has been introduced resulting in a series of dislocations and adjustments in the make-up of our economy. Between 1955 and 1957 Canada reached the apex of a capital investment boom. Even though investment was maintained at a relatively high level in 1958, it ceased to provide the same stimulus to growth. As a percentage of the gross national product, investment declined from 27 per cent in 1957 to 22 per cent in 1960. This again was a significant drop.

Concurrently, our domestic markets were beginning to feel the effect of imports from western Europe and Japan. These factors were accentuated by a slow-down in the rate of growth in consumer demand and by several sharp downturns in our economy triggered by recessions in the United States. This combination of factors has had a depressing effect upon the rate of growth of our economy which since 1957 has increased by about 2 per cent a year. As a result, unemployment has edged slowly upwards from 3.4 per cent of the work force in 1956 to 7.3 per cent in 1961. In January 1962, the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was 6.3 per cent in Canada and 4.2 per cent in Ontario—4.7 per cent, excuse me.

One of the dominant factors in post-war economic development has been the expansion of Canada's trade. In the 16-year period ending in 1961, merchandise exports increased two and a half times while imports more than tripled.

So our exports were up in this period about 250 per cent and our imports were up about 300 per cent. This is what has prompted us in The Department of Economics and Development to tackle the problem of import replacements by Canadian production, which I will be discussing when we continue with the estimates of the department.

As a result of the more rapid increase in imports, surpluses on merchandise account occurred only twice during the 1950's, the last one in 1954. In the past two years, however, this deficit was considerably reduced and in 1961, for the first time in seven years, we expect a small surplus.

Although the expansion of our trade with continental Europe and Asia has been a notable feature of the last year or two, Canada's international trade has continued to be strongly oriented to the United States. Since 1948 our exports to the United States have never been less than 50 per cent of our total exports to all countries, and in 1950 were as high as 65 per cent. Last year, they were just over one-half of all our exports. If the United States has been our most important customer, it has been even more important as a supplier of imports. Since the end of World War II, the United States has been the source of 66 to 77 per cent of all the imports brought into Canada. Although the relative importance of the United States as a source of our imports has been declining, it still supplied Canada with 66 per cent of its total imports in 1961.

In short, 50 per cent of our exports of Canada go to the United States and of our imports into Canada 66 per cent come from the United States. This is not a favourable balance. However, the change in the premium on the Canadian dollar will have, and has had, a strong influence in this matter.

A similar trend has been exhibited in our trade with the United Kingdom. While both our exports to, and imports from, the United Kingdom have increased, they have not grown as rapidly as our total trade with all other countries. In the last decade our exports to the UK in relation to exports to all countries have ranged from 18 to 15 per cent while imports have been 9 to 11 per cent.

Therefore in the case of the United Kingdom we have had a favourable trade balance. We have exported to Great Britain more in value than we have imported from her.

Canada's trade with all other countries has become increasingly important. Exports to countries other than the United States and the United Kingdom represented about 20 per cent of the total in 1950 and rose to 31 per cent in 1961. On the import side a similar trend was evident. In 1961 these other countries supplied about 23 per cent of the total imports into Canada.

Again, this is a favourable trade balance. In short, we were exporting to nations other than Great Britain and the United States approximately 31 per cent of our total exports, and we were importing some 23 per cent from these same countries, leaving us with a favourable trade balance with these other countries. In fact on the over-all picture leaving us only with an unfavourable trade balance with the United States.

The increase in imports from the western European countries and Japan has had a more marked effect on our economic structure than the figures would indicate. This is because these imports have competed directly—and this is the important aspect of the point—they have competed directly with our domestically manufactured goods, whereas in the past, imports from the United Kingdom and the United States have complemented the manufacturing industries of Canada in the domestic market. It is, therefore, a relatively small increase in imports from these other industrial nations which has caused much of the dislocation in Canadian secondary industry. This dislocation is caused not nearly as much by what nation or what per cent of an imbalance there is but more by what products are they that are causing the imbalance.

To summarize, we have traditionally had merchandise trade surpluses with all areas in the world except the United States. That is to say we have exported more to these countries than we have imported from them.

Our merchandise trade deficit with the United States as well as our deficit on tourist account are matters to which our people in this government will give increasing attention in the months ahead. In the last dozen years our annual merchandise trade deficit has rarely been less than $.5 billion. This is in relation to the United States. In 1956 it reached a peak of nearly $1.2 billion and last year was less than $.75 billion—$750 million—substantially less than in 1956 and 1957 but still a larger deficit than we would like to see. Our favourable balance of trade with other countries has enabled us to offset in part or in whole this deficit with the United States. And as I said earlier there is to be a very modest trade balance in our favour this year. It has gradually been reduced and in 1961 for the first time since 1954 we broke even because of our merchandise trade surplus with countries other than the United States.

The merchandise trade balance—this is as opposed to what you call an inflow of capital, merchandise are goods as opposed to capital—is only one element in our total balance of payments position. Owing to a combination of factors—the visits of Canadians to their former homelands and the increased propensity to take winter vacations in warmer climates—we have been experiencing a deficit on the tourist and travel account. It has been an outflow of dollars as opposed to an inflow or outflow of merchandise.

Added to this, our payments of interest and dividends on investments held in the United States and abroad are steadily increasing. As a result of these developments, we have experienced steadily rising deficits on our non-merchandise account from about $600 million in 1956 to more than $1 billion in 1961. In the six years 1956-61 inclusive, Canada's total balance of payments deficit with all countries amounted to $7.75 billion, of which the deficit on merchandise account was approximately $2 billion.

In short, we are not trading too badly. But we are spending extensively in cash, outside of Canada, on travel, interest account and in dividend payments. Our balance of merchandising trading in the world—the outflow or inflow—is a very respectable record. But our tendency, because of our tourist account, is to spend a great deal of money outside of Canada. Further, our indebtedness is held partially outside of Canada, and the interest on this as well as dividends on equity stock in companies owned in Canada, means, naturally, a flow of Canadian dollars outside of Canada.

We have been able to sustain this outflow of capital from Canada by the inflow of capital into Canada, particularly from the United States. This inflow has taken many forms. The most significant of these has been direct investment by non-Canadians in the Canadian economy. This has been realized in establishment of branch plants, large-scale development of our natural resources, construction of new apartments, office buildings and other assets. In addition, many corporations, government agencies, have borrowed directly in the United States money markets and have brought this money back into Canada and this has tended to increase the imbalance of our capital flow.

The capital raised by these and other methods have allowed us to carry out our investment programmes and to import vast quantities of consumer and capital goods. Without this capital inflow, we could not have developed to the extent we have.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Would the hon. Minister explain that latter statement?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: With an imbalance in our trade, that is importing more than we were exporting, and with an export of capital, it is necessary to have an import of capital and thus the money is generated within the economy. Because of the fact that we have had approximately a $7.5 billion outflow, of which in effect only $2 billion has been caused by merchandise and $5.5 billion therefore in the outflow of capital in terms of tourist industry, interest on indebtedness, payments of dividends on capital, there has had to have been a comparable inflow of capital somewhere, to not only make up for the outflow of the capital but also as a means or an aegis through which we could develop our own economy.

There are, however, some problems which have their origins in the deficits we have accumulated year after year. We have seen a persistent growth in our net balance of foreign indebtedness which in 1961 amounted to about $18 billion.

In short, the net amount we, as Canadians, owe outside of Canada, as opposed to the net amount which is owed to us from outside of Canada, is about $18 billion.

We have had continuous pressure on the Canadian dollar. We have witnessed an increase in foreign ownership of our manufacturing industries and our natural resources.

These are problems which we must assess and face. These questions will be examined and studied by the Ontario Economic Council and I will outline some specific policies in respect to these questions at a later date. We cannot afford to dismiss these problems as being the responsibility of the federal government. They directly affect the Ontario economy and must be our concern also.

In general, 1961 was a good year. I might just say before passing to that, Mr. Chairman, that there has been some concern in the United States in relation to our recent policy relating to the premium on the Canadian dollar, but I will come to that in a moment, if I may.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Is that all solved to the satisfaction—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We will talk about it in a moment.

In February, a year ago, the Canadian economy reversed the contraction phase and began to expand. The index of industrial production and the gross national product have since shown impressive gains. At the year's end, they were running approximately 6 per cent to 7 per cent higher than the corresponding period a year ago. Over the whole year the rise in the gross national product was slightly better than 3 per cent in value and somewhat more than 2 per cent in volume. Salaries, wages and other incomes reached record highs, while unemployment on a seasonally adjusted basis continued to decline, and by December was at its lowest level since November, 1959.

This is in relation to Canadian economy; the Ontario figures were lower than that and I will refer to them in a moment.

One of the most encouraging developments was the recovery in the durable manufacturing sector which by the end of the year was approaching the previous record level. Non-durable manufacturing established new records with each successive month after reaching a new peak in June. Mining production also showed considerable strength, led by the increased production of oil and natural gas in the western provinces.

During 1961, Canadian exports rose to an unprecedented $5.8 billion, 8 per cent higher than in 1960. Exports to the United States for the first part of the year were rather sluggish but strengthened in the second half as economic conditions improved. The major gain, however, resulted from increased trade with Europe, Japan, and China, reflecting large shipments of wheat and various other commodities. As imports rose more slowly than exports—5 per cent as against 8 per cent—our merchandise trade was brought into balance for the first time since 1954.

The expansion of economic activity was reflected more in terms of wholesale prices than in the consumer price index. Consumer prices held fairly stable throughout the whole year and on average were up only one per cent from 1960. On the other hand, the general wholesale price index moved up strongly as a result of the economic expansion.

Another highlight of the year was the sharp recovery in corporate profits and the steady rise in personal incomes. These did not have any marked effect on corporate investment or consumer spending, which tended to lag during the year, even though there were marginal increases over 1960. As a result, both corporate and personal savings increased. This is one of the most encouraging factors when considering the possibilities for 1962. With the recovery of confidence on the part of both investors and consumers we can anticipate increases in effective demand in all sectors of the economy making for an excellent year in 1962.

The advocates of certain policies seem to me to forget that investments, planned improvements, factory extensions and new industry are created out of someone else's savings. There would be nothing to invest had someone else not saved the money in the first place. Tomorrow's development comes from today's savings, and the fact remains that what one man spends another man must first have saved.

Canadian monetary and fiscal policies during 1961 were mainly directed at combating the mild slowdown in economic conditions which characterized most of 1960. The total supply of money in Canada advanced progressively throughout the year. As of December 27, 1961, it stood at $15,076 million, an increase of 9.2 per cent over the previous year.

The overall easing in monetary conditions during 1961 was reflected by the entire structure of interest and money rates in Canada moving to fractionally lower levels.

The bank rate, set at a high of 3.59 per cent on January 5, reached the 1961 low of 2.5 per cent on August 31, and from then until the end of 1961 continued to rise, apart from a few isolated instances, closing the year at 3.24 per cent.

The exchange rates for the United States dollar and for the other foreign currencies in Canada were substantially affected during 1961 by declared policies and actions of the Canadian government. The federal hon. Minister of Finance in his budget address of June 20, 1961, announced the government's intention to add, if necessary, substantial amounts to official holdings of U.S. dollars through purchases in the exchange market in order to bring the Canadian dollar to a discount in terms of the U.S. dollar. The hon. Minister stated that this action was designed to facilitate an expansion of Canada's export trade, which it has done.

The reaction on foreign exchange markets to this announcement was immediate and significant. The average rate for the U.S. dollar in Canada, which had risen to a one per cent discount in June—compared with an average discount of some 3 per cent for the whole year 1960—advanced to a 4 per cent premium in early July. This was a complete reversal of about 9 points. Thereafter, the rate steadied to the level of a 3 per cent premium, but towards the end of 1961, the U.S. dollar again showed strength, rising to about 5 per cent.

Now there have been those who have written extensively in papers, economic papers, in the United States about the policy of the Canadian government in its desire to aid our export policy in relaxing the premium on the Canadian dollar. It is interesting to note that these people, who are very critical now of the government's policy in relation to the premium on the Canadian dollar, now that it affects them adversely, never said very much for many years that it affected us adversely while there was a premium on the Canadian dollar in terms of the American dollar. The matter is of great concern. One may well remember that it was the hon. members in the Liberal Opposition who several years ago asked the then hon. Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Frost) why he did not try to do something to bring the premium on the Canadian dollar down.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is the hon. Minister referring to Baron's article—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am referring to—certainly what I have to say fits Baron's article.

Easier credit combined with the imposition of the 15 per cent withholding tax on new Canadian bond borrowings in the United States of America payable in U.S. currency, effective December 21, 1960, brought about a sharp reduction in this type of borrowing by Canadian companies and provincial and municipal governments during 1961. Total Canadian borrowings payable in U.S. funds in 1961 amounted to $133,402,000, or 2.3 per cent of total Canadian bond financing, as compared with $240,594,000, or 6.1 per cent in 1960.

Price improvement continued to characterize all sectors of the Canadian bond market during 1961. On average, federal, provincial, municipal and corporate bonds closed the year at levels of some 5 per cent above those prevailing at the same time last year. For example, the bid price of the 4.5 per cent Canada issue due September 1983 closed at $93.25, as compared with $88.25 in 1960 and $84.00 in 1959.

In concluding this section on Canada we cannot help but be impressed by the changes in world production and trade patterns. We emerged from World War II with our productive facilities intact. These were expanded and modernized. The value of capital investment in relation to our gross national product far exceeded that of other western nations. The net effect was the creation of physical plant and equipment which required rapidly expanding sales to maintain operating efficiency.

As European and Asiatic countries restored their productive capacities and entered into world markets we were faced with marketing problems of increasing complexity. The slowdown in production, aggravated by the introduction of labour-saving equipment, created a deficiency in employment opportunities.

In the face of our growing work force the net result was a rising level of unemployment. The failure of the United States to maintain a vigorous rate of economic growth rendered our task even more difficult. Seasonal factors aside, Canada's ratio of unemployment has approximated that of the United States. Ontario's has been substantially less. We are now, however, in a new expansion with our economy gradually adapting itself to a changed world environment.

Up to this point I have concentrated upon the changing economic environment and the developments in the structure of the Canadian economy. My task now is to draw these threads together and relate them to the Ontario economy.

In many provinces a few enterprises or activities dominate, but this is not the case in Ontario. This province contains within it all the elements of the Canadian economy. Agriculture, forestry, mining, fishing, construction, manufacturing, trade, commerce and the services all contribute to production and employment. We have an extremely varied and diverse economy which encompasses nearly all fields of human endeavour.

The impact of the changing world economy and the internal structural shifts that have been underway in Canada are of immediate relevance to Ontario. The province's economy, because it forms such a significant part of the Canadian economy, is vitally affected by these developments. Indeed, in many cases, the changes that have occurred have been felt more strongly in Ontario than in the rest of Canada.

A primary illustration is the case of manufacturing. Ontario accounts for about one-half of all manufactured goods produced in Canada. The concentration in Ontario of industries engaged in the more advanced stages of processing is even higher, as two-thirds of the products of these industries are made here. It is these industries which have been most sharply hit by competition from western European and Asian countries and, therefore, Ontario's economy has been affected more than that of any other province. The changes in the structure of manufacturing in Canada have had their greatest impact on Ontario.

At the same time, we cannot ignore the implications of these changes on other areas in Canada. The prosperity of western farmers is vital to us since they are an integral part of the domestic market which we service. The construction of a natural gas or oil pipeline on the Pacific coast or of a hydro-electric power station in the Maritimes creates new markets for Ontario's industries. The well-being and prosperity of the whole of Canada are of vital concern to Ontario.

The province accounts for about 41 per cent of Canada's gross national product; over 40 per cent of the commodities produced in Canada are made here. Similarly, more than 35 per cent of the capital expenditures and 38 per cent of the retail sales are made in Ontario. Last year, the total value of mineral production in Ontario amounted to 37 per cent of the Canadian total and the province supplied almost 60 per cent of the value of metals and 40 per cent of the value of structural materials. In agriculture, the net value of farm production accounted for 26 per cent of the Canadian total.

Ontario is the commercial and financial heart of Canada. The money for the exploration and development of resources and for the expansion of industry and trade is secured in our capital market. We provide a host of specialized services to all sectors and regions in Canada.

I have cited these figures simply to demonstrate the stake we have in the maintenance of a strong and growing Canada. It is in our best interest to promote the general expansion and development of our country. We cannot hope to solve the economic problems facing us today unless we play our part and contribute to policies designed to foster the prosperity of all Canadians.

I have already referred to the developing world economic trends and to the changing structure of the domestic market, both of which have had a marked effect on our economy. For the past twenty years, the rapid growth in the Canadian and Ontario populations has provided a rapidly expanding market for consumer goods. This is particularly true because a high percentage of the huge flow of post-war immigrants were young adults. These people required houses, appliances, furniture, automobiles and the whole range of durable goods which are necessities for North American families. Along with this high level of immigration, we experienced steadily rising birth rates. New industries were built up to provide baby and children's food, clothing, toys and household equipment.

Prosperity in western Europe has reduced the incentive of people in these countries to emigrate to Canada. In 1961 there were only about 72,000 immigrants to Canada and less than 37,000 to Ontario. This is the smallest flow of immigration since 1947, when shipping space was still scarce and our immigration regulations were tighter. Along with the reduction in immigration, there have been fewer marriages and births. Because the people who are now getting married and establishing families were born in the low birth rate years of the thirties, the number of marriages in Ontario as well as the marriage rate has been falling since the peak in 1958.

The changes in population trends resulting both from immigration flow and from the uneven age distribution of our population have had significant effects on the domestic market for consumer goods. The demand for housing and for infants' and children's goods has been increasing at a slower rate. For the next few years, as these children advance in age, there will be a demand for teenage apparel, sports clothes and equipment and low-priced popular entertainment facilities.

We are not experiencing the rapid growth of the fifties, when Ontario's population increased by 3.1 per cent a year, and Canada's by 2.6 per cent. Nevertheless, in the period from June, 1960, to June, 1961, the Ontario population increased by 1.9 per cent, slightly under the national average of 2.0 per cent for the same period and much above the Ontario growth of 1.5 per cent per year for the first half of this century.

While there has been a sharp drop in population growth in the past year or two, this drop is temporary and the growth rate will turn up again by about 1965 when the young people born during and after World War II move into the family formation age groups. We must also remember that population growth is by no means slow; we are still growing at a slightly higher rate than that experienced in the United States over the past decade and a half and at a much more rapid rate than that of most European countries.

Growing population is not the only factor contributing to demand. In Ontario, our growing domestic market has been supported by steady increases in wage rates and incomes. For the past fifteen years there has been an increase in both total personal incomes and in per capita incomes. In this area too, however, there has been a slight slowdown in growth since 1957. Total personal income per capita increased at an average rate of 5.6 per cent a year from 1946 to 1957, while the average price increase in the same period was 4.2 per cent a year. In terms of actual purchasing power, therefore, per capita personal income rose by about 1.5 per cent a year. Since 1957 per capita personal income in real terms has risen by only 1.2 per cent a year.

Ontario's estimated per capita personal income reached $1,855 in 1961, about $25 higher than British Columbia's, the second wealthiest province, and well above the Canadian average of $1,568. Ontario incomes were up 1.9 per cent from 1960, or, since consumer prices rose about one per cent over the same period, about one per cent per capita in purchasing power. While this is not a very substantial rise, the picture is actually more promising than the figures suggest since incomes were rising more rapidly in the latter half of the year.

Another factor that should be considered here is that population, particularly in the younger age groups, has expanded more rapidly than the number of wage earners. Personal income per capita, therefore, does not reflect the tremendous gains in real income accruing to our working population. The fact that personal income per capita has increased despite the growth in the non-productive population demonstrates the basic vitality and strength of our economy. The actual purchasing power of the individual wage and salary earner has grown to a much greater extent than the figures quoted above would indicate.

In terms of retail sales, because real incomes have held up strongly, retail trade has been one of the stabilizing factors in our economy. The growth in population and the increasing requirements of an extremely young population have resulted in continuous rises in consumer spending. This growth has not been restricted to conventional trade outlets.

I spoke earlier of the changing structure of our manufacturing industries. In many ways, the changes in retailing have been even more spectacular. Since the war, the major changes have been the introduction of the supermarket, the expansion of chain stores, the construction of shopping centres in the rapidly growing suburbs and the emergence of the discount house.

Partly because of pressure on prices brought on by these new outlets and partly because we now have a buyer's market for consumer goods, firm prices for durables have tended to disappear. Sales and price cuts at the retail level have become the order of the day and shopping for price as well as for quality has returned. This is true not only domestically but is true internationally. For many years brand names were a major determinant in retail selling. As standards of performance and quality have become more uniform the differentiation of a brand image has blurred and in the buyer's market that has developed price has increasingly assumed its powerful influence in shaping the production and distribution pattern.

This does not mean that price can at any time be isolated from the quality of the product. More than ever before consumers are seeking trouble-free performance and serviceability. While this is a subject which calls for careful analysis and study in depth extending far beyond the references which I can make to it here today, the development of quality control techniques and the improvement in design constitute objectives at which Canadian and Ontario industry must constantly aim. This will be the specific study of a committee of the economic council.

Through the years we have had in Canada an expanding market as reflected in retail sales. Owing to a number of factors the retail sales in the first quarter of 1961 were slow but there was an upturn in the late spring and summer and then again at the end of the year. In total, retail sales in 1961 reached an all-time record of $6,337 million, about half of one per cent above those in 1960. All signs point to continuing improvement in 1962.

The sales of grocery and combination stores, department stores and garages and filling stations have been showing the most notable increases. Sales of furniture, appliance and radio dealers have also been somewhat higher. Last year there was a marked decline in the value of motor vehicle sales, partly explained by the lower prices of North American compact cars which have been favourably received by the public.

Consumer credit continued to rise throughout 1961 and at the end of the year was substantially higher than it had been at the end of 1960. In this area, too, there was a sharp change in consumer habits. Most of the increase in credit outstanding over the year was in small loans from chartered banks. There were also small increases in department store credit and in cash loans of small loan companies.

Population and income are the major determinants of demand and establish the size of the domestic market for our productive industries. The most important of the productive industries is, of course, manufacturing. Manufacturing in Ontario provides today, as it has traditionally, half of the value of Canada's manufacturing output, almost half the country's employment in manufacturing and more than half of its salaries and wages. It is the largest single source of employment in Ontario and accounts for about two-thirds of the output of the province's goods-producing industry. The average size of manufacturing establishments in Ontario is larger than those in the rest of Canada in terms of numbers of employees, salaries and wages paid and the value of production.

The three leading industrial groups in size—iron and steel products, foods and beverages, and transportation—combined produce nearly half the total value of manufacturing output in the province. Yet, despite their importance, only one of them—iron and steel products—has been growing faster than Ontario's manufacturing industries as a whole.

In 1961 Ontario's shipments of manufactures are estimated at a record value of $11,750 million. They have recovered from the sluggishness experienced in 1960 and should exceed 1959—the previous peak year—by about one per cent. The upturn in manufacturing output in the province, in common with the upturn in the whole Canadian economy, began in the second quarter of 1961 and gained strength towards the end of the year. The extent of the recovery is indicated by the fact that the value of manufacturing shipments in the second half of 1961 was some five per cent above the second half of 1960, more than offsetting a decline in the early part of the year.

Despite increasing competition in the manufacturing field a number of Ontario's manufacturers have demonstrated that ingenuity and perseverance can pay off in developing export markets. I shall speak more of this matter during the estimates of the department.

The province's steel producers are encountering more success in exporting to the United States and Europe in the last two or three years.

An Ontario company manufacturing high fidelity equipment, concentrating on original design and high quality, is exporting goods worth approximately $1 million to the United States and has recently started selling in Japan. An Ontario cement company last year expanded export sales to the United States and has equally good prospects this year.

Several other companies are exporting to the United Kingdom and western Europe. An increasing number of companies are exporting refrigerators, stoves and other appliances to African and eastern markets. Some automotive companies are manufacturing components for their parent companies in the United States. Wearing apparel is being sold in the United Kingdom and dental equipment in Sweden and West Germany.

These are but a few examples of the opportunities that exist for expanding exports to world markets. We are confident in the government that there is a tremendous field in the matter of exports and we will be discussing with the House very shortly the plans we have in relation to these matters.

The exceedingly rapid rate of population growth following World War II called for heavy capital investment to construct new homes, factories, roads, schools and numerous other physical assets. This capital investment was at an extraordinarily high level all through the post-war years, but reached its peak during the capital investment boom years of 1955-1957. In this last year capital investment in Ontario reached a level of almost $3.3 billion, 37.5 per cent of the national total and over 25 per cent of our total provincial product. This rate could not be maintained, and by 1959 it had dropped below $3 billion at which level it has continued, still constituting about 35 per cent of the national total and over 20 per cent of the total provincial product.

The main reductions have occurred in manufacturing and in the national resource and construction industries. Part of the decline in private investment has been offset by an increase in the investment in government and institutional services and facilities, including schools, universities and hospitals. Total capital investment in manufacturing in 1961 of over $500 million was concentrated largely in iron and steel manufacture, chemicals, foods and beverages, and paper products.

One of the brighter spots in construction activity in 1961 was the recovery in the housing sector. In the past year, 48,144 housing units were started and 43,754 new units were completed. While starts were up 13.9 per cent over 1960, new completions fell by more than 3,000 units, continuing a downward trend which began in 1958. 31,936 units were carried over in 1962 which, while higher than last year, is below the number of carryovers in 1958-59. In the light of present levels of population growth and family formation no good purpose could be served by inflating rates of residential construction, although there are areas which call for special consideration.

I shall deal with Ontario's new and bold housing programme at a later date.

Now in relation to agriculture, changing living patterns at home and abroad have made it more and more evident that our agricultural industry, as well as our manufacturing industry, must be both flexible and efficient. The increase in efficiency of agricultural operations has been remarkable in the post-war period as continual increases in agricultural production have been accomplished, as I have pointed out, with a greatly reduced work force. In 1961 there were only about half as many workers engaged in Ontario agriculture as there were in 1946. Increased mechanization, larger scale operations and more specialization have all contributed to this increased productivity.

Ontario's agricultural production in 1961 was slightly higher than in 1960. Farm cash income, estimated at $895 million, was up 3 per cent above that in 1960 and at an all-time high. For all the principal field crops, yields exceeded the average of the past 10 years. Pastures were extremely productive all season. The volume of milk output showed a gain of about 3 per cent over that in 1960 while creamery butter production rose by more than 10 per cent. Estimates of live-stock on Ontario farms on December 1, 1961, indicate an increase of more than 5 per cent in the number of cattle and of almost 7 per cent in the number of sheep and lambs. There was a slight decline in the number of swine. The production of tobacco was estimated to be almost 5 per cent below the record crop harvested in 1960, when it was valued at $109 million. With an output of some 197 million pounds, it was considerably above the average for the years 1956-1960. The value of fruit and vegetables was approximately $10 million higher in 1961 than in the preceding year, when it stood at $90 million. Output of apples alone amounted to 5.2 million bushels, a 39 per cent rise over the 1960 level. Considerable increases were also recorded for peaches, cherries, sweet cherries, plums and prunes.

With the increase in world trade it is becoming more and more evident that, in order to compete, our agricultural industries have to be efficient and offer the type and quality of product that the consumer, at home and abroad, demands. While the individual farmer is an expert at the primary level of agricultural production, his well-being also depends, to a large extent, on the practical application of scientific findings and of market research and organization.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) and I will be making reference to plans that we have relating to our joint effort to improve the agricultural industry in Ontario. This is a bold and imaginative programme, not only to encourage the saving of the family farm but to improve the marketing opportunities of our produce. And I shall refer to this also in more detail later during the passing of my estimates.

Now, in relation to activity in northern Ontario, the northern part of our province has always been a very significant source of wealth. Virtually all of our forestry and mineral resources are located in this area. These industries together with agriculture and tourism provide the main sources of employment and incomes for the people in the north. Since World War II these industries have been growing at about the same rate or slightly faster than the economy of the province as a whole. In the past year there were adjustments in some sectors of mining but production of most of our leading minerals was high, and forestry and the forest-based industries enjoyed a good year. Although primary paper and sawmill production showed little change from 1960, the output of fine and specialty papers rose by 4 to 6 per cent.

The value of Ontario's mineral output in 1961 was estimated at $948 million, a decline from the previous year when it stood at $983 million. Substantial gains were made by several minerals, particularly iron ore, nickel and zinc. As was to be expected, production of uranium, although still ranking second, experienced a considerable decrease from $212 million to $157 million. All other minerals together showed an increase of 2.6 per cent, but this was not sufficient to compensate entirely for the $55 million loss on uranium. The five major metals, nickel, uranium, copper, gold and iron ore together accounted for more than three-quarters of total output.

Demand for nickel was favourable last year in both the United States and Europe. Ontario's output for 1961 was estimated at $301 million, 2.7 per cent higher than in the previous year. This all-time record was attained in spite of the fact that the United States steel industry—the major buyer of our nickel—was operating at well below its capacity. An increase in the price of nickel by about 10 per cent—the first major change since 1956—has had the effect of slightly inflating production figures. It is expected that this year production will be maintained or exceeded. Long-term prospects are good with markets in Europe, Japan and elsewhere representing a considerable potential, since per capita consumption of the metal in those countries is much below that of North America.

Within our national borders the International Nickel Company commenced operations at its new mine in northern Manitoba. In Ontario, a new nickel development at Gordon Lake, north of Kenora, is scheduled to start up production before the end of the present year.

In spite of a considerable decline in 1961, Ontario's uranium production accounted for 16 per cent of the province's mineral output. However, further decreases may be expected for the next few years as existing contracts which mainly cover defence requirements come to an end. An agreement for the sale of 12,000 tons of uranium concentrates to the United Kingdom is still under negotiation. Although potential new demand is represented by the requirements for nuclear power generating stations, this market is developing more slowly than hoped. In the meantime, a number of research organizations are engaged in the search for non-nuclear uses for uranium, including my own department; and again I will refer to this when discussing the programme relating to northern development and also the operations of the Ontario Research Foundation.

In 1961 the volume of copper production increased by more than 2 per cent over 1960 but at $122.5 million it was slightly below the previous year's level. In Ontario, one new producer commenced operations last year in the Timmins area.

Ontario's gold output in 1961 stood at $92 million, almost equal to the value of production the year before. The industry has derived considerable benefits from the discount on the Canadian dollar. In spite of this impetus, most mines still received aid under The Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. The main difficulty for our gold producers continues to be that of rising costs while the price of the end product is fixed in terms of U.S. dollars. Although there has been a certain amount of speculation, United States government policy shows evidence of a determination to maintain the gold price at U.S. $35.00 per ounce, as set in 1934.

Our iron ore mines last year surpassed all previous accomplishments with a record value of production of $55 million, almost $7 million more than in 1960. In Ontario, very substantial iron ore deposits have been discovered in recent years. Plans to bring several properties into production are in various stages of development, from shaft sinking and testing to the operation of a pilot plant. Activities are continuing north of Nakina, south of Kowkash, near Lake St. Joseph, south of Red Lake and in the Temagami area. This spring, construction will commence on a $30 million iron mine in the Kirkland Lake area which, when in operation, will employ about 400 men. It is expected to produce a million gross tons annually of the highest quality iron ore pellets. New direct ore reduction methods offer special opportunities for the development of Ontario's extensive low-grade ore deposits. One considerable advantage is that these processes require no coke, a fuel which cannot be obtained from provincial sources.

With construction activity fairly stable, output of structural materials, valued at $130 million, remained virtually unchanged. The major component of this group was sand and gravel, at almost $44 million, followed by cement ($31 million), stone ($23 million), and lime ($10.6 million). The production value of cement showed an increase of almost 11 per cent over that in the year before.

The production of fuels in the province increased from $9.7 million in 1960 to $10.7 million in 1961. Two-thirds of the total was accounted for by natural gas and one-third by crude petroleum. During 1961, 1,147,682 barrels of oil were produced in Ontario: an increase of 14 per cent over 1960. The 1961 figure is the highest that has ever been reached in Ontario in over 100 years of recorded history.

In terms of energy, Ontario is undergoing a spectacular change in the sources and uses of its energy supply. The gradual decline in the use of coal has been more than offset by the rapid increase in the use of oil and natural gas. At the same time electric power production and consumption continues to expand.

In 1961 an estimated 38 billion kilowatt hours of electrical energy was made available for use in Ontario—an increase of 2.7 per cent over 1960. This is against the judicial increase of approximately 6 per cent a year. During the past year the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, which provides 90 per cent of the electricity used in the province, increased its dependable peak capacity by 3 per cent to more than 6.7 million kilowatts. The commission added 108,000 kilowatts to dependable peak hydro-electric capacity through two new units at the Otter Rapids generating station on the Abitibi river and one unit at Red Rock Falls generating station on the Mississagi river. The greatest increase in capacity was, however, in the field of thermal electricity as the fourth 200,000 kilowatt unit at the Richard L. Hearn generating station and the first of six 300,000 kilowatt units at the Lakeview generating station were placed in service.

The total contribution made by these additional units was partly offset by adjustments in capacity at the Niagara river stations as expanding operations at the American power stations resulted in a decline in the amount of water available for use in Canada.

Additions were also made to the transmission network to increase efficiency and dependability of service. The rural distribution system was extended during 1961 by the net addition of 430 miles of primary distribution line to serve 22,000 new rural customers. In terms of a national grid of electricity I would say to the House that the province of Ontario stands ready to discuss at any level any programme which appears to be economically sound.

Extension of the use of natural gas in Ontario continued in 1961—although I have it here in my notes as 125 million cubic feet I think it is 125 billion cubic feet. Total sales were 20 per cent higher than in 1960, at 125,142,098 Mcf.

The greatest increase was in industrial sales which now make up almost half the total. Residential customers purchase about 38 per cent of the total and commercial firms about 12.5 per cent; this is in relation to natural gas. While there was some decline in production of natural gas in Ontario in 1961, Ontario production still made up nearly 12 per cent of the total sold in the province during the year. A number of new wells were brought into production in Lake Erie last summer. The gas pipeline network in Ontario expanded to link up such places as Pembroke, Alviston, Elmira, Fergus, Elora and an ammonia plant at Millhaven.

The establishment of a national oil policy in 1961 brought significant changes in the petroleum industry. The policy called for producers to increase Canadian crude oil production by 45 per cent in the next three years or face import restrictions. The onus is on the producers and refiners to find larger outlets. As a result there has been an increase in exports and an increase in the inter-provincial flow of Canadian crude into Ontario.

By the end of September, 1961, Ontario refineries stopped receiving foreign crude and by the end of November all inventories of foreign crude had been consumed. By the end of 1961 no foreign crude was refined in Ontario refineries and it is unlikely that any foreign crude will enter Ontario in the future. Moreover, Ontario refined products amounted to 73.5 per cent of total consumption in the province of refined products in 1961 as compared with 71.5 per cent in 1960. Hence, although consumption of refined petroleum products in 1961 was up only 6.7 per cent from 1960, refinery production in Ontario was up 9.8 per cent, and 11.1 per cent less refinery products entered Ontario from other provinces. Ontario refineries were operating at closer to capacity in 1961—86.1 per cent as compared with 79.5 per cent in 1960.

Additions to capacity planned for the next few years are as follows: 1962, 25,000 barrels daily; 1963, 31,000 barrels daily; and 1965, 86,000 barrels daily. The expected expansion in refinery capacity in the next few years will be supplied by Canadian crude and it now appears that the targets set by the national oil policy for production of Canadian crude oil will be met.

In conclusion I would like to make these comments in relation to our economy. The Ontario economy recovered momentum in 1961 and new records of production, employment and incomes were achieved in almost all sectors. While there were some soft spots, the overall advance offset these and we realized a 3.5 per cent increase in gross provincial product.

Some of the outstanding developments in 1961 were the following:

1. the value of manufacturing production reached an all-time record of almost $11.8 billion, led by recovery in durables.

2. steel production in Ontario was the highest in history.

3. there were 6,000 more housing starts in 1961 in Ontario than in 1960.

4. nickel and iron ore established new value of production levels last year at $301 million and $55 million, respectively, in Ontario.

5. in agriculture, both gross farm income, at $1 billion, and farm cash income, at $895 million, established record highs in 1961, in Ontario.

6. total paper production of 2.6 million tons was the highest in history, in Ontario.

7. personal income in the province was another record achieved in 1961, of $1,855 per capita, the highest of any province in Canada and higher than the Canadian average.

8. Canada had a trade surplus for the first time since 1954 as exports rose by 8 per cent over 1960, contributed extensively to by the general industry in the province of Ontario.

The general improvement in the economy was reflected in an improvement in the employment situation. Employment created a new high averaging 2,261,000 in 1961, an increase of about one per cent from 1960. Unemployment in Ontario, seasonally adjusted, dropped from 6.9 per cent of the work force in January to 4.3 per cent in December, the lowest since October 1959. Although the rate of unemployment in the male sector is about double that of women, an encouraging factor this year has been the acceleration in manufacturing which has created new jobs for men.

The seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment in Ontario of 4.3 per cent continues to be well below that of Canada as a whole and the United States which averaged 5.9 and 6.1 per cent, respectively, in December 1961.

The gains achieved by the Ontario economy during 1961 are expected to continue throughout 1962. We anticipate that the gross provincial product will increase by 6 per cent with the greatest expansion in manufacturing, some areas of construction, mining, government, trade, and services.

Personal incomes have been rising strongly and the expansion in consumer liquidity together with greater consumer confidence in the economy should result in a substantial increase in consumer expenditures.

Although corporation profits have also risen in recent months, increased investment expenditures will depend to a large extent on the assessment of prospects for continued strength and ultimate demand. It is apparent that there is still excess capacity in many of our industries and until this is fully utilized there will be no large-scale investment undertaken in the private sector, and I am hopeful that our programme will also be effective in this area.

The length and strength of the current economic upswing will be to a large extent determined by conditions existing in our external markets. At the present time there has been a slowdown in the rate of growth in some of the major European countries, which might result in a temporary slackening in demand for our export products. This should be more than compensated by the resurgence in the United States economy which will increase the demand for our exports there. Because the United States and European economies are in different stages of their cyclical movements, we shall not experience the violent fluctuations which otherwise might have occurred. However, if this continues we can also expect a more gradual long-term growth. Changes in the structure of our foreign trade owing to developments in the common market will not be as significant in 1962 as in succeeding years, particularly if the United Kingdom becomes a member in 1963.

The present expansion in business activity is definitely stronger than has been the case over the last two cycles. Consumer durables have shown a remarkable improvement as have exports and industrial production. These are particularly encouraging to future growth in the Ontario economy.

Our economic prospects in Ontario for 1962 are excellent. We have a sound basis for expansion, and although we are fully aware that we are confronted with a number of problems, we can face the future with confidence.

We recognize that our rate of growth in the last four years has not been adequate. We are now, however, in a phase of accelerated economic activity. If we are to provide the 500,000 to 600,000 new jobs required for our growing work force in the next ten years, we must develop new policies to overcome present problems and ensure a high rate of economic expansion. This government has no intention of presiding over a stagnating economy. Our economic policies can be stated in one word: growth.

Today we are confronted with a need for basic structural changes in our economy. Many of these, as I have pointed out, are already taking place in answer to the changing economic environment in which we operate. Since the end of World War II the size and variety of our manufacturing industries have undergone a great transformation and expansion. Many completely new industries have been set up while firms within older, more established industries have turned to new products to fit changing market conditions.

There is still more to be done. Our industries must achieve economies of scale and maintain a tight rein on production costs in the face of increased competition in both domestic and export markets. This may require in many industries a realignment and rationalization of production facilities. Greater specialization must be our goal with increased emphasis on quality. In the accomplishment of these goals the government pledges its co-operation and support to industry. In fact, we will do more than that, we will help to lead the way.

We are fully aware of the task ahead. We are now designing specific policies to encourage economic growth in Ontario. The government has already announced the new 12-point housing programme and the establishment of the Ontario Economic Council. Additional programmes will be presented to the hon. members shortly. In the detailed presentation of my estimates, I shall outline the special services to be provided by the expanded facilities of my department.

We are looking to the new Ontario Economic Council to come up with the answers to many of our economic problems. Committees are now being established to study and report on specific subjects such as the tourist industry, industrial research, industrial development, Ontario development fund, agriculture and development in northern Ontario. As I stated before, the activities of the council will not be limited to the investigation of problems over which the government has jurisdiction. We are going to look into anything and everything which affects the Ontario economy and use every method open to us to safeguard our interests and promote economic growth and development in this province.

I am particularly concerned with the work of the economic committee on northern Ontario development. This area, which makes such a significant contribution to the total wealth of Ontario, is faced with unique problems because of its overwhelming dependence on the resource industries. I look forward to receiving the recommendations of the council on this matter, and I hope that concrete action can be taken in the very near future. In the meantime, the Ontario Northland Railway has already started construction on a new $7.2 million telephone, microwave and communication system programme which will be of immense benefit to residents of the north. In addition, work will begin immediately on a railroad line to the new iron mine at Dane.

I should like to re-emphasize that the solution to our problems will not be easy. We know that it will require the fullest co-operation of all sectors of our economy. To this end we have included representatives of industry, labour, agriculture, commerce and science in our economic council as a partnership for progress. In co-operation with them we will do our utmost to ensure the greatest possible economic growth in Ontario. Of this I am confident, around this our programmes are built; I am confident the future is but ours to grasp just as it is the moment in which we may lift our people to their highest destiny.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I wonder in view of these wonderful figures if the budget will balance this year.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee of supply reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, before the motion is put, may I ask what opportunity will be afforded to debate the presentation that has been made today?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is part of the estimates. We will go through all the estimates of The Department of Economics and Development by vote where hon. members will have an opportunity to speak. We will commence the budget debate as soon as the budget is in. These are all matters which can be debated in the budget. I do not think there is going to be any lack of opportunity for hon. members to debate.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Chairman, this was an unusual step today. I think we all appreciate it and we were prepared to accept it, but surely we must be given an extraordinary opportunity to debate it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: When the estimates for the department are presented.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, just a moment, Mr. Chairman, I am making a very specific point. A presentation was made this afternoon which took an hour and a half and I think the Opposition should have an opportunity to specifically debate this on the occasion—just a moment. Now the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has said that the budget debate will provide that opportunity. It will not. If the hon. Prime Minister wants to give us the specific assurance that during those estimates a wide opportunity will be given to debate on this issue—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) would just understand what was done this afternoon; we have introduced the estimates—

Mr. Wintermeyer: It is quite obvious, quite apparent.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —of The Department of Economics and Development and the hon. Minister has made his opening statement. Now it is free for any hon. member of this House to rise and make any statement he wishes in the course of the estimates of this department. There is no change in procedure, all we have done is change the timing.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Just wait until the occasion arises, Mr. Chairman. But I want to make it emphatically clear that we have the opportunity to debate this—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have not finished what I was saying. Hon. members will have all the opportunity they like to debate anything that was in this statement, it will all be in Hansard. Hon. members will have an opportunity to debate it when these estimates are called again and by that time they will have had an opportunity to read it in Hansard.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister is in a position to indicate when these estimates are likely to be called again?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Any time after Monday, Mr. Chairman. They will not be called this week.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply do now rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the Chair.

CERTAIN LANDS IN THE TOWN OF GANANOQUE

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests) moves second reading of Bill No. 55, An Act respecting Certain Lands in the Town of Gananoque.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MINING ACT

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines) moves second reading of Bill No. 57, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that last year the committee on mining did not meet at all, or if it did meet it met only on one occasion. Do I understand that this bill is going to be sent to a revived and resuscitated mining committee for a thorough study?

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): I cannot understand that Sudbury terminology, Mr. Speaker, but it will be sent to the standing committee and I hope in deference to last year that the hon. member for Sudbury will be there, which he was not last year.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I am not anywhere lately, but if the hon. Minister wants me to speak in Ojibway to him, which I know he does understand, I would be glad to oblige him.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE NOTARIES ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General) moves second reading of Bill No. 59, An Act to amend The Notaries Act.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): There will be a number of these bills going to the committee on legal bills. This is simply a tidying up. There was some question in the mind of the inspector of legal offices as to whether there was sufficient in the Act to authorize the fixing of fees by regulation and that is now being done.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 60, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE COUNTY COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 61, An Act to amend The County Courts Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I might say that this bill and a number of others are in relation to the Silk report, and will all go to the committee on legal bills.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE COUNTY JUDGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 62, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DIVISION COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 63, An Act to amend The Division Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE GENERAL SESSIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 64, An Act to amend The General Sessions Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 65, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, before that motion carries, might I inquire as to why we have two bills amending The Judicature Act at the same time? Why can we not have it all in one?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This one will go to the committee on legal bills, the other one was an entirely different matter.

Mr. Singer: Would it not be simpler, for indexing and for the general convenience of those who might want to consult The Judicature Act, if we have only one Judicature Act amendment Act a year?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It will all be put into the one when it goes into the statute book.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE JUVENILE AND FAMILY COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 66, An Act to amend The Juvenile and Family Courts Act.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say a few words in regard to this bill and the principle behind it. I think it is long overdue that the government has done something or at least it is going through the motions to try to do something to have trained family court judges.

Recently there was an appointment in Richmond Hill, and it is an amazing appointment. When I read the local paper called The Liberal and learned of the appointment—it was not editorial comment of any kind—I was amazed at the type of person appointed. I am not saying there was anything wrong with the person as an individual, but as far as training is concerned, as far as background is concerned, the appointment at Richmond Hill should certainly never have been made to a family court. I think in a family court the principle behind such appointments should be that it be someone trained in the law. Not only trained in the law but who has an understanding of human nature, who has the patience to solve family problems.

I just want to give you an idea, Mr. Speaker, of the type of appointment this government has been making. It has been using the family court for political pay-offs in order to find jobs for those good, faithful Tory workers regardless of their qualifications.

I just want to read what is on the front page of the Richmond Hill Liberal. This is evidently, up to this date, what the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) considers qualifications to sit on the family court. It is from the Richmond Hill Liberal, Thursday, January 18, 1962, entitled:

NAMED JUDGE OF FAMILY COURT

It has a picture of George R. Sweeney. It says here:

A resident of Richmond Hill for the past 14 years who has been appointed judge of the juvenile and family court for the County of York. He is a graduate of Trinity College, University of Toronto, in English, history and political science. Post college experience in journalism and creative advertising research was interrupted by four and a half years service in the R.C.A.F. and R.A.F. as a bombardier and navigator in the United Kingdom, Malta and Burma. His post-war experience was as an advertising manager and sales manager, including merchandising research and promotion in the manufacturing in import and export fields. He is currently interested in the adult programme for the retarded and as chairman will start a local workshop in 1962 in Richmond Hill.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, that is the only item in all his career that shows that he has some interest in that type of thing that might be even similar to a family court. The item goes on:

He is a director of the Toronto Ski Club and chairman of the operation at Summit. He is engaged in an instructional programme for future Olympic games material. This operation is a pilot project for future plans in other Ontario centres. His hobbies and sports include skiing, sailing, theatre and recreation projects.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we find out why he really was appointed.

He has been especially interested in political activities, having served as president of the Richmond Hill Progressive Conservative Association and as vice-president of the North York association. In 1957 he was campaign manager for C. A. Cathers, North York's present member of Parliament, and in 1958 was appointed returning officer for North York riding following a Progressive Conservative victory in that year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the time has come when appointees to this type of work should be trained personnel; and certainly in the area of Richmond Hill there are many people who could fill that type of job. He may be an excellent advertising man. He may be excellent at selling soap. But this is not solving the serious problem in juvenile courts and family problems.

So I do hope that the hon. Attorney-General is going to turn over a new leaf. Certainly from what we have seen in the past, this change is long overdue. We should stop using the family courts for political pay-off.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I would just say this, that I thank the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) for reading, as he did, the biography of this very fine man, father of a large family, and a man who, when there was trouble, was over there as a bombardier. I have no apologies to make whatever to anybody in this House for that appointment.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I never questioned the man's integrity. I would say this: that he is not trained for the job, it is a political pay-off.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I would point out to the hon. members that on second readings of bills the members are allowed to speak once but not to speak a second time.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): I have not said anything so I will repeat what he said. It is a political pay-off, that is what it is.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SURROGATE COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 67, An Act to amend The Surrogate Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE GAME AND FISH ACT, 1961-1962

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests) moves second reading of Bill No. 69, The Game and Fish Act, 1961-1962.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves second reading of Bill No. 70, An Act to amend The Agricultural Societies Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE TRAINING SCHOOLS ACT

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Reform Institutions) moves second reading of Bill No. 71, An Act to amend The Training Schools Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

APPROVAL OF IMPARTIAL REFEREES AND ARBITRATORS

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 72, An Act to provide for the Approval of Impartial Referees and Arbitrators.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I would like the hon. Attorney-General to elaborate on the principle of this bill during this reading. I do not quite understand what this covers—I might put it in the form of a question, sir. Does it cover all types of arbitration that may come under provincial jurisdiction, or just specific cases of collective bargaining arbitration?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I did on first reading give a short statement, and I take it my hon. friend from Wentworth East does not want me to repeat that.

This is a bill which will provide for a pool or a panel of people who will have passed a test by a very competent supervisory board, entitling them to be named with a certain name as set out in the Act. They will be regarded as people who are fit and properly trained for the type of work that is set out; impartial referees and arbitrators, and wherever there is a call for these qualified persons they would be eligible, but their participation is in no way compulsory. This is a step forward, I think, because it will mean there will be people who have been tested and to whom this supervisory board has given the stamp of approval. The parties themselves will always have the choice. They can go outside that group; they are in no way held to choosing people in that panel.

In other words, this is not an exclusive society where you must go for your arbitrator or your referee. Judges still remain in the same position, although they may ultimately be gradually withdrawn. Other people not in that panel, would still be available on the choice of the parties if they wanted them, but this is a step forward, indicating people who have passed the test for this type of qualification. As the years go on I anticipate that it will be a very valuable record of capacity in that respect.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly support this important move. There has been a need for this type of thing for quite some time and I am sure the trade union movement will make good use of these arbitrators who will be available. Because of the great delay in getting cases started in the past, we had to wait for one of the few judges who were participating. But I would like to make a couple of important suggestions.

I think the bill itself should provide an area for complaint by anyone in regard to the panel or any individuals on the panel through reference to the advisory group. I would also suggest that The Department of Labour or The Department of the Attorney-General should have some specialized groups on the panels because of the technological changes in industry, such as job evaluation programmes.

We have found in the past where we have had arbitrators deal with cases, that they have sat for some days and at the conclusion, they have had the chairman state that he felt himself not really competent to deal with this particular case.

I would suggest that some thought be given to the training of arbitrators in the field of job evaluation, so that when they get a case that involves a C.W.S. programme, as we call it, that they know the terminology and all the implications involved with factoring, out of line differentials, and this sort of thing. This would be an improvement in giving cases in arbitration the fullest consideration.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I watched very closely for the printing of this bill and I notice it appeared in our books today for the first time. Having had only a very short opportunity to examine its content I should like most respectfully to ask the hon. Attorney-General through you, sir, whether it is intended that such a body of approved arbitrators and referees will function under the aegis of some individual, who shall be appointed to head it up; whether, in that case, the labour unions and companies who find themselves embroiled in disputes over the construction, interpretation, application or alleged violation—the words usually used—of the contract between them, will apply to some central registry or some specific person to have an arbitrator assigned to them. If that is the case, will the parties have the opportunity of selecting some specific individual from the panel, and make application for that person to be assigned?

Further, is the intention of the government through the device of this Act—coupled with the other bill providing for the appointment of a chief judge of the county courts—is it the intention of the government, or is it, in fact, government policy, that gradual evolutionary steps, if I may use that phrase, be taken so that county court judges will be prohibited from acting in the arbitration of industrial disputes?

One could not have failed to note the emphasis placed in Mr. Silk's report, which I might add, sir, I was studying during one of the periods in which I was absent from the House. I was studying that report and could not be here. However, sir, I promise to be here from now on except on Friday, when I have to be in Little Current. Hon. members probably would not have known where Little Current is but it is a long way north, and I have to go there on Friday.

However, to get back to what I was saying.

In the Silk report one saw this striking phenomenon: Mr. Silk said that Ontario was the only jurisdiction—in the western world, I think he put it, I think his encompassment went that far—where the second level of the judiciary, that is, the county court judiciary, had almost a complete monopoly upon the arbitration of industrial disputes.

That development has come about since the end of World War II and I am wondering, sir, whether it is the policy of this government to inhibit, or to put it a little stronger, prohibit the county court judiciary from continuing to act in that capacity.

Certainly, sir these people have engendered the confidence of both management and labour in their actions as arbitrators, but because they have had a monopoly it has worked against the building up of a body of other people, other groups, people of different training, background and experience who are available to act as labour arbitrators.

One cannot help suspect, but it would take more time of this House than I dare to this afternoon to go into all the ramifications of that—certainly the operation of the second level of the judiciary of the province has suffered through the extent that county judges have been engrossed in labour arbitration. I wish the hon. Attorney-General would rise and tell us what the intention of the government is, because a great many people both on management and on labour side are concerned about the composition of this body; a body that apparently hereafter is going to arbitrate the disputes and iron out the differences that they run into almost daily in the interpretation of their collective bargaining agreements.

I am not one, sir, who is given often to paying attention to rumour, but I have heard it said among those who are concerned—it has been mooted about and bruited about—that this new body will be under the chairmanship of the person who is presently chairman of the Ontario Labour Relations Board. Is it intended that he step down from that position and take over the responsibilities, which are encompassed within the four corners of this statute? If such is the case, then I say the government has the obligation at the earliest opportunity, and the earliest opportunity is provided on second reading of this bill with which we are now concerned, to let those in this province know what its intentions are, in the future. More than that, specifically, if county court judges are now no longer going to be the main instruments or the main body of persons from which labour arbitrators are drawn, then what steps is the government going to take to secure the fairly large body of persons who are needed throughout the whole length and breadth of the province?

I speak, sir, from some experience, having attended upon arbitrations, acted as counsel in them, and I know some of the difficulties that we encounter in trying to secure the services of an arbitrator who is acceptable to both sides. Frequently you go through quite a dramatic list of people—or quite a lengthy list perhaps is a better word—of people before you decide upon someone who is acceptable to both sides.

Now, just to sum up—and I am speaking without notes and I am speaking extemporaneously, but these things I have thought about a great deal—I sum up by saying that this Bill No. 72 is a very great break—there is the place for the word “dramatic”—it is a very dramatic departure from what has been the case, the experience, in this province. We have had some—I do not know how many, 40, perhaps, or 35—county court judges who have been doing this work. If it is the government's policy that they be prohibited from doing it, then we should hear now what the alternative policy is going to be, what recruitment steps are going to be taken, whether in fact academic people are going to be invited into this or, in the words of the hon. member who spoke last, is there going to be some training procedure in order to provide a panel of persons who will be acceptable to both labour and management?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I may say that I think the hon. member for Wentworth East (Mr. Gisborn) made some very sensible suggestions in relation to the development of this theme. The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) has referred to the report which he read when he was in bed, I suppose, or sick anyway, or somewhere, otherwise he would have been here. But I would refer to pages 61 through to 72 for the expression on that particular subject by Mr. Silk himself for anyone who is interested, and it is a good report.

Actually, this is something of a really evolutionary nature and it will take, as all evolution does take, time to work out and to reach perfection. There is no overnight magic about it, but we do believe that over a period of time there will be built up a new group of people who are given a special name—approved impartial referee and arbitrator, would be the title. A society of people will probably emerge in due course, people who will no doubt organize themselves when it gets big enough—similar to other types of organizations such as your public accountants and that sort of thing.

The personnel, as I have indicated, and I repeat again, is not a personnel which will be exclusive. There is no thought of making a person qualify under that particular Act in order to be available for arbitration. There is still a free choice across the board. I think, however, that the time may come over a period—certainly the tendency will be over a period of time—to have our county and district judges—and I am speaking by and large now—assigning and taking up their duties in relation to their judicial duties as such in priority to anything else. There is no doubt that that would be the tendency. It may be that as a result of a policy in Ottawa and in co-operation with the government here, there might come a time when they would be excluded. But there is no thought at the moment of excluding them. There is no thought of trying to build up this group of people suddenly and then say that that is it, you must take somebody from there and nobody else is available. Nothing of that sort.

I could imagine that in the course of months there will be a lot of good names available of people who will really have the type of training in the specialist type in some cases. Then I think that hon. members will find that there will undoubtedly be some favourites. There will be some who will be linked with this work, or will have those attributes of settlement, in a much greater degree than others, and then the parties will be looking for those favourites. It may be that there will be some people in that panel who will not be getting much work, while others may be getting a lion's share. But we think that this free selection and free choice is highly important.

We do think that this is going to be a real step forward and will assist in solving other problems in relation to the administration of justice. I think I cover in that way the three specific questions that the hon. member put to me.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask a question. Has the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) given any thought to the rate of pay that they will be receiving so that he will be getting top personnel?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, again that is a matter of—I will not say detail—but it is a matter that will come with this development. There is a fair amount of flexibility at the present time, I think, in arbitrations and in these matters. I think there is a definite amount that is fixed so far as a judge is concerned, which is in a category by itself. But I think these are things that the experts—once this has been set up—will sit down and work out.

I would anticipate that the overall result would be less delay and, we hope, better end results. I would also hope that the cost of these proceedings would not be out of line either and there would be improvements rather than otherwise in connection with that.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Attorney-General whether the government has any intention—

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) asks his question, I would like to point out to the hon. members that this is second reading. I have been a little lax in this matter, but I think the time has come when I must draw the hon. members' attention to the proper procedure. The hon. members must be able to differentiate between second reading and asking questions. Questions are usually asked while we are in committee stage and are much better answered at that time. I do not wish to restrain the hon. leader of the Opposition, I just wanted to point this out.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My thought was, however, that questions which might relate to the principle of the bill—however, they can be positively stated.

Mr. Speaker, rather than ask the question, may I suggest that on innumerable occasions it has been said that it would be wise to effect a programme of education in the universities or in one specific university to assist the training of persons just such as are referred to in this instance. I was wondering if the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) could tell me whether it would be government policy to encourage either the creation or the development of a department in some university to assist the training of men of the calibre and type that he will be looking for through the provisions of this Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I would think it would be—I am not announcing any policy—but I would certainly think that sort of thing should follow in order to have this as efficient as possible.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE POLICE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 73, An Act to amend The Police Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: At this point, I would like to mention that I have been asked to announce that the committee on education meeting, called for 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, has been cancelled to allow the hon. members to join the committee on agriculture to attend the meeting at Guelph.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to: House in committee of the whole, Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

THE HOSPITAL SERVICES COMMISSION ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 51, An Act to amend The Hospital Services Commission Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.
Bill No. 51 reported.

THE PUBLIC HOSPITALS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 52, An Act to amend The Public Hospitals Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.
Bill No. 52 reported.

THE ONTARIO CODE OF HUMAN RIGHTS

House in committee on Bill No. 54, An Act to establish the Ontario Code of Human Rights and to provide for its Administration.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, on section 3 I would like to urge upon the government once again that they consider broadening the provision by reducing the size of the building to which it applies. At the present time the bill provides that there may not be discrimination with regard to occupancy in an apartment containing more than six self-contained dwelling units.

Mr. Chairman, I am just in the process of writing out my amendment, I did not realize that this bill would be called at this time, but I would like to move, seconded by Mr. Gisborn:

That section 3 of the bill be amended by striking out the word "six" in the third line in clause (a) and in the fourth line in clause (b), and by substituting therefor the word "three".

Mr. Chairman: Hon. members have heard the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, we have over the past several years been interested in bringing about this type of legislation. We have submitted bills ourselves to have something concrete, something that would bring about the end of discrimination in regard to people renting apartments, particularly coloured people, in the province of Ontario. No doubt there has been a real good job done in this regard by the human rights committee of the Ontario Federation of Labour. The newspapers and the press in this province have added support by following up cases of discrimination. They have done a real good job in bringing to the attention of the public specific cases of discrimination.

We can see no reason, since we have at least agreed with the principle of bringing in legislation to make it an offence to discriminate, that it should not apply, as has been suggested by the hon. member to more than three-apartment dwellings rather than stop at six-apartment dwellings. We support the principle in its entirety, with the hope that we can put real intent into the bill itself and make it cover the three-apartment buildings rather than stop at six as mentioned in the bill.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word in opposition to the amendment. I am just new in the department, as everyone knows, but I have made some inquiries about this and I have found from the human rights commission representatives that the Act as it is now worded is working extremely well.

I am told, sir, that this reduction to three in itself means nothing. An apartment of six dwelling units is actually a very small unit, because you can have one house, as is true in many parts of downtown Toronto and as a matter of fact some of the older parts of many of the urban communities in Ontario, where they have six units and that is a family dwelling. They have the father and mother there, with maybe the uncle and aunt, and the father and mother and the children. That is theirs, and I think they should have the right to say whether or not there is going to be someone in there whom they do not want or whom they want in place of someone else. This is not a straight case of discrimination, it is respecting the rights of individuals who have their family groups together, as one entity.

Now, sir, I am told by the representatives of the human rights commission this has worked extremely well and I myself cannot support the motion. I would ask that all support the present legislation as it is because it has been admitted it is good.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the example the hon. Minister gave is certainly a most unconvincing one. The bill now before us refers only to buildings containing a specified number of self-contained dwelling units. It is not a matter of father and mother having a flat in a house and having some of their children occupying other portions of the house. We are now talking about commercial propositions, in which landlords—in many cases, absentee landlords—are renting accommodation on a commercial basis.

For example, along the Lakeshore in Toronto there is a whole street of six-plexes. It differs very little from the large multiple dwelling units which surround it on either side. It differs in one respect, however, in that this provision of the law will not apply to that particular group of buildings, whereas it will apply to other buildings, constructed in a somewhat different way, that surround it.

I am not suggesting, I do not for one moment believe, that the owner of that group of buildings would discriminate. I have no knowledge of that. I am just calling the attention of the hon. Minister and of the government to the fact that this is quite a common type of arrangement in the construction of commercial property. The present rather large number of six—actually buildings with more than six self-contained units—which applies here, makes it unduly restrictive.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak to this amendment.

It seems to me what in fact the amendment deals with is a question of degree and not a question of principle. In other words, the hon. member amended to read “three”, the Act reads “six”. Why not two or why not four?

In other words, we are here dealing only with a matter of degree and not with the principle of the bill and what we are trying to do in the bill. It may be that if you get below six of five or four, then in attempting to preserve the rights of certain people you begin to infringe on the personal rights of certain other people. This is exactly why we have the limitation in the bill at all. I would suggest that in view of the fact that this legislation has been in effect and is working very satisfactorily, that perhaps the degree which has been used in the past, that is, the six apartment or less, has proven to be a workable solution to what is indeed a very difficult problem. As I say, the hon. member may pick six, five or four, and why is three better than two?

We are attempting in this legislation to establish certain principles and to protect people from discrimination but, at the same time, we must be alert to guard against infringing on certain inherent rights that belong to individuals as well. Therefore, I would speak against the amendment on the grounds that it is not a question of principle in the amendment being moved because it does allow three, and secondly, because this legislation and the way it has been set up has been proven to be satisfactory. Perhaps some time in the future, if there are indications that some changes should be made, that might be possible but there are no such indications today.

Mr. Chairman: As many as are in favour of the amendment please say “aye”.

As many as are opposed please say “nay”.

In my opinion the “nays” have it.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): I would like to speak to section 4, if I may.

We have had much discussion here about the various things which stop people from finding work and I think one of the things we have overlooked is age. So often people today are refused work because they are over the age of 35, even more because they are over the age of 40. I think if we had it in our legislation that we were out to help those people who were still not old, but considered by some too old because they are 35, it would go a long way in helping to solve the unemployment situation.

There are many people who are out of work simply because of age; not that they are not properly trained or they have no experience. Many of them are more qualified, far better experienced and can be depended upon better than younger people. Employers today have got into a bad habit of not giving people employment because of age.

Our own legislation in this province is largely at fault. The Apprenticeship Act has been mentioned in this House before, in that anyone over 21 cannot qualify as an apprentice. It is time we cleaned up our legislation.

With this in mind, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move an amendment to section 4, subsection 1 of this bill so that it would read as follows:

No employer or person acting on behalf of an employer shall refuse to employ or to continue to employ any person, or discriminate against any person with regard to employment or any term or condition of employment because of his race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry, place of origin or age.

I move this, seconded by Mr. Nixon.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I speak in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter). I trust that the hon. Minister (Mr. Warrender) will not tell us that on this occasion the present provisions of the statute have been operating satisfactorily.

I regret very much that the hon. chief commissioner of the LCBO (Mr. Grossman) is not in his seat, because before he moved up to the august ranks of the Cabinet, he was a very strong exponent of legislation to eliminate discrimination on account of age. In fact I can remember one year, when representatives of each of the parties had notices of bills on this subject on the order paper, there was rather a quick double shuffle to permit the hon. Minister—who was then, as he is now, hon. member for St. Andrew but who was not then a member of the Cabinet—to get his bill in first. The bill was called for debate, although the others were not accorded the same treatment, and we had a very interesting discussion about the problem. We all agreed it was very serious and that was the last we ever heard about it either from him or from the government.

But the problem carries on, Mr. Chairman, and it is a serious problem. It is one of the cruelest things in Ontario today to see a man who, because of some unfortunate circumstance, perhaps the closing down of a plant, loses the job to which he may have contributed many years of service and then is unable to get another job.

I had a man in to see me only today, and I am sure every hon. member has had experiences like this. His crime is that he is 55 years of age. He had worked continuously for a company that I will not name, but it is a large and prosperous company in this community, and he had worked for them for a good many years. Three and a half years ago he suffered diabetes and because of his disability he had to give up work altogether. Now he is greatly improved, Mr. Chairman, and is capable of doing work again.

This wealthy company, which I have no doubt makes a great deal of capital out of the amount it contributes to the community chest, is unable to find a job for this man now, even though he is capable of doing some work and has contributed to them substantially in the past. He has gone everywhere he can think of but he cannot find work anywhere because always he is up against the problem of age.

Once he gives his age his chances are gone completely. If they were ready even to give him a chance, to see what he could do, it would do him no good because now he is up against pension plans as well. Pension plans were designed for the benefit of employees and they do benefit employees, there is no question about that, but a side effect of them is this very cruel discrimination against men who are willing and able to work, who want to work, who want to make a contribution to society, who do not want to live on welfare, but who are prevented from getting employment.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is a matter to which the hon. Minister ought to give very serious consideration. In fact, I would suggest it is a matter on which he ought to be prepared to act now, because the government assured us in the last session, in the session before that, and, I have no doubt, in many sessions before that—although I was not here then—that it recognized the urgency of the problem and had it under consideration.

I think the time for consideration has ended. The time for action has come and that the hon. Minister ought to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) or one that carries out the same principle in words preferred by the hon. Minister. This surely is a matter, Mr. Chairman, on which this House should be prepared to act at this session.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Chairman, if you read the preamble to the bill you will find that it has to do with certain rights in respect of race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry or place of origin.

Sir, the point I am making is that these rights in respect of which we are speaking have something in common. Bring in a condition of age, which has no relationship at all to the present principles of the bill, and I say you take it outside of the bill altogether. If something is going to be done about age then it should be in respect of, or related to, another bill and it should be debated there.

I am not going to decide now whether age should be the subject of another bill or not; all I am saying is that I do not believe it should be included in this bill which has to do with certain rights or with respect to certain rights as I have read. There is no relationship here at all; therefore I think the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, this specious argument that the hon. Minister has just put forward demonstrates how slowly Tories move.

Ten years ago the same argument was put forth when it was suggested that the principle of non-discrimination on the basis of sex should be incorporated in legislation of this kind. It took ten years for the government to see the light on that particular point.

Now they are recognizing the principle that sex discrimination is related to this bill, that discrimination on any basis is related to discrimination on any other basis; so that the principle of prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sex is now incorporated into the bill. I submit that it should not take the government 10 years more to see that the problem of discrimination on the basis of age is also a serious problem and that it quite properly should be dealt with in this bill. It is not very difficult or should not be very difficult to amend the preamble if that is considered necessary.

Surely the basic principle of this bill is not one to outlaw or educate against discrimination in certain areas. It is a bill, and its title declares it to be, a bill in respect of human rights. I say that discrimination on account of age is just as damnable as discrimination on any other basis.

I think that we should assert the rights of human beings to be able to exercise their rights on all bases and to be free from discrimination regardless of the cause of it. The principle of age fits quite properly into a bill that is entitled, An Act to Establish the Ontario Code of Human Rights.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, we are going to adjourn at this time. It is 6 o'clock and we will resume on this bill when we go back into committee.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report certain bills without amendment and progress on one bill and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole begs to report certain bills without amendment and progress on one bill and asks leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House; on Thursday the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) will introduce the budget.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 6.10 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1962

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: in the east gallery, Whiteoaks Public School, Clarkson, and Township School, area No. 1, Thornhill; and in the west gallery, Queen Alexandra Senior Public School, Toronto, and Plains Road Public School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark), from the standing committee on private bills, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. Pr22, An Act respecting the county of Essex, the town of Leamington, and the Public Utilities Commission of the town of Leamington.

Bill No. Pr29, An Act respecting the township of Etobicoke.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill No. Pr25, An Act respecting the High School Board of the city of Sudbury and the Neelon-Garson and Falconbridge District High School Board.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Department of Municipal Affairs Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister would explain the bill?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): I think it is quite self-explanatory, Mr. Speaker.

THE MUNICIPAL BOARD ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Board Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Would the hon. Minister tell us the necessity for the surliness, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Cass: I cannot hear the hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: The surliness; s-u-r-l-i-n-e-s-s.

Mr. Singer: Would the hon. Minister care to explain the purpose of this bill?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this bill is not self-explanatory; this bill is to amend certain of the procedures before the Municipal Board and to define and refine some of the powers of the Board.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, there is a short announcement that I would like to make.

This announcement relates to a new agreement for a period of ten years which has just been signed with the federal government. It is an agreement relating to the renewable natural resources of a large part of northern Ontario, and the purpose of the agreement is to improve the livelihood of persons living mostly in the remote areas of the north.

The agreement, jointly signed by Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough, Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs, and myself, representing The Department of Lands and Forests, will affect the lives of some 24,000 Indians as well as other inhabitants of the north. It was spurred by the success of a ten-year fur resources programme between the federal and Ontario governments which has been recently concluded.

Unlike the former agreement, which was mainly concerned with the fur programme, the new agreement includes all renewable natural resources such as fish, wild crops and timber. It no longer includes ordinary supervision of the fur programme which is now self-sustaining.

The agreement will help people in northern Ontario who still depend on these natural resources for their livelihood.

This agreement deals with the development, management and harvesting of a number of resources, including commercial fishing, that are on a sustained yield production and quality control basis. It also deals with fishing and hunting for domestic use, sports fishing and hunting—including instruction and assistance to guides and outfitters—and public hunting on Indian reserves. It also has to do with other natural resources consisting of wild rice, blueberries and other wild crops; forestry, including pulp and paper production, forest fire protection and the training of forest fire fighters; the processing and marketing of resource products, including fur.

An advisory committee, composed of five members, two from the federal government and three from the province, has been established.

The committee will advise the federal and provincial governments on all aspects relating to the development, management and cropping of renewable natural resources, including the processing and sale of these products and the distribution of the proceeds amongst the persons for whose benefit the development programme has been instituted.

Ontario is to undertake the administration, supervision and management of all programmes or special projects initiated under the agreement. The province will pay a yearly sum of $200,000 towards the programme; the federal government is to pay up to $50,000 annually as its share of the costs of administration and supervision, plus 50 per cent of the amount spent for other costs, with its total maximum contribution not to exceed $100,000 per annum.

Costs of administration and supervision may include: salaries and expenses, including air transportation for overseers, conservation and management officers, biologists, and others engaged in the supervision and management of resource programmes.

Costs other than administration and supervision may include: field investigations; lake examination to determine safe volume of production; management research and fur marketing projects; transfers of live fur-bearing or game animals; restocking of lakes, and rehabilitation techniques to bring lakes into full production, shore installations such as ice houses, packing sheds and docks for the primary production of round or dressed fish; and purchase or rental of boats and camp equipment.

Some of the projects for which the committee has earmarked funds this year include assistance to the Northern Ontario Trappers Association fur auction sales, for a programme of instruction in fur marketing, and quality improvement by helping trappers to visit sales; completion of fish marketing studies; continuation of a study of the woodland caribou; incentive pay to encourage Indians to clean and turn in jaws, skulls and other bones for the caribou study; an attempt to develop a census technique for counting beaver by aircraft or helicopters; and test fishing in the Albany and Attawapiskat areas of James Bay.

Private operators are not to be discouraged. Both federal and provincial governments have agreed that with respect to fish processing plants, establishments for fur-marketing or plants for processing and storage of any product derived from the resources under the agreement, they will only enter the field when private companies have failed or refused to do so after being given a reasonable opportunity to undertake the work at their own cost. We, the provincial authorities, have agreed to employ suitable trained Indians on various phases of the resources programme.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very important step forward in assistance to the great number of Indians, and other citizens, who live in that part of northern Ontario.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to draw to your attention a very important announcement which appeared in the Globe and Mail this morning.

I know that every hon. member will agree with me this announced extension of service provided under the Ontario hospital care insurance plan is real evidence that the government seeks every opportunity to provide more and better service for the people of the province. Not only will better care be possible, but there will be other direct benefits accruing from this extension.

Conditions which, although they might justify admission to hospital yet can be treated on an out-patient basis, are now to be covered by the insurance plan. This will release a certain number of beds for those who more sorely need admission to hospital.

All of this is further evidence of the government's intention to provide ever better and more extensive service for those insured and is but an extension of the pegging of the premium for a stated period as announced a few weeks ago by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). I may say, too, sir, that it is the continuing intention of government to see that unceasing study is conducted to the end that every possible service may be provided under the hospital care insurance plan.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order! I suggest that the announcement in the paper and the hon. Minister's explanation now is really a violation of a tradition of this House. That announcement should not have preceded the budget. I suggest to hon. members that the budget is the proper place to make the announcement. I presume the budget will intimate that particular undertaking will be financed by the budget commitment. For the world of me, I cannot see why that announcement was made prior to the budget time.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this will be made perfectly clear when the budget is brought down. The hospital plan operates on a calendar year basis and this additional service has really no relationship to the budget at all.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), a copy of which question I have forwarded to him. Mr. Speaker, the question is a series of three, and I will read all three at one time.

(1) Will the hon. Minister advise this House whether news reports suggesting that the hon. Minister of Labour is of the opinion that the Royal York strike has reached a state of a war of attrition are correct?

(2) Does the hon. Minister of Labour now believe that the Royal York strike should or can be determined by the economic forces of management and labour only?

(3) Does the hon. Minister of Labour foresee or believe that there are consequences involved in this strike that involve the public good and require governmental intervention?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather long question in three parts. I shall take a few moments to give some background information so that we may answer these questions intelligently and also to the satisfaction, I hope, of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer).

Shortly after I was sworn in as Minister of Labour, I took it upon myself to study all of the issues involved between management and the union. Having studied these issues I felt it was time to meet representatives of both sides, which I did; separately at first. We had several of these meetings and when it appeared that they were willing to have me mediate, I entered directly into the picture with both sides at private meetings which took place on January 25, 26 and 27 in the workmen's compensation board offices.

As I say, I spent many hours on this, trying to evaluate the situation so that I might be helpful as a mediator, both sides having indicated they would like me to accept this responsibility. We met for 11 hours altogether in camera, in mediation.

On the evening of January 26, the Friday, both sides indicated to me that I, having heard all the arguments pro and con, should submit a proposal to them for their consideration, it being my, at that time, "unofficial" proposal. I prepared the proposal which I think is now known to all, but lest it is not, I have a copy here which I am prepared to file for those who wish to read it.

This proposal was discussed on January 27 for a three-hour period and indications having been given that it was accepted, certainly by the company and with some demurring by the union, it was taken to the union membership. The following Tuesday it was rejected by an overwhelming majority.

Following that, indications were that both sides once again would like me to mediate. I met once again at least on three occasions with representatives of the union, who still said they had faith in me as a mediator. Also, I met twice with representatives of management. At that time, it was indicated to me that their positions were frozen so far as my proposals were concerned. As a matter of fact, the company indicated a stiffening of its position, a more restrictive attitude. When they had indicated that, although they were considering my proposal, their best offer had been to take back only 50 per cent of those on strike and it was unknown when the other 50 per cent would be taken back, if ever.

Faced with this situation, I asked the union to indicate to me what they would do about what I call the "back to work" formula. They indicated that, as far as they were concerned, and they were quite adamant, they would insist that all those on strike would be taken back to work immediately and if the management decided that some would not be taken back, cause must be shown why that was so. That was the position of the union representatives.

On the other hand, the company took the stand, which I say became more hardened after the proposal had been rejected, that they would not take back all persons and they would not show cause why certain persons would not be taken back.

These were the two positions.

Now with that background of information, sir, I answer these questions in light of my statement, about a war of attrition. From what has happened it is obvious that there is a war of attrition, because no strike could last as long as this one has—since April 24, 1961—without it being a war of attrition.

In respect to the second question, I would say, sir, that in view of the fact both sides have now reached fixed positions, that really there is nothing much can be done at this stage to solve this problem. However, sir, I leave it this way, that when I withdrew from the mediation, and I did so because I felt that having reached this impasse, you might say, that others might want to mediate—they had indicated that they would like to—that I should withdraw and leave it free to anybody else who wished to get into the picture and try to resolve this very difficult problem. But I made it clear at that time also, sir, that if at any time one side or both wished to change its position, or their positions, then I was free to commence once again to mediate to see if I could get them closer together, or possibly resolve the whole problem. I think that answers the second question.

In respect to the third, sir, I think the reply should be that certainly any strike involves the public good and certainly one that has been going on for so long in this community, certainly would affect the public detrimentally; and for the last part of that question, so far as governmental intervention is concerned, I think I indicated that I have intervened to the point where no longer at this time are my services considered necessary. There was an impasse, as I say. But, to conclude, although union and management have indicated they would like me to continue to mediate because of this impasse, I have withdrawn, and indicated to both sides that should they need me again I am available.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): May I ask the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) a supplementary question? Is he opposed to the present efforts of Controller Orliffe to settle this strike and, if not, how can such statements as his last night do anything but jeopardize the current efforts of Controller Orliffe?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I am not opposed to Controller Orliffe or anyone else attempting to mediate this problem, sir, and I do not think my statement has anything to do with what he suggested.

Mr. MacDonald: It certainly did.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Well, that is what the hon. member says.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have here two messages from the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay) signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1963, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, March 1, 1962.

And the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain additional sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1962, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, March 1, 1962.

Orders of the day.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into the committee of ways and means.

BUDGET ADDRESS

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, some ten years ago—on March 20, 1952, to be exact—many of us who were first elected to the Legislature in 1951, were present for the first time on the occasion of a budget address. The period since then has been most eventful. In what now seems an incredibly short period of time, one year has crowded in upon another, nations have been born while others have ceased to exist, atomic power has commenced to serve mankind, astronauts have circled the globe. Ten years ago this would truly have seemed impossible. It is a significant demonstration of the times in which we live.

The hon. Treasurer who delivered that address, that budget address of ten years ago, is with us today, and we are indeed happy and pleased that he is. Farsighted as he has been in the matter of Ontario's expansion and development, in looking back he must be impressed as we are with the speed and magnitude of that expansion and development. And I would like particularly to point out that the total ordinary expenditure forecast in the budget statement of 1952 is now exceeded in 1962 by the estimates of one department—that of Education.

This is the fourth year I have had the privilege of presenting our fiscal programme to the Legislature. As in the past, each year presents its demands for new undertakings and expenditures. The fiscal and economic plan upon which we have been engaged is, of course, not the product of a day or even of a month. It is a continuing process of planning and managing our services and finances in a manner that will promote the sound economic growth of our province.

Ours has not been an easy task. We have had to deal not only with the compelling needs for those services for which we are directly responsible, but also for those of our municipalities which are confronted with the same problems of growth and expansion that beset the province. I shall refer more fully to this assistance to the municipalities and the school boards later in my remarks.

At this point, I would simply call the attention of the House to the fact that this budget provides for the transfer to our municipalities and local agencies of $425 million, which is 45 per cent of our current revenues and equal to the province's total budget for all purposes just nine years ago.

This may seem incredible, but it is true. It means that next year we will be transferring to the municipalities more than 2.5 times the amount of our estimated revenues from the new retail sales tax. The increase in this transfer to the municipalities and local agencies alone, and excluding the province's $29 million contribution to the new vocational and technical programme, totals $50 million. This is a large portion of the sales tax revenue we will collect next year.

We trust that the municipalities and the school boards will recognize that these increased transfers are made only at very considerable sacrifice to the province, as witness the introduction of the sales tax last year. Nevertheless, we believe that they have assisted our municipalities to provide a favourable climate for industrial and population growth. Through these large grants-in-aid, we have been able to stabilize local real property rates and keep them within manageable dimensions. If the provincial load of taxation has been increased thereby, that of the municipalities has been correspondingly lightened.

This budget, like its predecessors, has been formulated to exert a positive effect upon the Ontario economy. Our continuing goal has been to maintain a stable and high rate of economic expansion. Obviously a number of powerful forces which influence the level of our economic activity extend beyond our control. Nevertheless, we have continuously sought to formulate and mobilize our resources to foster economic growth and higher living standards for our people. It is, therefore, gratifying for me to report to the hon. members of this House that our gross provincial product is today running six to seven per cent higher than that of a year ago.

Employment has improved. Ontario's rate of unemployment, on a seasonally adjusted basis, is down almost 50 per cent compared with a year ago and is substantially less than that of the rest of Canada and the United States. Retail sales showed a modest increase last year and are expected to rise more in 1962. The prospects are bright for continuing growth and for increases in personal incomes, corporation profits and savings.

I am confident the hon. members will agree that this budget will not only contribute to the maintenance of this economic momentum, but will facilitate those structural changes in the economy essential to our long-term growth. In this budget we give recognition to the rapid changes that are occurring in technology, production and trade, which call for a stepped-up programme of vocational training and retraining. We are also cognizant of the need for an expansion of our schools and universities. Indeed, this year our appropriation for education totals $329.8 million, an increase of $60.9 million. Included in this appropriation is $45.4 million for universities, an increase of $8.4 million. Education alone accounts for half the increase in our budget this year. Upon the standards of our education will depend the ability of Ontario and Canada to progress in the highly technical and commercial world of which we are a part.

Equally fundamental to our long-term development is the health and physical fitness of our people. This budget provides for an expansion of medical, mental health and dental services and of the work of the Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation. The budget also makes provision for an extended housing programme aimed at achieving higher standards of housing accommodation for all our people, recognizing, as we do, that adequate housing is fundamental to the aims of our society.

The budget makes provision for an expansion of facilities in The Department of Economics and Development, and also for the creation and operation of an economic council, which consists of representatives of government, management, labour, agriculture, as well as the natural resource and export industries.

Emphasis will be placed upon measures to promote increased prosperity in the northern parts of the province. The Ontario Northland Railway will extend its line to service the new Jones-Laughlin Iron Mill at Dane at a cost of $1 million. It is also undertaking a $7.2 million extension of its telephone and other communication facilities. Research will be undertaken into spruce bark and pulpwood utilization, the jet smelting process, nuclear energy and other matters.

We will introduce a new Northern Ontario Health Service to operate in four centres. In addition, a new bursary programme will encourage medical and dental students to practise their profession in the less populated regions of the province.

The budget provides for an increase of 200 in the strength of the Ontario Provincial Police. There will be a further expansion of parole, probation and rehabilitation services.

New measures are being adopted to expand and improve the parks and recreational facilities of the province. Provision is being made for the erection by the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission of a fully equipped restaurant adequate to serve the many visitors to Upper Canada Village.

Increased appropriations are required in order to pay the provincial share of the $10 a month involved in raising the old-age assistance, blind and disabled pensions from $55 to $65 per month, effective last February 1.

Increased expenditures are required in order to carry out our highway programme. There will also be further improvements to the system of motor vehicle registration and inspection.

In order to stabilize the premiums for hospital insurance, this year the province will contribute $57.5 million from its general revenues. We are also providing a special additional payment of $2.8 million to the hospitals for capital and debt retirement purposes. Provision will be made for an expansion of out-patient services.

I cite these examples to indicate some of the growth factors in the budget of $1,126 million for 1962-1963 that I am presenting to you today. This is an increase of $128.9 million over our estimated expenditure in this current fiscal year. I would like to impress upon you the magnitude of this expenditure and the revenues which are required to finance it. There is no magical way for the province to obtain revenue other than by taxation or borrowing. While a judicious use of our credit is not inconsistent with sound finance, excessive borrowing may compound our problems. I think, therefore, that we should not ignore the warning lights that are now appearing.

So far, despite the maladjustments created by changes in international trade and a slower rate of growth than we would like to see, we have managed to maintain a strong financial position. We have been able to obtain an improvement in our tax-sharing arrangement with the federal government. We have also had the courage to impose a sales tax which this budget demonstrates conclusively was unavoidable if we were to assume the heavy responsibilities of education, health and other vital services.

The improvement in economic conditions will be reflected in increased revenues particularly corporation tax revenue, which last year declined more than we had anticipated owing to the reduction in corporation profits. In the coming year we are also anticipating larger revenues from personal income and sales taxes, and from several other sources.

We should aim as far as possible in the future to obtain the revenues required for increased services from the normal growth and expansion of the economy. Our structure of taxation is one of the lowest in Canada. For example, we have the lowest rate of any province imposing a sales tax. In no other province is the personal income tax lower than in Ontario, and in two provinces it is 20 per cent higher. One of our largest sister provinces has a higher corporation tax and sales tax. Nevertheless, we must strive as far as possible to confine the extension of our services to the revenues which are raised from the expansion of our economy.

In the light of the large grants to municipalities and educational authorities, very close examination and re-assessment of expenditures will be made.

Neither our revenue sources nor the growth in our revenues are sufficient to meet all the demands which are being imposed upon us for educational, health, municipal and other services. It is therefore necessary to establish a scale of priorities and exercise the maximum of economy.

The financial position that I will outline demonstrates the necessity of the sales tax imposed last September. Despite the revenue from this source, the extraordinary requirements, particularly for education and health, are of such magnitude that we will still experience an appreciable shortfall in revenue. Thus the wisdom of the decision, that we took a year ago, to employ a new source of taxation has been vindicated.

This budget marks the first step in a new five-year plan. We are glad that the federal government has embarked on a similar plan. We are deeply conscious of the importance of co-operation between the federal government and the provinces. Under this plan our aim will be to maintain an adequate rate of economic growth consistent with the financial capacity of the province. Through our economic council and various departments and agencies, discussions will be held with industry, management and labour on ways and means of fostering more processing, expanding exports and increasing the Canadian content of our products.

To provide the most satisfactory assurance of adaptability to economic change and long-term economic growth, we will continue to seek new methods of raising standards of education and job retraining, of improving health and physical fitness, of safeguarding our natural heritage, and of strengthening our system of highways and roads and other services.

All these aims must be related to the financial capacity of our people and our industries. We must avoid any rate of taxation which will be a deterrent to the type of expansion and development that our positive programme is designed to achieve. In other words, we must keep things in balance. We must proceed in accordance with good judgment and good sense and obtain the maximum value out of every dollar of expenditure.

In the current fiscal year we have managed to keep our spending below $1 billion. This year it is estimated at $1,126 million. We in the provincial government will make every effort to economize. We ask the municipalities and the school boards to scrutinize their spending and enforce economy at every turn. If we are to keep within our objective of financing expanded services out of the increase in our revenues arising from normal growth and development, all public spending bodies must be made conscious of the direction in which their spending trends are leading.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1961-1962

Before I summarize the financial operations of the current fiscal year ending March 31, 1962—based on nine months' actual operations and three months' forecast—I should like to present for your consideration and approval a number of supplementary estimates totalling $13,973,000. (See adjoining table.)

EDUCATION

Assistance to school boards to provide and equip new vocational units	$ 9,000,000
Provincial institute of automotive and allied trades—salaries, travelling expenses, maintenance, instructional supplies, purchase of equipment	73,000
Teachers' superannuation fund—special contribution	1,000,000	$ 10,073,000

HEALTH

Special grants to public hospitals under the authority of The Public Hospitals Act and the regulations thereunder—this will provide a grant of $75 per bed to all qualified public hospitals in Ontario	$ 2,800,000
Ontario heart foundation	100,000	2,900,000

TREASURY

Public service superannuation fund—special contribution	1 000 000
TOTAL		$ 13 973 000

Net ordinary expenditure, including $14 million in supplementary estimates, $35.8 million for sinking fund, and $28 million for capital payments out of ordinary revenue, is estimated at $813.3 million. Net capital expenditure is estimated at $211.5 million, of which $175.5 million is for provincial highways and roads—including $47.5 million for municipal subsidies; $32 million for public works, including Ontario hospitals; $2 million for logging roads and conservation works and $1.6 million for mining access roads. After deducting $28 million from net ordinary expenditure for capital construction financed out of ordinary revenue, our combined net ordinary and net capital expenditures in 1961-1962 are estimated at $996.8 million—an increase of $125.2 million over combined expenditures of $871.6 million in 1960-1961.

As forecast in my budget statement last year, the major increases in combined net ordinary and net capital expenditures in 1961-1962 are for education and health, which rose by $42.4 million and $42.8 million respectively, representing nearly 70 per cent of the growth in expenditures. Other increases in expenditure included $9.2 million for highways and roads, $6.6 million for lands and forests, $4.1 million for public welfare, and $6.2 million for public debt interest, etc.

When I brought down my budget last year, I estimated that combined net ordinary and net capital expenditures would amount to $1,015,251,000. Estimates of expenditure for 1961-1962 indicate that our outlays will be some $18.5 million below the amounts appropriated by this Legislature, after providing an additional $14 million in supplementary estimates.

Net ordinary revenue and net capital receipts for 1961-1962 are estimated at $815.1 million, of which $1.4 million represents net capital receipts. This is an increase of $73.4 million over combined net ordinary and net capital revenues for 1960-1961. All of the increase in revenues is attributable to the retail sales tax, which it is estimated will yield $76 million in the fiscal year just closing.

I might repeat that; all the increase in revenues is attributable to the retail sales tax, which it is estimated will yield $76 million in the fiscal year just closing.

Although small increases in most of our major sources of revenue are recorded in 1961-1962, these were more than offset by the fall in receipts from corporation income tax of $19.7 million and in mining taxes of $4.8 million.

Principal sources of revenue are: corporations tax—$166 million; personal income tax—$120.7 million; gasoline tax—$164 million; liquor control board—$82.6 million; retail sales tax—$76 million; motor vehicle licences—$69.4 million, and succession duty—$40 million.

Our interim surplus on ordinary account is estimated at $432,000 after providing $28 million for capital works financed out of ordinary revenue and $35.8 million for sinking fund. After providing $211.5 million for new capital construction, our shortfall of revenue in this current fiscal year 1961-1962 is estimated at $145.9 million. By careful management we have been able to reduce this shortfall by $34 million below that which I anticipated a year ago.

NET CAPITAL DEBT

The province's net capital debt as of March 31, 1962 is estimated at $1.2 billion—an increase of $148.1 million over that of a year ago. Since the end of World War II, however, we have invested over $2 billion in highways and roads, hospitals, schools, and other physical assets, and have added only $758.1 million to the net capital debt.

We have endeavoured to adhere to a policy of prudent use of our credit combined with a moderate structure of taxation. I recognize that some people will say we should have financed a larger part of our capital expansion out of current taxation, that is by raising our rates of tax. We have constantly kept in mind, however, the need for maintaining a favourable tax environment for industry to expand and provide the employment opportunities required by our growing work force.

In terms of both the capital assets we have created and our growing population, the increase in the net capital debt has been very reasonable. For instance, the province's net capital debt amounts to only 10 per cent of Ontario's total personal income now, compared with 14 per cent 16 years ago. In terms of the government of Ontario's revenue it would require only 1.25 years' revenue to repay the net capital debt today compared with 3.5 years' revenue in 1946. Thus, while we have made use of our credit to assist us in stabilizing our tax system and in financing our capital programme, our debt today is well within manageable limits.

To provide for the orderly retirement of the province's debt, it is our intention to appropriate annually from the ordinary revenues of the province, monies sufficient to retire over a 35-year term that part of our debt which was incurred prior to April, 1943. All debt incurred subsequent to that date will be retired over a 30-year term. Moreover, we intend to make provision for retirement of all future loans over a 30-year term. These measures will provide stability in our debt retirement programme and will assist in keeping the province's credit rating high.

Net ordinary expenditure for 1962-1963, including $39 million for sinking fund and $66 million for capital disbursements financed out of ordinary revenue, amounts to $961.5 million—an increase of $148.2 million over 1961-1962. After allowing for additional appropriations of $38 million for capital disbursements to be financed out of ordinary revenue and $3.2 million for additional appropriations for sinking fund, the increase in departmental expenditures, including debt interest, etc., is forecast at $107 million.

Of this increase, $60.9 million or 57 per cent will go to education. An increased appropriation of $12.5 million will be required for health, $5.8 million for public welfare, $3.5 million for municipal affairs and $6.8 million for the maintenance of our highways and roads.

The province's capital programme will also be increased next year by $18.8 million to a record level of $230.3 million. Just seven years ago in 1954-1955 the requirements of our capital programme amounted to only $80.5 million or about one-third of next year's requirements. This is an indication of the government's programme to develop sound physical assets and, at the same time, support high levels of employment and income.

In total, combined net ordinary and net capital expenditures in 1962-1963 are forecast at $1,125.8 million, an increase of $128.9 million over 1961-1962. The major spending departments—ordinary and capital expenditures combined—with figures for 1961-1962 appended in brackets, are as follows: education $329.8 million ($268.9 million); highways $264.3 million ($247.2 million); health $144.2 million ($131.7 million); public works $49.9 million ($43.4 million); municipal affairs $43.5 million ($40 million); public welfare $60.9 million ($55.1 million); and lands and forests $31.9 million ($29.9 million).

Net ordinary revenue and net capital receipts are forecast at $963.2 million, of which $1.3 million is for net capital receipts. The forecast anticipates that our combined revenues will increase by $148.1 million. A major share of this increase—$84 million—reflects a full year's revenue from the retail sales tax.

As hon. members are aware, this sales tax was only in operation for seven months in the 1961-1962 fiscal year. The new arrangements with the federal government for the sharing of the personal income tax field combined with improved yields are expected to increase revenues from this source by $32.5 million and an additional $19 million is anticipated from higher levels of corporate profits.

Major sources of revenue in 1962-1963 are forecast as follows: corporations tax, $185 million; income tax collection agreement, $153.2 million; retail sales tax, $160 million; succession duty, $40 million; gasoline tax, $170 million; motor vehicle licences, etc., $70.9 million; Liquor Control Board, $84.6 million; timber dues, bonus, etc., $13 million, and mining profits' tax, $12.1 million.

A surplus on ordinary account of $374,000 is forecast for 1962-1963 after providing $39 million for sinking fund and $66 million for financing capital construction out of ordinary revenue. However, since our expanded capital programme for 1962-1963 calls for outlays of $230.3 million, the shortfall of revenue on overall account is forecast at $123.6 million.

SOCIAL SERVICES AND HUMAN BETTERMENT

Increased productive capacity in Ontario has made possible one of the highest standards of education, health and welfare in the world. No one will deny the vital importance of good education, good health and adequate welfare standards to relieve suffering and distress. We must, however, constantly recognize that all these services have to be financed out of the product of our industry and our labour. The mounting cost of these services is one that calls for the most careful attention, study and consideration. A decade ago the combined expenditures of the Ontario Departments of Education, Health and Welfare amounted to $137 million. During this current fiscal year they totalled $456 million and next year they will increase to $535 million. A decade ago they formed 37 per cent of our total budget; today that proportion has grown to 47 per cent.

The rapidly rising cost of these three services, which shows no sign of levelling off, must be a matter of the most serious concern to all hon. members of this House.

Many complex questions arise to which we have been giving careful attention. A number of the factors contributing to these rising costs are beyond the province's control. Many restraints or economies must be exercised at the local level. It is true that the enrolment in our school system has been increasing spectacularly, double the rate of growth of our overall population, but school costs have been rising even more rapidly.

The same situation exists in the fields of health and welfare. The use of hospitals is increasing, but the trend in cost is rising even more rapidly. In welfare, improved benefits and a broader programme are also making their effects felt on costs. The whole matter is one which might well commend itself to the careful study of all the hon. members of this House.

That the government of Ontario has been giving, and is continuing to give, leadership in this area is graphically illustrated by the improvements that have been made in the educational programme and in the financial assistance provided to the school boards and universities.

There is, I think, justification for this. Never before has the role of education in preparing our young people for the future been more vital to our economic and social progress, indeed, even to our national survival, than it is today. Some people have expressed apprehension about our ability to adapt and adjust ourselves to the new world environment which is emerging. However, I would remind them that, while difficult tasks lie ahead, at no time have the opportunities for expanding trade and promoting betterment been so widely manifest.

As a result of the scientific and technological advances of recent years, it has become increasingly apparent that the existing courses of our high schools and collegiate institutes throughout the province should be modified to meet the new requirements of many present-day pupils of secondary school age, especially those who do not intend to proceed to higher education of the traditional type. More commercial and technical instruction at this level is required. Accordingly, the provincial government is refunding to local secondary school boards 100 per cent of approved capital expenditures made up to April 1, 1963, for vocational school accommodation. The province will be reimbursed for 75 per cent of the payments by the federal government under terms of the new Federal-Provincial Technical and Vocational Training Agreement effective April 1, 1961.

It is gratifying to report that an unprecedented number of school boards is providing vocational accommodation for the teaching of commercial and technical courses. By the end of 1961, no less than 202 building projects had been initiated. In most cases existing secondary schools are becoming composite schools, although a number of entirely new vocational schools are being established. It is estimated that expenditure made in this province under the agreement, including the cost of schools under local boards and The Department of Education, will total $200 million.

This programme permits considerable reorganization of the secondary school curricula. The students are offered three courses: arts and science, for those who wish to pursue an academic career; business and commerce, for students whose interests lie in the direction of business administration or management; and science, technology and trades, for those who wish to enter applied science courses or technological institutes.

By taking a five-year course in any of these three divisions, pupils of ability may proceed to university, teachers' colleges or technological institutes. For students who wish to attend secondary school for only four years, special courses are being designed in each of these three divisions. In addition, occupational courses of one or two years' duration will be offered for non-academic students preparing for early entry into our labour force.

To supplement these measures an extensive building programme is underway to modernize and enlarge technical training facilities at the post-secondary school level. Work on the west wing of the Ryerson Institute of Technology in Toronto is well advanced and a new building for the Eastern Institute of Technology in Ottawa will shortly be erected. A new institute will also be provided at Kirkland Lake to serve north-eastern Ontario. Progress is also being made in establishing four new provincial trade schools to be located in London, Ottawa, Sault Ste. Marie and Toronto. None of this new construction involves any capital cost to the municipalities.

Excellent progress is being made in recruiting and training the teachers required to staff our constantly expanding school system. Teacher supply for the elementary schools nearly met the demand in 1961, although some shortage of staff for the separate schools still persists. In September, 1961, a total of 6,058 students enrolled in the ten teachers' colleges throughout the province. In the same month, the Lakehead Teachers' College commenced operating from its new building in Port Arthur, with enrolment totalling 231. Construction is also under way on a new teachers' college in the Windsor area to serve the counties of Essex and Kent. Teacher supply for the secondary schools has increased significantly.

Our construction programme to provide new school buildings and enlarge existing school accommodation in all parts of the province has continued vigorously. During last year, 66,150 pupil places were provided in the elementary school system at a cost of $53 million and 19,520 pupil places were provided for secondary schools at a cost of $32 million.

While these figures reveal a deceleration in the building programme, I would point out that the volume of secondary school construction will undoubtedly advance sharply in 1962 and 1963 due to the provision of technical-vocational accommodation made possible by federal-provincial grant support.

Just as increasing enrolments have brought problems of accommodation to local school boards, higher enrolments in the Ontario schools for the blind and deaf have made additional building necessary. A new wing was added a year ago to the Ontario School for the Blind at Brantford. A second school for the deaf is under construction at Milton, which, when completed, will add significantly to the educational facilities available to deaf children in the province.

The enrolment in our elementary and secondary schools in this 1961-1962 school year totals 1,462,000, which is an increase of 73,000 over the previous year and 674,000 over the enrolment just ten years ago. Elementary and secondary school enrolment has nearly doubled in that short period of time.

The combined effect of the increase in enrolment, higher teachers' salaries and improved educational opportunities and standards is readily apparent in the rise in our school grants, which in 1962-1963 will total $208 million, an increase of $26.9 million over those provided in the current fiscal year.

Included in this amount are the special grants that are being made under the terms of The Residential and Farm School Tax Assistance Grant Act passed at the last session to give local tax relief to residential and farm property. In 1961-1962 this grant was $5 per pupil of elementary and secondary school enrolment for a total expenditure of over $6 million. For the coming fiscal year the basis of the grant will be $15 per pupil of elementary school enrolment and $5 per pupil of secondary school enrolment. This means that total payments under the Act will rise to an estimated $16 million.

In evaluating our assistance to education, the province's contribution to the teachers' superannuation fund is often overlooked. This payment is continuing to rise steadily, and next year will reach a total of $18.3 million.

Recognizing the urgent need for university expansion, the province is again raising both its capital and maintenance grants. In the fiscal year now ending, capital grants of $17.7 million and maintenance grants of $19.3 million were made available to 13 universities and colleges.

In 1962-1963 our grants for capital and special purposes will be increased to $22.4 million, while maintenance grants will be increased to $23 million. The net effect is that the grants to universities will be raised in 1962-1963 to $45.4 million, an increase of $8.4 million over those being paid in the current fiscal year. In the last two years alone the province's grants to universities have been increased by $15.5 million, or by 52 per cent. This is eloquent testimony of the support we are giving to the universities and colleges in meeting the demands that lie ahead.

The table on page 690 shows our grants to the individual universities and colleges for the coming fiscal year.

A detailed list of grants to the various universities follows and hon. members will see this as a statement that will be given to the hon. members of the House very soon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the government's comprehensive programme of student aid is clearly achieving its objective of ensuring that no student who has the ability to benefit from higher education is denied the opportunity because of his financial circumstances. In the fiscal year now ending, more than 5,200 students received bursaries and scholarships totalling nearly $1,450,000.

Greater use of the facilities available under the province's student aid loan fund established in 1958 is now being made by our students. In the current fiscal year more than 4,000 applications totalling more than $1,750,000 have already been approved. Scholarships will also be awarded under the Queen Elizabeth II Scholarship Fund.

Among the functions to be carried out in association with our educational system is a programme of physical fitness aimed at improving the general vigour and health of our school children and our young men and women. We have appropriated $100,000 in 1962-1963 for this programme. This will supplement the national physical fitness scheme which is now underway.

Mr. Speaker, I make no apology for dealing so extensively with our educational programme and its cost. It is a matter of transcending importance. The net appropriation of The Department of Education which you are being asked to approve for 1962-1963 totals $329.8 million. This is an average provincial outlay, excluding the contributions made by the municipalities, of more than $200 per student in our elementary and secondary schools and universities. It absorbs virtually all the revenue that we will obtain from the sales tax, personal income tax and from succession duties. The increase for education in next year's budget of $60.9 million is the largest in the history of our province.

Another of our major challenges is that of constantly safeguarding and improving the health of our citizens.

Remarkable progress has been made in the last few years in the reinforcement and further expansion of our public health services. Recognizing that the unorganized areas of the province are less able to supply adequate health services, it is our intention this year to introduce a new northern Ontario health service operating in four centres.

Furthermore, in order to bring about a more equitable distribution of family physicians and dentists throughout the province and encourage the services of these essential professional personnel in the less populated regions of the province, a new bursary programme will be introduced. A number of medical and dental students will be provided with bursaries on the understanding that they will repay them in part by serving in areas of the province where the need is greatest.

Particular attention will be focused on the care, treatment and rehabilitation of the mentally disturbed. Much progress has recently been made in renovating and modernizing existing Ontario hospitals, but the establishment of new small hospitals and the provision of local out-patient and day-care centres and ancillary supporting services will place even greater emphasis upon the diagnosis, active treatment and rehabilitation of curable cases. The needs of mentally handicapped and emotionally disturbed children are also receiving attention.

In consequence of this enlarged programme the estimated expenditure for mental health purposes in 1962-1963 will total $58.4 million, which is an increase of $5.6 million over that in the current fiscal year.

Our hospital care insurance plan, which has been in operation for three years, continues to be an unqualified success. The popularity of the plan is reflected in the numbers enrolled—slightly over 96 per cent of the population. To stabilize the present premiums of $2.10 monthly for a single person and $4.20 monthly for the family unit for the next two years, we are including in this budget an appropriation of $57.5 million from general revenue to meet this situation, or $7.5 million more than was provided in 1961-1962.

The provisions and coverage of Ontario's Hospital Care Insurance Plan are continuously reviewed and this year a limited extension of out-patient services will be included under the benefits of the plan. The new provisions will include coverage for certain out-patient services, such as initial and follow-up visits to conclude emergency treatment started within 24 hours after an accident. The Ontario Hospital Services Commission will also allow, as a plan benefit, out-patient services where equipment and facilities are available at a hospital and where, on the advice of the medical staff, the services can properly and safely be performed on an out-patient basis. These services will be made available to patients who would otherwise require admission as in-patients. The cost to the commission for these extensions of benefits is estimated at $1,541,000 in 1961-1962. This new measure should free a number of hospital beds for the treatment of in-patients and result in savings in capital construction and maintenance costs.

Apart from these extended benefits, a new project aimed at streamlining hospital usage throughout Ontario is under way. In conjunction with the province and the city of Toronto, a hospital-based home care programme is being carried out on a pilot basis by the New Mount Sinai Hospital and the Toronto Western Hospital. This programme is directed towards enabling patients to leave hospital earlier than customary, and receive medical attention in their homes. It is anticipated that some 300 beds will be released for active treatment patients as a result of this experiment.

As in recent budgets, I am including in the supplementary estimates the amount of $2.8 million to provide a payment of $75 per bed to all qualified public general hospitals in the province for retiring debt or for some other capital purpose.

To implement this enlarged programme we have increased the appropriation of The Department of Health for 1962-1963 by $13.4 million to $144.2 million.

Welfare expenditures have been substantially increased over the years. In this current fiscal year, the province will spend $55.1 million from provincial tax sources—or more than four times as much as a decade and a half ago. This large increase in welfare expenditure arises from four main areas: the introduction of new social welfare measures; the extension of the scope and scale of existing welfare services; the province's assumption of an ever-increasing share of the welfare burden formerly borne by the municipalities; and the large increase in population.

You will be asked to approve a larger appropriation to carry out the province's welfare programme for 1962-1963. Greater emphasis will be placed upon rehabilitation, not only with respect to handicapped persons, but also through measures aimed at restoring individuals and families to an independent status. The increase, effective last February 1, in the allowances to the aged, the disabled and blind persons to a new maximum of $65 monthly will serve this end. An increased appropriation will be required in the home-makers' and nurses' services to keep families together during emergencies that arise from accidents, illness or other distressing conditions. Additional funds are also required to provide supplementary aid to meet extraordinary expenses incurred for shelter, drugs and other special needs. The programme of assisting handicapped persons to receive vocational training courses will be expanded. Each year the number of children placed in adoption homes is increasing. Every effort is being made to find suitable adoption homes for the wards of children's aid societies.

While the primary objective of our many-sided welfare programme is to provide assistance to those in need, it is evident too that such measures in themselves act as built-in stabilizers to our economy, producing benefits that have an effect on the whole economy.

It is estimated that our expenditures for welfare in the next fiscal year will reach the highest level in our history. The cost of these services to the province in 1962-1963 is estimated at $60.9 million, an increase of $5.8 million over the amount expended in 1961-1962.

HIGHWAYS AND ROADS

To ensure and promote the continued growth and expansion of Ontario's economy we have continually extended and improved our highway and road system, connecting and integrating our diverse and far-spread regions. This is clearly reflected in the province's total expenditures on highways and roads, which have risen from $22.9 million in 1945-46 to $103 million in 1951-52 and to $247.2 million in 1961-1962—from $23 million in 1945 to $247 million in 1961.

Tangible evidence of the use of our highways and roads is indicated by the increase in registered motor vehicles in the province, which numbered 665,000 in 1945 and now total 2,123,286.

During 1961-1962 no less than 473 miles of paved highways were completed and 78 structures erected. Notable items in the current year's programme include: the completion of five sections of Highway 401, bringing to 377 miles the stretch of this trans-provincial freeway now in use; the widening to six lanes of the Queen Elizabeth Way between Highway 27 and Highway 10; the commencement of construction on the new controlled-access Highway 403, which will link the Queen Elizabeth Way near Burlington to Highway 401 near Woodstock; the extension of Highway 10 to four lanes between Highway 5 at Cooksville and Highway 2 at Port Credit; the opening of the second stage of the $35 million Ottawa Queensway; completion of the 585-foot bridge over the Pic River between White River and Marathon, and the 989-foot bridge which carries the new Peterborough by-pass on Trans-Canada Highway 7.

Important as this expansion is, we have not overlooked the necessity of ensuring that the existing highway system throughout the province is reconstructed and repaved in conformity with modern engineering standards. Among our many activities in this area during 1961-1962 were: the reconstruction of more than 225 miles of the Trans-Canada Highway, the completion of the long-term 267-mile paving programme between Longlac and Cochrane, including the paving of 53 miles between Hearst and Kapuskasing, and a start on the reconstruction of 22 miles of Highway 11 to further improve the 625 miles between North Bay and Nipigon—the northern route of the Trans-Canada Highway.

Ontario's total expenditure on highways and roads in the current fiscal year amounted to $247.2 million, of which $71.7 million was for maintenance and $175.5 million was for capital purposes. Provincial road subsidies to the municipalities and unincorporated townships in northern Ontario, which are included in the foregoing, totalled $73.1 million, of which $48.2 million was for new construction. Taking into account the amounts that the municipalities themselves will spend, the outlay for highways and roads in the province in 1961-1962 will total $318.7 million—almost three times the amount spent a decade ago.

Our programme for the 1962-1963 fiscal year provides for further expansion of the province's long-term plan of highway improvement and modernization, and also for continuation of the work on such major projects as Highways 11, 401 and 403, the Trans-Canada Highway and the Ottawa Queensway. Work will also be commenced on the new controlled-access route to the Toronto International Airport.

To finance the 1962-1963 highway and road programme we are providing appropriations totalling $264.3 million. This is an increase of $17.1 million over expenditures in the current fiscal year. Of the total 1962-1963 appropriation, $78.4 million is being provided for maintenance and $185.9 million for capital purposes. This includes $80.9 million for municipal subsidies, of which $29.1 million is for maintenance and $51.8 million is for capital construction. This will provide for a combined provincial and municipal programme of $343.3 million—an increase of $24.6 million over the combined total in 1961-1962.

AGRICULTURE

With the emergence of increasing competition in world trade and the development of new food products and modern means of transportation, it has become evident that all branches of our agricultural industry have to aim at the highest levels of efficiency and quality of production. In the light of measures adopted to ensure that Ontario agriculture remains in the forefront of development, it is gratifying to note that in 1961 the yields of all major field crops exceeded the average of the last 10 years and that farm cash income reached the highest point in its history.

In the coming fiscal year, steps will be taken to strengthen research and marketing facilities. The establishment of the Agricultural Research Institute, which will co-ordinate all research undertaken by the department, constitutes a history-making development capable of offering benefits to all phases of Ontario's agricultural economy.

Several new buildings have been added in recent years at the Ontario Agricultural College and the Ontario Veterinary College at Guelph. New projects planned include a $3 million science building and a $1 million poultry pathology and virology building. Proposed legislation will bring the two colleges and Macdonald Institute under one administration, which will permit greater co-ordination of activities.

The Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission further extended its network of primary distribution lines by an additional 430 miles last year, bringing the total to more than 48,300 miles. About 487,000 rural customers, including 139,000 farmers, are now served by the commission. This number does not include customers living in areas which have been amalgamated with or annexed to urban municipalities. During 1961 the commission actually added some 25,000 to the number of rural customers being served, including 1,550 new farm customers.

To facilitate the expansion of agricultural activities, expenditures of The Department of Agriculture, which in 1961-1962 are estimated at $16.4 million, will be increased by $0.6 million to $17 million in 1962-1963.

NORTHERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT

Hon. members, and particularly those from the northern parts of the province, will find much in this budget that is encouraging. Our programme for northern Ontario is being accelerated. Several departments, including The Departments of Lands and Forests, Mines, Economics and Development, Travel and Publicity, and Agriculture, as well as the economic council, the Ontario Research Foundation, and the Ontario Northland Railway, are stepping up their programmes to stimulate northern development.

The objective will be not only to bolster the northern economy in the short run, but to undertake a number of studies and research projects which will enhance its prospects for the future. Our objective is to develop new products, process more of our natural resources in Ontario and expand sales in markets at home and abroad.

Among the most promising facets of these developments has been the exploration for and development of new mines. This has been facilitated by the federal-provincial airborne geophysical survey which covered 60,000 square miles in 1960 and another 34,000 square miles last year. During the coming year an additional 35,000 square miles will be surveyed. Field parties are also being organized to follow up these surveys and give assistance in the development of new resources.

Plans to bring several iron ore properties into operation are in various stages of development. This spring, construction will commence on a $30 million mine and mill plant for processing and pelletizing iron ore at the Dane iron ore deposits, 20 miles north of Englehart. It is expected that this operation will ultimately employ 400 men. Development activities are also continuing north of Nakina, south of Kowkash, near Lake St. Joseph, south of Red Lake, Timagami and elsewhere.

The conservation and regeneration of our forests is also receiving fresh attention. In the interests of continuing development and greater perfection in the management of our forests, the province's forest resources inventory is being updated. In 1961, a total of 11,300 square miles were rephotographed from the air; this year a much larger area is to be covered.

At present more than 156,000 acres of forest land are under the management of the department on behalf of municipalities and conservation authorities. Next year some 10,000 acres will be added to the total. The province's tree nurseries produced 45 million trees in 1961; this number is expected to be increased to 52 million in 1962 and 57 million in 1963.

Under the federal-provincial "Roads to Resources" programme, initiated in 1958, some 225 miles of access road will have been virtually completed by the end of this year. Construction of an additional 150 miles of road has been approved under the agreement, estimated to cost $15 million. A further 100 miles of access roads are being built or upgraded.

A number of other agencies are collaborating in the study and formulation of methods that will accelerate growth in the north. For instance, the Ontario Northland Railway will build, at a cost of about $1 million, a new spur line of 4.7 miles to the Dane iron ore deposits. Construction is expected to commence about May 15 and the line is scheduled to be completed by the fall. When haulage operations begin in 1963, the Ontario Northland Railway is expected to carry about 50 car loads of pelletized ore a day for five days a week.

The railway has also embarked on a major communications programme costing $7.2 million, which will provide for the installation of microwave facilities and the modernization of the vast communications system which it operates. Work has already started on improving the facilities at North Bay. Capital works will be undertaken in various parts of Northern Ontario, including Kirkland Lake, Moosonee, Cochrane, New Liskeard, Ramore, Fraserdale and Otter Rapids. This programme which will be largely completed by 1963, will provide up to 500 new jobs in direct on-site employment.

The Ontario Research Foundation will continue its northern studies this year with increased government grants. It will start a new project on cellulose utilization, with the hope of finding new uses for cellulose available from northern Ontario black spruce and will initiate a study on the pulping characteristics of various trees. Hon. members will be requested to approve larger appropriations for these purposes.

HOUSING

Hon. members are now familiar with the new housing plan which was announced last week; therefore, I shall not attempt to do more than outline its fiscal implications and point out that it represents a new and bold effort by the government to meet public housing needs in the light of the greatly changed conditions that now exist.

During the current fiscal year, the province's capital expenditure on various projects will total $2 million. This will be substantially increased, however, as an appropriation of $5.6 million is being provided for the coming fiscal year. These expenditures reflect the increased participation of the municipalities in rental-type projects, stimulated by the policy change carried out in the fall of 1960 whereby capital and operating costs were assumed by the three levels of government in the ratio of 75 per cent federal, 17.5 per cent provincial and 7.5 municipal, and rents were geared to an income formula. Many requests have now been received from the municipalities for this type of subsidized rental project and several new housing developments are underway. Many more are in various stages of negotiation.

The appropriation you will be asked to approve involves a many-sided approach to the problem of public housing. In general, the shortage of housing accommodation has been overcome, but there are still pockets of real need among families requiring rental housing and particularly among those who cannot pay an economic rent.

An outline of the housing programme in that connection follows. Under the federal-provincial partnership, the Ontario government will:

1. Seek to simplify procedures and limit the delays on present rental housing and land assembly projects.
2. Acquire, rehabilitate and manage existing housing units for public housing purposes.
3. Undertake the establishment of the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority as a public company acting as an agency to simplify and speed up the development of public housing in the Toronto area.

The province itself will introduce a number of special projects, among which are the following:

(a) An experimental and pilot rent certificate scheme under which existing housing will be leased for a period of years which made available to families at rents which are related to their incomes. The province will pay the difference between the actual rents required by the leases and the amounts the tenants will pay. The object of this plan is to improve the housing accommodation of families now occupying sub-standard housing and unable to pay higher rents. The units will be available only to families eligible for normal federal-provincial housing. Should the experiment prove successful, it is hoped that federal authorities may then enter into the scheme jointly with the province and the municipalities in extending the area in which it may be applied.

(b) Grants to assist non-profit limited dividend companies and other groups constructing non-profit limited dividend housing for elderly persons, the physically handicapped and families of low income.

(c) Assistance to acquire and rehabilitate older properties in redevelopment and borderline areas.

(d) Advice and technical assistance in the form of interim financing to groups interested in constructing housing for their own occupancy by co-operative effort.

(e) Studies to explore ways and means of providing preventive maintenance of housing, particularly in areas which might otherwise become depressed and ultimately involve expensive redevelopment projects.

(f) Studies on housing to ensure that needs will be met in the most efficient and economical way.

To implement this programme the province is providing the following appropriations:

$1 million on ordinary accounts and $5.6 million on capital account, the details of which are also given.

AID TO MUNICIPALITIES

I have already drawn to the attention of the House the staggering amounts that we are paying to the municipalities, school boards and other local agencies. I wish, at this point, to expand somewhat more on my earlier remarks, to indicate the varied local services which we are assisting. In the 1961-1962 fiscal year the municipalities, school boards and other local agencies will receive assistance from the province in the amount of $375 million or, in fact, $384 million if we include the $9 million representing the province's share of the cost of constructing technical and vocational schools. In 1962-1963 this outlay will rise to $425 million plus an additional $29 million for the vocational and technical schools, or a total of $454 million. This is a huge amount.

In the four budgets I have introduced in the House we have transferred to the municipalities and their agencies revenues of nearly $1.5 billion. Some 20 years ago only 18 per cent of our total revenues was paid over to the local municipalities; now it is over 45 per cent. Obviously, there are limits as to how far we can go.

To provide the maximum relief to the owners of residential and farm properties who, in general, are unable to treat their local taxes as an expense, and accordingly as a deduction from income for income tax purposes, the province restricts to residential and farm properties the benefit of its unconditional grant to municipalities. In the coming fiscal year the grants payable under The Unconditional Grants Act will total $26.4 million.

In addition, under The Residential and Farm School Tax Assistance Grant Act passed at the last session, municipalities can similarly restrict to residential and farm property the benefit of the special per pupil grant to elementary and secondary schools. The grant per pupil in elementary schools for 1962-1963 is being increased from $5 to $15, and the school board, in receipt of the school tax assistance grant, or the municipal council on its behalf, is required to reduce the school tax rate on home owners and farmers by 10 per cent below that applicable to industrial and commercial properties.

In other words, after applying this special per pupil grant, the residential and farm mill rate for school purposes will be 90 per cent of the industrial and commercial school mill rate. A special per pupil grant of $5 will also be paid to secondary schools, and at this time no change will be made in the optional formula that was used last year in applying this grant. The amount payable in 1962-1963 under this Act, which is of special benefit to residential and farm property owners and occupiers, is $16 million.

School and library grants are being increased from $185 million in the 1961-1962 fiscal year to $214 million in the coming fiscal year, or by $29 million. The province's contribution to the Teachers' Superannuation Fund is being raised from $17.5 million to $18.3 million—an increase of almost $1 million. The capital outlay for vocational schools will be augmented by $9 million to $29 million. Thus, the combined increase totals $50 million, from $211 million in this fiscal year to $261 million next year.

To finance the municipal winter works programme we are including $10 million in the estimates. The province's road subsidies are also being increased by $8 million to $81 million in 1962-1963. Substantial payments will also be made in connection with hospitals.

To enable the Ontario Water Resources Commission to carry on its expanded programme, $25 million will be provided for capital and $2.5 million for operating purposes. The Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation will also continue to provide capital to enable municipalities to carry out various capital projects.

Through these vast provincial expenditures we have been able to keep local taxation manageable and at the same time assist in the provision of new and greatly expanded services throughout Ontario.

REVENUE CONSIDERATIONS

The outline of the comprehensive programme I have presented is a demonstration of why the province needed additional revenue. I think hon. members will agree that our course has been right. We simply could not meet our obligations to education, health, welfare, highways and all the other services which are essential to a modern expanding economy without the revenue that we are obtaining from the 3 per cent sales tax that we imposed last September.

It is easy for those who have no responsibility to dream up painless ways of raising revenue. On analysis, these ways are neither painless nor practicable. The fact is that we had no alternative to obtain additional revenue, and after a careful examination—the most careful examination—we concluded that there was only one real source, namely, a sales tax. To have resorted to other taxation would either have been ineffective or have dampened efficiency and enterprise, and made our province less attractive as an area for expansion.

Most of the provinces in Canada have had a sales tax for a considerable number of years. The provinces of Quebec and Saskatchewan imposed a sales tax more than 20 years ago. For many years, Ontario was able to finance its expansion without significantly extending its sources of taxation. We took the view that its revenue should come from the growth of the economy and a greater participation in the fields of personal and corporation income tax.

The new federal-provincial fiscal arrangements that come into effect April 1 this year and apply to the taxation year commencing last January 1, represent an improvement over those that are now expiring. Under the new arrangements the province will receive an increase in its share of the personal income tax from the present standard rate of approximately 14 per cent of federal rates of tax to 16 per cent in 1962, and by an additional one percentage point in each of the four succeeding years up to 20 per cent in the year 1966.

This will provide the province with an additional revenue increment in the first year of about $19 million, which in each of the four subsequent years will be augmented, on the basis of current yields, by approximately $9.5 million a year. We were gratified by the federal proposal to increase our share of the personal income tax, but the new arrangements, helpful as they are, did not obviate the necessity of the province finding an additional source of revenue.

I am confident that no one will disagree that the province required increased revenues. It may be contended that we should cut our expenditures. But where would hon. members cut? Would they reduce the appropriation for schools, universities, hospitals, roads and highways, health, welfare and other services so vital to our way of life? Would they slash our assistance to the municipalities? These services are essential to our continued economic growth and well-being. No responsible government could have adopted any other course but to find the additional revenue required to enable it to play its traditional role in the development of this province.

In turning to the retail sales tax field, as many other provinces were obliged to do before us, we were seeking a source of revenue that would not place obstacles in the way of economic growth. The underlying consideration was to keep our tax structure at the lowest minimum consistent with sound financing in order to ensure the maintenance of an economic climate which would promote expansion and the creation of jobs. We were anxious to provide the maximum stimulation to industry and were determined not to place a greater burden on any class of taxpayers than was absolutely necessary to preserve a strong financial position. It was fully expected, as had been demonstrated, that the province would still be required to use its credit in financing its capital programme.

The sales tax is a tax on income when it is spent. It does not deter willingness to work and save, which in a young country such as Canada is of great importance. The fact that exemptions under the Ontario plan are very broad, relieves the tax of regressive features. Certainly the tax is widely employed, being used by eight of the provinces and most of the states of the American union. As I have mentioned, our rate of tax is the lowest in Canada and exemptions are more generous than those in any other jurisdiction.

By exempting food, fuel, rent, children's clothing, books, school supplies and medical expenses, we have avoided taxing most of the items that represent the greatest expense to families with small budgets. It bears lightly on low income groups and more heavily on high income groups in accordance with the principle of ability to pay. Furthermore, by granting exemptions on farm machinery and repair parts, seeds, grains, fertilizer and other materials, we have taken into consideration the position of the farmer and have prevented any upward pressure on the price of food stuffs. To hold prices and costs down, we have exempted from tax machinery, apparatus and materials used or consumed in the process of manufacture or production of tangible personal property for sale.

We recognize that the collection of a sales tax directly, as the provinces are required to do under the constitution, instead of as the federal government does indirectly, has certain administrative disadvantages.

At the federal-provincial conference in July 1960, we proposed that an amendment be made to the constitution to empower the provinces to impose a retail sales tax indirectly. It was not our intention that any province should levy a hidden tax, or that the tax should be imposed at the manufacturers' or wholesalers' level. We suggested that the province should have authority to impose a sales tax on the retailer in a manner that would enable him to total up the value of the taxable items he sold and to calculate and pay his tax thereon. This would provide some simplification of the tax from the standpoint of the retailer. The proposal was not adopted, however, although the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) indicated that he would acquiesce if the provinces were unanimous in seeking such an amendment.

Despite this limitation imposed by our constitution, we are continually striving to ensure that the sales tax is administered and collected as efficiently and economically as possible. Prior to the imposition of the tax, we studied the methods of administration employed by the other provinces and numerous States of the American union. The information gained has been extremely helpful. As we profit from our own experience we shall constantly be on guard to ensure that we have the fairest and most economical system that can be devised. Already experience has led us to propose a number of improvements to which I shall refer in a moment.

Among the various alternative suggestions advanced is a plan to exempt from tax all consumer purchases of $25 or less. Obviously, such a sizeable exemption would have a drastic effect on the revenue expected from the tax. The effect of such a change, while extremely difficult to estimate, would reduce revenue substantially.

Many millions of dollars of tax revenue would be lost in tax avoidance. It would produce a major distortion of normal production, trade and marketing patterns. Consumer demand would shift from taxable items to non-taxable items. Piecemeal buying would become the fashion. The result would be not only consumer and marketing waste and inconvenience, but also loss of revenue. To avoid the tax, consumers would endeavour to make their purchases by components.

For example, instead of buying a set of golf clubs, they would buy one or two clubs at a time. There would be a tendency to buy kitchen or dining room furniture by units rather than by sets. The same practice would develop in the appliance field. Producers and distributors would seek products selling under the $25 limit. In some cases this could only be achieved at the expense of quality. All these effects would be multiplied many times if, in order to compensate for the loss in revenue occasioned by the higher exemption, the rate of sales tax was increased on items that could not be sold under the $25 limit.

If we make an allowance for the avoidance of the tax which would result from a $25 exemption, the rate on taxable items would not be three per cent but closer to eight per cent. Such a tax, which would apply to many of our manufactured products, would cause a serious dislocation to existing production and distribution patterns. Manufacturers of consumer durables would be the hardest hit.

Furthermore, the adoption of a sales tax with an exemption even approaching $25 would add greatly to administrative and collection problems. It is well known that these problems are the least when exemptions are the fewest. While we have adopted a plan which provides the most generous exemptions in North America, the administrative problems now encountered would be as nothing compared with what they would be with a $25 exemption.

The suggestion looks appealing, but there are immense difficulties and drawbacks. Its adoption would produce not only marked tax avoidance and a multiplication of administrative and collection problems, but a serious distortion to established economic production and trade patterns. It is no accident that no other jurisdiction in the world has imposed a general sales tax exemption even approaching $25. We have, therefore, but to conclude that this is a completely unworkable suggestion.

Mr. Speaker, in my last budget statement I dealt fully with the feasibility of obtaining an equivalent revenue from corporation and personal income taxes and from fringe sources. I shall not repeat the explanation I gave at that time and the conclusion reached, that these taxes simply would not produce the required revenue without serious disturbances to our economy. Neither the circumstances nor the facts expressed at that time have changed.

As expected, our experience with the sales tax has suggested a number of amendments to broaden exemptions and simplify administration.

The following is a list of changes in exemptions under The Sales Tax Act, effective April 1, 1962:

1. Food products that are exempt from taxation under the Act will be expanded to include insulin, vitamins and certain dietary supplements that are now classed as drugs and medicines.

2. The definition of classroom supplies will be widened to include all instructional equipment and equipment used for research purposes by universities. All such supplies and equipment will be exempt from tax when bought by schools, school boards, colleges and universities.

3. A new definition of students' supplies will be included for exemption, and any child or other person will be able to buy these materials tax free in any store that sells these supplies.

4. Public hospitals will be able to buy free of tax certain equipment as defined by the Provincial Treasurer for their own use and not for resale.

5. Works of art when purchased by museums or art galleries whose revenue is provided by public donations and grants by public bodies will be exempt.

6. Religious institutions will be able to purchase free of tax equipment for use in that portion of their premises where religious worship is regularly conducted.

7. Religious and educational publications as defined by the Provincial Treasurer will be made tax free.

8. Equipment as defined by the Provincial Treasurer, purchased by a person licensed to trap fur-bearing animals by the Minister of Lands and Forests will be exempt from tax.

Other amendments will be introduced not only to make clearer certain provisions now in the Act but to simplify the collection of the tax.

Vendors whose taxable sales never exceed $100 per month will be granted permission to file their returns on a quarterly or half-yearly basis rather than monthly as now required under the Act.

In businesses which have a fairly constant percentage of taxable sales to total sales and where tests are conducted at frequent intervals to ensure the accuracy of the percentage, for each period in which tax remittances are required, arrangements may be made to calculate the amount of tax to be remitted on a formula basis, thus relieving the vendor of the necessity of keeping detailed records of his taxable sales. Where such arrangements are made, the vendor will of course be subject to periodic audit with a view to determining the accuracy of any formula so arranged.

It should also be noted that small retailers can largely eliminate the keeping of detailed records through the use of a receptacle in which the tax is deposited at the time of each transaction.

Mr. Speaker, you will be glad to know that there are no tax increases. Having dealt extensively with the sales tax and the province's need for revenue, I am pleased to announce this: no new taxes and no increases in tax rates. There will be a number of amendments besides those I have mentioned in connection with the sales tax and these may be summarized as follows:

The Corporations Tax Act will be amended to bring its provisions into line with the amended Income Tax Act of Canada pursuant to the adjustments made to that Act at the last session of Parliament.

Minor amendments will be introduced to The Succession Duty Act:

1. An insurance company will be permitted to make a payment up to but not exceeding $5,000 to a widow under any contract of insurance without the consent of the Provincial Treasurer. This will double the amount that the widow can obtain under these circumstances at the present time.

2. Interest on non-payment of duty will not commence until six months following the death of the deceased.

An amendment will be introduced to The Income Tax Act that will permit the completion of reciprocal arrangements with the province of Quebec whereby the tax collected by Ontario during a year may be paid over to the province of Quebec on behalf of a taxpayer who has moved from Ontario during the year and is a resident in Quebec on the last day of that year.

It is expected that a similar amendment will be made to The Income Tax Act of the province of Quebec to take care of the situation when a taxpayer moves from Quebec to Ontario.

Minor amendments are being made to The Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act to ease the penalty provisions that are now contained therein.

On The Hospitals Tax Act, effective April 1, 1962, the exemption from tax on the price of admission to places of amusement will be increased from 25 cents to 56 cents and the tax on the price of admission to places of amusement between 57 cents and 92 cents will be reduced by one cent. Also, the exemption from tax to places of amusement that are not class D theatres in communities having a population of less than 10,000 will be increased from 65 cents to 75 cents.

In this budget I have endeavoured to provide an account of our stewardship of the province's affairs in the current fiscal year and to outline our proposed programme for the coming fiscal year. I think you will agree that this budget sets before you and before the Ontario people an imaginative, forward-looking programme, the benefits of which will ramify throughout every sector of the economy. The budget itself is a positive step in a five-year programme aimed at maintaining our current high rate of economic growth—a rate of growth capable of producing more jobs and higher living standards for our increasing work force.

There are numerous immediate benefits—an unprecedented expansion and modernization of our educational system; improvements in health and welfare; a bold, new housing plan; increased municipal assistance; a record-breaking highways and municipal roads expenditure; measures to promote a vibrant northern Ontario; an expansion of the Ontario Provincial Police and parole, probation and rehabilitation services; measures to extend and improve recreational facilities and the physical fitness of our people—all of which will increase employment and add to the strength of the Ontario economy.

This budget also lays the foundation for future growth—new research, the creation of public capital, new access roads and measures to stimulate natural resources and manufacturing, construction of a spur line to tap a new iron ore deposit, development of a new communications system in northern Ontario, the establishment of the economic council, and an examination into measures to promote greater processing, increased Canadian content in domestic manufactures and expanding exports.

Attention is also to be given to measures to maintain our international competitive position. Our growth, and indeed our economic survival, depends upon keeping our costs in international equilibrium. While this budget provides for an expansion of private and public capital expenditures, we cannot hope that this policy will by itself achieve an acceptable rate of growth without measures being adopted to maintain our manufacturing industries on a competitive footing. We cannot lift the economy to an acceptable rate of growth through public spending alone. We must create an economic climate and environment that will enable private enterprise to expand vigorously and our industrial economy to advance from strength to strength. If we do this, we will have no difficulty in raising standards of human betterment through an extension of social welfare services.

Our record demonstrates that we have not been content to stand still. We have moved forward vigorously and dynamically in accordance with the wishes and needs of the people. We have been a pioneer in many fields of economic and social betterment.

Despite a record-breaking expenditure, there will be no tax increases. On the contrary, we are providing a measure of tax relief by a broadening of exemptions through the sales tax and certain other reductions to the hospitals tax. Nevertheless, we have to face up to the fact that the expansion in our services has been making increasing demands upon the province's financial resources, and we have to take this fact into consideration. We have provided good administration and sound financing. We intend to keep it that way. As an integral part of our five-year plan we shall endeavour to equate expenditures and revenues supported by a prudent use of our credit. We shall provide the fullest possible value for every dollar we spend.

By careful planning and single-minded devotion to our goals and objectives, and with the co-operation of the government of Canada, I am confident that Ontario can move steadily ahead. While the future will give rise to new problems and formidable challenges, it will also provide rewarding opportunities for those who accept its discipline and adapt themselves to it.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask permission of the House to revert to before orders of the day.

Mr. H. J. Price (St. David): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity provided me to remind the hon. members of the House that this is St. David's Day. This is the day set aside by the Welsh people to do honour to their patron saint, St. David. As my riding bears that cherished name I take this opportunity in the House each year, as do other members, representing a riding named for a saint, to do honour to the patron saint for whom their riding is named.

It might be interesting for the hon. members to know that the first mayor of Toronto was elected in 1834 in what was then called St. David ward. It was not until some years later, when the wards were numbered, that the riding was called after the saint.

This is the second occasion since I have been a member, in the last 7 years, that the budget in this House has been brought down on St. David's Day.

Native-born Welshmen are no strangers as members of this House. Although I cannot lay claim to be a native-born Welshman, I do claim to be of Welsh descent. As far as I can ascertain I am the only member of the Legislature for the riding of St. David bearing a Welsh name since 1797. The contribution of Welshmen to Canada and Canadian history, such as that of David Thompson, is certainly well known. They have left their mark, not only in Canada but in countries which they have occupied and lived in throughout the Commonwealth.

I want to take this opportunity of thanking Miss Potten, of the Speaker's office, and the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Lewis) for presenting me with this daffodil, the Welsh national emblem.

On behalf of the hon. members of the House I am pleased to extend our very best wishes to the people of Wales on this St. David's Day.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, when I arrived in the Legislature this morning you can imagine my embarrassment when I realized that I did not possess the national emblem of Wales. In fact, this morning when I left home I intended to put it in the lapel of my coat; the emblem of course, is the leek. I want to join the hon. member for St. David (Mr. Price) in thanking Miss Potten, your secretary, sir, and also the hon. member for York Humber (Mr. Lewis) for helping me out of this predicament.

I have in the lapel of my coat this very beautiful flower. I regret very much, sir, that I am not wearing the leek; the leek of course, to native-born Welsh people—and I claim to be one—is the national emblem of Wales. This flower is very beautiful, and while the leek may not be so beautiful, it has a very great nutrition value, as any hon. member who has tasted a bowl of leek broth will know. To the Welshman, the leek is as the haggis is to the Scotsman. It is our national dish.

It is a great pleasure for me to join the hon. member in paying my tribute to the Welsh people in Ontario and throughout Canada. This St. David's Day, to Welshmen and Welshwomen throughout the world, is very sincerely observed by the singing of the hymns and songs of Wales. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a very, very great thrill to listen to these old hymns and songs sung by Welsh people. I do not think one could expect a greater treat than that.

Wales is a very small country, with a population of just over two million people. The Welsh people, not only in Wales but throughout the world, have made a great contribution to our democratic way of life. History records that no nation in the British Commonwealth suffered so greatly during the industrial revolution as the Welsh people. The Welsh are a very religious people, particularly those in the southern part of Wales. Working in the mines, in a very hazardous occupation, not knowing when they went into the mines whether they would come out alive the following evening, developed in them that religious aspect which is so greatly developed there.

The Welsh nation has been truly progressive in helping to further some of the social reforms that we enjoy today. It was in 1885, Mr. Speaker, when the first Labour member was elected to the British House of Commons, from the little country of Wales. And in 1900 the British Labour Party began, when elected to the British House of Commons was the great Keir Hardie.

Since that time they have progressed.

The little country, with a population just over two million, is represented in the British House of Commons by 36 members. In that membership there are 28 Labour members. Mr. Speaker, I want to say they are a very, very fine progressive people, and I am very happy today to pay my tribute to the Welsh people in our communities.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE BEES ACT

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour) in the absence of hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture), moves second reading of Bill No. 74, An Act to amend The Bees Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

ONTARIO REGISTERED MUSIC TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. Cowling, in the absence of Mr. Morin, moves second reading of Bill No. Pr24, An Act respecting The Ontario Registered Music Teachers Association.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

House in committee of the whole; Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

THE ONTARIO CODE OF HUMAN RIGHTS

House in committee on Bill No. 54, An Act to establish the Ontario Code of Human Rights and to provide for its administration.

On section 4.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, when the debate adjourned last, I rose to speak on this section. I think the amendment suggested by my hon. colleague to include the word "age" in section 4 is a most important one. And I noted carefully the remarks of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), I think it was, who pointed out that several private members' bills had been introduced suggesting this, including the bill by the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman). It is rather surprising the hon. Minister from St. Andrew did not see fit to speak in this vein during this debate and, in fact, is not here now.

This brings to mind, Mr. Chairman, some remarks—oh, here is the hon. Minister now—some remarks that he made in debate last year on March 15, 1961, and I thought the memory of the House might be refreshed in connection with this. The hon. Minister rose and said, addressing the Chairman:

Before you proceed with that, I think I would like in the records—because I know some issue is going to be attempted to be made by others on this bill—that the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) was present in this Legislature and did not think this was important enough to get into his seat and vote.

Now, it is rather interesting, Mr. Chairman, that a year ago while I was in the House and speaking to one of the Ministers of the Crown, the hon. Minister from St. Andrew saw fit to address those remarks. Yet, when this bill was given second reading in the House a short time ago the hon. Minister was not in his seat and when the bill began to be debated in committee the hon. Minister was not in his seat. He is in his seat this afternoon.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if someone on the government side could indicate to us whether after the passage of section 4, and the rest of this bill, there will be the right given to government officials to discriminate against people because of the colour of their hair? It seems that a certain incident took place in a government-controlled institution, where one individual was suspended and two others were fired arising out of an incident connected with what seems to be a matter of freedom—a matter which should be covered by the code of human rights; that is, whether or not a man can decide what colour his hair should be.

With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would urge the House to support this amendment moved by my hon. colleague.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment I would like to point out that discrimination today is showing up more in age than it is in anything else.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Davison: Over the years we have had the problems of race, colour and creed, but the average person in Canada today does not look upon that as discrimination. That problem is not evident. We have the tremendous problem of age. I think that older working people today only want one opportunity and that opportunity is to have the same right of a job as a younger person. It is a shame that this government cannot see fit at this time to include the word "age" in this bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I think that everyone in the House is in complete agreement with the idea that discrimination in employment on the grounds of age is a problem which affects our society today, and a problem with which we will undoubtedly have to deal. I do not think there is any doubt about that in anyone's mind. We also can recognize in our society today a certain emphasis upon youth, which, in certain aspects at least, might be referred to as a fad, and if carried too far it can become something which is unjust and perhaps unreasonable.

The other emphasis, of course, is on the very large problem of age and the denial of employment to any person purely because of age. The real problem that faces us in our society is the resultant waste of talent and manpower which, in our society, I suggest, we cannot afford. Then, of course, there is the other very important effect which the practice of denying a man employment because of age has on the individual in terms of personal frustration and mental distress—a feeling of insecurity and hardship—and all these matters are related to the question of age.

I think that everyone in the House is in sympathy with these points but there are three basic factors involved in dealing with the problem of age in regard to the securing of employment. These three problems, which I will point out, are all interrelated and yet I would say that each one of them will have to be solved before we will have any overall solution.

The first of these is, as I have mentioned, the question of pure fad. That is where for no logical reason at all, it is assumed that a younger person might do a better job. The second factor involved in this is the question of economic change and the skills and qualifications of individuals which are affected by such change.

The development of automation, for example, has been mentioned in this House very often. People are now frequently pushed out of jobs which they have held for many years, out of jobs in which they have developed certain, special, specific skills, and they are forced to find new employment. I think we have all met this problem. I know I have met it with individuals in my own riding in London and it is a very large problem for the individual concerned.

Now, we are taking steps—and these matters will be debated more fully when our programme is placed before the House in due course—but we are taking steps to provide training and retraining for people who find themselves in this position, so that they may meet the new challenges with which they are presented.

This is part of the problem of age because very often the change as the result of automation happens to people in the middle years of their lives, people who have established positions for themselves in the community, have acquired assets, such as houses and so on. They have developed a pattern of living, of educating their children, and the problems they face are very great.

The third factor which I would describe as bearing on the question of age and employment is the development of pension plans for employees. This is a very large problem, a very practical problem, and one of great importance because the development of pension plans in our society has had a very great effect. It has been of very great benefit to our people in providing them with security in the latter years of their lives, in permitting them to save and create an estate during their working years to look after the latter years of their lives.

The development of the pension plan is one of the great social benefits of the first part of the twentieth century, I would say, but it has had some very potent and undesirable side effects. One of these, and we all know this, is that it has tended to make our worker much less mobile even though all factors in our society apart from this lead to greater mobility of labour. It has also led to the side effect of excluding the older worker from employment because he did not fit into the pension plan in the particular industry or plant in which he was attempting to find work.

It is obvious that pension plans must have eligibility if they are to be operated on a sound and firm business basis. We have faced this limitation in the public service of the province and our limit for entry into the pension plan for our provincial employees is age 55, which I believe is much higher than any other plan that I know. But we do employ people over 55 and we have made special arrangements for them. If you are over 55 and enter the public service you enter it on a different basis.

In view of the problems I have sketched out here and in the light of these circumstances which I have drawn to your attention, the government did establish a technical committee to recommend ways and means of achieving portability of pensions between employers in the province. The purpose of this committee was to engender interest in the problem, to create enough interest to produce research, to bring the whole problem into focus and to have it examined by those who would be most affected by any attempt to create portability in pensions. I think in this the committee has been successful.

Hon. members have all received a report of the committee. They have received the draft bill which the committee has prepared and I am sure they have read the news report of the varying and conflicting opinions that have been advanced in connection with portability of pensions and the portability problem. Later on in this session we will be dealing with this question of portability again, because I would hope that there will be another report from that committee which can be brought in here to be examined by the House. The matter is far from settled and there are many—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Is the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) bringing in a bill?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Wait and see.

Mr. Bryden: I have been waiting for two years and I have not seen anything yet.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I was just explaining to the hon. members of the House the purpose of the course that we are taking on this. We are not in a position as yet, and I doubt if we will be in a position this year, to solidify this situation. The study that is necessary to deal properly with a matter as important as this is continuing and, as I say, the matter will be brought before the House again.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Too much fluidity in the government!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In any event, as to the amendment that is presently before the House in relation to this bill, I am in sympathy with the objective of the amendment but I am firmly of the opinion that it will not do what the sponsor of the amendment thinks it will do. I would point out if we examine the amendment it is very wide—if I may put it this way—wide of the mark that the hon. mover may be thinking of. If we take a look at what this amendment really means, then this will further illustrate the position I take, and that is that we must, of absolute necessity, examine all sides of this problem before we place ourselves in the straitjacket of a statutory enactment.

I would point out to the hon. members that this amendment may create a completely impossible administrative situation because it does not prohibit the type of discrimination which should be prohibited, which is in fact the denial of employment to a person on the basis that he is too old. I think that is the objective of the hon. mover, let us say that is the philosophy behind his amendment.

But this is not what the amendment would achieve, because it might and could be interpreted that a young man of 17 years of age who felt he had qualifications but not sufficient experience for a job would be justified, with this amendment, in claiming that he had been denied a job because he was too young. Now, I do not know whether this is what the hon. mover of the amendment intended, but I think that there is a definite possibility that this interpretation could be put on it.

We are really thinking in terms of the worker in the over 40 and 45 age group and this amendment is too broad; it would affect many people other than the group which I think the hon. member is attempting to assist. In addition to that, it is so broad that it would prevent any employer placing a limit upon any particular type of job because of age. Let us take the situation of a pilot of a commercial air line. It would be impossible—if we are going to have to discriminate because of age in terms as broad as this and in terms as broad as this amendment—it would be impossible to say we will not hire an air pilot—

Mr. Bryden: Nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is not nonsense at all. I would point out to the hon. member that I do not know how much research he has done before making this amendment. I am not quarreling with what he is attempting to achieve. I simply state that the amendment that he has produced is administratively unworkable and I think that anybody who is thinking about the matter at all will agree with me.

The hon. member will find other jurisdictions which have attempted to deal with this problem, protecting the right of the older workers to obtain employment, have had to draw many exemptions to the broad principle in order to be practical and in order to have a statute and an Act which is administratively possible to administer.

Therefore, I would say that we would be very unwise to accept this amendment as it stands because it is defective and it is ineffective. We should not rush into it and deal with a subject as great as this subject is with an amendment such as this amendment is.

I would point out also that age is not directly related to the particular human rights that are being dealt with in this bill. My point is simply that this bill is not the place for a provision by which we would attempt to protect the right to work of the older worker. This is not the proper place. This bill is not dealing with matters of that kind. My own personal opinion is that this matter of age will have to be dealt with separately, it will have eventually to be the subject of a separate statute, it will have to be given a great deal of research before a proper approach to the problem can be brought in here and translated into statute.

Mr. Chairman, in speaking against this amendment I point out that, as I said before, I do not think any of us are too far apart on our sympathy for the basic problem.

But this amendment will not achieve what the hon. mover thinks it will.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment as suggested in subsection 1 of section 4, and feel that it is justified in that section, I feel it is also justified in subsection 3 of section 4.

Certainly if someone applies for a job and the employer does not want him for one of several reasons he can find a reason. Why I suggest it will serve a practical purpose in subsection 3 of section 4 is that we find many newspaper advertisements for employment stating that one may only apply if he is between the ages of, say, 25 and 35. Right away the person looking for employment is deterred from making application or presenting himself by this deterrent in the newspaper advertisement. I am sure if there was a bar to this type of advertisement many a person over the age of 35 who could have the opportunity of presenting himself to a prospective employer, could convince him that he could do the job. But with this deterrent in there, many people do not bother to apply for a job.

As I said before, if we had the word "age" in subsection 3 of section 4, and the person who applied was of an age that the employer felt was too old for his employment and if it was because of pension programmes or such, he could find other reasons and will find other reasons not to give him the job. I am sure that the only qualification for employment at any time of any kind will be the educational and physical requirements.

As it is now, with advertisements invariably carrying an age limit, people who are physically fit, and have all of the qualifications necessary, just do not apply for those jobs, and they suffer the effect of losing their dignity and the fact that they are taken off the labour market. I support the amendment.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak in support of the amendment.

I was very interested in listening to the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) with respect to this problem. While I am willing to admit that some of the points that he made might have some little validity, I think the reasons for voting against this amendment, as stated by him, are not sufficient to influence the hon. members of this Legislature to vote against the principle. The matter of philosophy was mentioned and it seems to me that this—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We have already voted for the principle, we are in committee now.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, this is my opinion, Mr. Chairman. The bill in itself is philosophical in content and I think this is a case where we can show our intent and take some positive steps to actually do something about this matter of discrimination because of age. The matter of the portable pensions was brought forward and I agree with the hon. Prime Minister that perhaps the pension plans, more than any other single factor, are having a serious effect on the employment of people in the older age brackets. I think this is particularly significant in instances where because of the method of funding or financing in a pension plan it is necessary for employers to contribute substantially more to pension funds in the case of older workers than they would do in the instance where the worker was much younger.

I was somewhat disappointed in what I believe was the suggestion by the hon. Prime Minister that this bill might not be discussed in this present sitting. I think that if it is not to be brought forward, that this more than anything else—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I did not say that.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I did not suggest that the hon. Prime Minister did, I suggested that I took from his comment that he did make at least some inference that it might not be brought forward at this time.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not know what I said, but what I meant to say, in any event, was that I hoped there would be a further report from the committee that is studying portable pensions, and when it comes it will be brought into this House and we will provide a vehicle for debate on it, the question of portable pensions.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I submit that this committee did report once already and they were asked by the former hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Frost) to bring forward a draft plan which has been submitted and which I think should be given to this Legislature for debate. I think the absence of this particular bill is only delaying the time when we can say to the people of this province that it shall not be that they will be denied these opportunities because of age. I think that until such time as this pension bill does become law in the province of Ontario we can look forward to this discrimination no matter how we philosophize in the type of Act that we are considering today.

I cannot see that any harm would be done by supporting this amendment which would make it unlawful to discriminate because of age. I think some of the instances which the hon. Prime Minister has given could take place, but I believe that the Act is broad enough that where it was a matter of health, or endangering the lives of others—as would be in the case of the airline pilot not being given a job as pilot after he reached a certain age—I think in cases like that, the Act is broad enough to indicate that this would not be a case of discrimination because of age. I think to pick these isolated cases out and use them as a reason for not accepting this principle is really distorting the whole issue.

I do not think that the arguments which have been put forward, with all respect to the hon. Prime Minister, are sufficient for the hon. members to consider not supporting the amendment as proposed by my hon. colleague, and I certainly would support it.

I do not think it can do any harm; I think it would indicate to everybody that we really are trying to declare war on this matter of discrimination. We must remember that discrimination really is the result of prejudice and it has been said in this Legislature many times that we cannot legislate against these things; yet we are endeavouring to legislate against discrimination by this Act and I think, since we are going to endeavour to legislate against these prejudices, that it is desirable to put in the matter of age along with the other things we are trying to correct.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, it never ceases to strike me, sir, that great and serious and terrible are the burdens imposed upon the hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Robarts) when he is called upon in his function as chief of the party to stand in this Legislature and give explanation and make apology for serious deficiency in government policy and responsibility in the carrying out of their duties.

Before Christmas, sir—if I may go a bit afield and point to the fact that he had to reply to my leader's reference to the sales tax—he had at that time to make an explanation which was later presented to the voters of the province when they had the opportunity to weigh sides to judge the merits in the little general election, and his position at that time was rejected.

Today, sir, he has to resort to the spurious, and the specious, and I do not think the "fatuous" is too unkind a word to use, when he says that in accepting the amendment of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) we would discriminate against all sorts of people by the inclusion of this word "age"; and we would, in fact, mitigate against the very purpose which he sought to achieve.

I point out to him, sir, that by the inclusion of the word "age" it does not mean that the words "experience", "qualification", "aptitude" or "competence" are thereby excluded from the normal economic operation of the selection of persons suitable to carry out any given line of employment. If you discriminated against a person at the age of 17 in that he could not be an airline pilot, if it was said that he was being discriminated against on account of his age or due to his age, the reply is perfectly natural that of course he is not being discriminated against because he has not the experience, and he has not the qualifications, he has not the aptitude, and any number of human prerequisites that are necessary.

And I merely set those out to show the spurious and specious nature of the observations which he made in asking the House not to accept the amendment offered by the hon. member for Parkdale.

But let me go back a little bit further. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender), who is responsible for this bill, the other day made his contribution to this debate and this proffered amendment. And he said, sir—the type of speciousness, and the type of spuriousness that he asked us to accept was that this bill is directed toward the discrimination of the type of nationality and creed and ancestry, and that type of indicia and characteristic that one so frequently encounters and does not encompass within its four corners, discrimination on economic balance, or for economic reasons, or within the purview of the economic operation of the country. And yet the very preamble, sir, the very preamble—if he would like to look at it—refers to the universal declaration of human rights as proclaimed by the United Nations; and if my memory is correct, one of the fundamental rights that is contained in that universal declaration is freedom from economic want—freedom from economic want.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mention age?

Mr. Sopha: The security that a person has from the regaining of a living and providing for those for whom he is responsible in the provision of worldly goods. He overlooked that. He just stands upon that type of speciousness in order to throw sand in their eyes, and deter us from our purpose.

I say to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), and I say it in all seriousness, that we probably do not believe that this is the best way to do it. We probably do not believe that, but we do believe that this is the best opportunity, and the best method of bringing before this House at this time—and probably the only time that we will get—what is a very grave problem, a very grave problem.

My hon. friend from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) referred to the fact that my office is next to one of his stores in Sudbury—well, it is on the ground level, it is on the same level. Maybe, some day, when things become uncertain around here I will spend my time in boring a hole through, to forget the misery of Tory times by some of his products. But, being on the ground level, all sorts of people come into it—come into it on government business—and one of the most frequent visitors I get, one of the most common types that come in there, is the man of 40 or 45 or 50 who says to me: "Sopha, I cannot get a job, I am turned down because I am too old. What am I going to do? I have three or four kids at home, I have a child at university, and employers will not take me because they say I am too old." Now, what are we going to do for that person?

How do we then carry out our responsibilities unless we at this time, and through this method: my hon. friend from Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) offering this amendment, calling to the attention of the government and the hon. Prime Minister and that genius who sits on his right—he lounges on his right—my hon. friend from Fort William (Mr. Chapple) says. Not among the physically fit is he, because he is developing curvature of the spine.

In any event, sir, to return to the seriousness of the matter, that is the purpose of the inclusion of that word here.

Now, sir, could we become any more effective than to cite that two years ago the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), a man who is probably 45 years of age himself, before he got his promotion, before he obtained what he thinks is security of employment at 45, offered a bill which in its essence was the very same that my hon. friend from Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) now offers to the House—the very same purpose and object. At that time, sir, I observed—let me keep the record absolutely accurate, because I like accuracy—that one of the bills that will be repealed under part 6 of this statute is The Fair Employment Practices Act, and the bill that he offered to the House and which reached second reading in the month of April—April 7, 1960, to be exact—was an amendment to The Fair Employment Practices Act which was designed to prevent discrimination on the grounds of age—the grounds of age.

Is it unreasonable, is it at all perverse, is it at all obstinate on our part to expect that in two years after a government member—who albeit did not reach the high Olympic heights, at that time, that he has now; a lowly member still scratching for votes, so to speak—offered a bill, we would have some indication of government policy in this regard? We seek not to impose on employers any restriction in hiring their employees, but we seek to ensure through the means of legislative action concerted with a programme of education to secure a state of affairs in the province of Ontario where it cannot be within the law the policy of a firm—and I say to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) through you, sir, that there are firms in this province that have a policy that they will not hire people over the age of 40 or over the age of 45, as the case may be.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Some over 35.

Mr. Sopha: Some over 35, my hon. friend from Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) says. And that is fixed as their policy. Now, sir, anyone knows, and it is trite for me to say it and I do not have to produce evidence to prove it, that a man 35, 40, 45, 50 often, most often can do a better day's work than a much younger man can. Surely in this Legislature there is no discrimination on age. We go from the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) at 29 to the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) who I think is the oldest here, is he not—I do not know whether he is the dean of the House or not, he just seems to me to be. Well, there is no necessity for me to burden the House, but I wanted to underline that; and if hon. members quarrel with that, I say finally and in summation that we want you to take away from employers the right to discriminate, the privilege they have of discriminating as I charge that they do discriminate in this province.

Secondly, if the government, sir, does not agree with us that this is the best method to do it, then let us have some of their own legislation. They have had time enough to prepare or to decide upon their policy and let it crystallize into some form of legislation. Let them put it before the House and, once and for all, put this thing at rest. We think those are reasonable observations to make, and, until we see something definite forthcoming from the government benches then I can assure the hon. Prime Minister and those who sit with him and support him, that we are going to support this amendment.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in this debate I would like to say a few words. It is only because I had originally brought up this problem during this sitting of the Legislature. The hon. Prime Minister has mentioned the fact of a pension plan. Well, that may be all right, but the individual that is being discriminated against here because of age is not necessarily interested in the pension plan. He can purchase his own pension plan if he wishes. But he certainly does not feel any too well when, in applying for employment and particularly with a department of the government here, he is told that at 45 he is too old. Now, put yourself in his position, being told that at 45 years of age you are no longer wanted. Why, if such a rule of thumb were applied in this Legislature there would not be many of us here.

Another point to show that age is of vital importance is The Apprenticeship Act. It has the limitation of 21 years of age and we have just recently found the hardship that it has rendered to the large masses of unemployed who are interested in retraining right here in the city of Toronto.

Mr. Chairman, it certainly is or should be the policy of this government to see that application forms from their own departments contain no reference to age, because here I have one from a man stating that he was told that his services would not be required solely because he happens to be of an age that, in their eyes, was a little too old to be able to participate in a pension plan. No consideration was given to the fellow as to whether he was qualified for the job or not, as to whether he was physically capable of doing the job but solely that he was over 45.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I think that this amendment is a very reasonable one. I am rather surprised at the attitude of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). I think the argument this afternoon just shows up the demanding restrictive practices of industry today. Not only in the matter of age, for some of the major industries in Ontario today demand that a man be a certain height, not less than 5 foot 7, and that he weigh not less than 150 pounds.

Some two years ago, this was brought to the attention of the federal Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) who is the member for my constituency in the riding of Ontario, and he promised to do something about it. Now I presume he brought it to the attention of the federal government but, in the way of legislation, nothing came out of it. But he did send a letter to the different manufacturers in Canada, asking them if they would consider, and that is about as far as he got. I do not doubt for one moment, Mr. Chairman, that a number of those letters were thrown into the wastepaper basket for the simple reason that the practice is going on today.

If a man is refused employment because of his age, he then has to apply for unemployment insurance. The Unemployment Insurance Fund is contributed one-third by the government, one-third by the worker and one-third by the employer. Therefore, the government of Canada and the worker contribute roughly about two-thirds of the Unemployment Insurance Fund and because this man cannot find a job, he applied for unemployment insurance benefit and therefore is a drain on that fund.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if the federal government has not got the intestinal fortitude and courage to introduce legislation to restrict these practices of discrimination on the part of age, then I think it is up to this government to show some leadership and I hope you will support the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, and I concede to you that this topic has been covered rather thoroughly, but I must say that the statement of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) this afternoon was so astounding that I think it requires a bit more consideration. It was astounding not only in terms of its contents but even more important in terms of its indication of what the government's intentions, strategy, or lack thereof, happen to be.

His statement fell into two parts.

First, the hon. Prime Minister gave us still another exposition as to the nature of this problem. Well, Mr. Chairman, I submit to you we have had this problem spelled out to the House both within this Legislature and across this province and this land for too long already without governments coming to grips with it. And particularly when the hon. Prime Minister this time resorts to such feeble excuses as the reference to the air line pilot as a reason why we should not move towards some statutory enactment.

Clearly he is not just expounding on the problem but he is confusing it and making excuses.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh, nonsense. It is administratively impossible to do what the hon. member is asking.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not administratively impossible. That may be all the hon. Prime Minister can say but this does not end the problem, nor come to grips with it.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, now that we have gotten to the stage where the likelihood of portable pensions in the foreseeable future, and retraining, and things of this nature, relieves at least some of the burden of unemployed at those age levels, it seems to me it is even more a practical proposition that we can put a law in, that we can catch those who are discriminating strictly on the basis of age. In other words, we have reduced the proportion of our problem.

If the government were arguing that this was too big a problem, and the law would be in effect a law that could not be put into effect—and all law comes into disrepute if we put it on the books and cannot really enforce it—then there might be some measure of validity in their stand. But they are not arguing that, and I do not think they argue that because I think we have reached the stage now where it is time, as we did with other kinds of anti-discrimination legislation, to put it on the books and say, this is going to come to an end.

However, Mr. Chairman, I come to the second aspect of the hon. Prime Minister's argument. Having spelled out the problem, he then proceeds to pick holes in the particular amendment that has been put before the House.

Mr. Chairman, for purposes of argument let us concede for a moment that some of his case was valid, that this was not the best kind of an amendment. If the government were going to do something about it then we would harken for one moment to this kind of argument; but obviously the government is not going to do anything about it, notwithstanding the fact that two or three years ago when we had that black Friday out at A. V. Roe the men who were turned out, and were seeking work immediately, found that they were being discriminated against because of age. It got into the newspapers and was reported in the House here, and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost), as the Prime Minister of the day, was most indignant at employers who did this. So at that particular time I said: "Well, if you are indignant, if you think it is wrong, why do you not put it in the Act?"

"Oh, well, we have too much law already," said he.

Well, Mr. Chairman, this duplicity of approach to a problem—spelling it out on the one hand and refusing to act—I think is the kind of thing we have had far too much of. As for the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) who introduced the matter in the House a couple of years ago and presumably was absent from the Cabinet when the matter was raised, or alternatively got voted down in the Cabinet, it will be interesting to see what he says or how he votes when he has an opportunity on this thing.

But, finally, the thing that impressed me was that having made all this line-up of excuses, the hon. Prime Minister ends up by painting a horrific picture. If you move to come to grips with this—what was his term—through a "straitjacket of statutory enactment." We are supposed to tremble with fear at the thought that we were going to be restricted further—another straitjacket. It almost sounded like a line out of the Chamber of Commerce's Operation Freedom, at the moment. Another straitjacket placed on the nation.

This is nonsense. There is at the present time in effect, and it has been for some years, in New York State, legislation coming to grips with this problem essentially along the lines of the amendment before the House. It is part of their human rights legislation.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Quite wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: It is part of their human rights legislation.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Spell it out.

Mr. MacDonald: It is part of their legislation, and if the hon. Prime Minister does not like the specific detail of this particular amendment I, for one, would say fine if he was going to be bringing in something more; but all the excuses that he has made indicate that he is not going to bring in anything more. I, for one, have more confidence than he that the draughtsmen of this government sitting under the wings over there could produce the kind of bill that would provide us with the legislation we wanted. We are just back to excuses.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Let us be patient.

Mr. MacDonald: I think, Mr. Chairman, the government should come in with their own Act; and since it is clear that they will not, certainly I think that the House should express its view on the amendment which is before it now.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Chairman, I assure you I intend to be very brief on this but I want to say why I intend opposing the amendment.

First of all I do not think anyone in this House, or outside this House, would condone the non-employment of people or persons solely or simply because somebody happens to be a few years older than another person.

I think this government and the province of Ontario has led the way as far as discrimination legislation is concerned. Obviously the subjects mentioned in this bill and which have been on the statute books are valid subjects for anti-discrimination legislation. Obviously a person in employment should not be discriminated against solely because of race, or his creed, or his colour or his religion or his nationality or his ancestry or his place of origin. These things are obvious, and these things are good, and these things are presently on our statute books; but the problem in regard to age, Mr. Chairman, obviously must be this: that age relates, whether we like it or not, in a great many cases, to ability. It does and there it no getting around it, any more than education relates to ability.

Now how in the world can we bring in legislation saying, for instance, that one should not discriminate solely and simply because of one's education. The reason is obvious: one's education relates to one's ability to do a job. Mr. Chairman, I submit that age is in the same category. Age relates to ability. Education relates to ability. In my mind, it is nonsense to attempt in this fashion, in this type of legislation—there may be other means and perhaps in due course we will be able to find those other means and perhaps the government will be able to present them to the people and to this House—but in this type of legislation to attempt to bring in so-called discriminatory legislation because of a man's age is nonsense; and I would submit that the appeal that is being made by the hon. members on the other side of the House in relation to this, has got more to do with playing politics and political appeal than anything else.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I have already expressed my views on this particular amendment, but I would like to make one further comment. I have listened with great interest to the weaseling of government spokesmen. I think it is time we faced the fact, Mr. Chairman, and that the government face the fact, that it is impossible for any human being to be on two sides of a question at the same time. They are trying to pretend they are for the principle of the amendment when they are against it. I think the plain conclusion to be drawn, Mr. Chairman, from the debate today, and I have no doubt from the vote when it is held, is that the Tory party of this province is at least willing to tolerate discrimination on account of age if it is not positively in favour of it.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the previous government speaker, if they will favour an amendment to The Pension Act so that a person who is 45 years of age can apply for a pension? Will they favour an amendment to that effect?

Mr. Lawrence: Could I ask the hon. member (Mr. Belanger) if he would perhaps consider good legislation removing compulsory retirement at 65 in relation to some industries—it is the same problem.

Mr. Belanger: No, no.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I want to state my views on this particular amendment. I support it, although I am not concerned about age personally, because I am sure I will not have to worry about my present job as long as I want to hold it. That is not arrogance as the hon. member, who interrupted, said—that is just common sense.

I understand, though—I heard there was an unwritten law in the Liquor Control Board that there was a certain age limit. It is not spelled out. I understand there is an unwritten law in that department. But I notice there is no problem for certain people as long as they have a letter from a certain member of a certain constituency. I know one came up to my riding and he carried a letter; and, regardless of age, he got the job. But it says in this—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: The declaration of human rights, this very, very fine document; inscribed on it is the symbol of the United Nations—I had better be careful in talking of flags, it is kind of a nasty word in this House—but it says in article 3: "everyone has the right to life, liberty and the security of person." I fail to see where he is going to achieve that security to life and liberty if he is denied the right of a job; how is he going to get sustenance, how is he going to live? What security of person has he unless there is something in the statute books that is against discrimination because of age? We are supposed to be legislating now for the people of Ontario—well, I will not continue.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to add to this some of the words that were used in a previous debate when we were talking about this aspect of age, the hon. sponsor said, that it will not solve this problem completely, but it is a good beginning. It is a step in the right direction. And if nothing else, it will have great moral influence on our society. Therefore, I would urge the hon. members and the government to give their earnest consideration to the support of this bill.

I wish I had had the eloquence, sir, to speak in those words. Because of the sincerity that I know that the hon. gentleman opposite had to say those few words, I know he will vote with us on this bill.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Chairman, some time last year when this question was being discussed and I happened to be out of the House, there was some suggestion by some hon. member opposite that I deliberately ducked the vote. When someone came out into the hall to tell me that this was being said in the House, I ran in but just missed the vote. But I wanted to make sure today that I did not miss the vote, and I would like to tell the hon. members opposite that I never ducked a vote in my life.

When I was in the city council before I got to this august Chamber, I was known to be the only member in city council that never missed a vote in four years. And I was threatened many times. Many a time I was threatened that by taking a stand on an issue, and voting, it would destroy me politically. Now I succeeded in avoiding that defeat for ten years and whether I will again or not I do not know, but I will still not duck a vote when I can avoid doing so.

Let me tell the hon. members, Mr. Chairman, that I wholeheartedly am still in favour of the principle expounded by this amendment, wholeheartedly in favour of it. But mind you, the next time any of the hon. members opposite want to present their case, they should come to see me first; I could present a better case than they. They presented a very poor case for it. And this is what I am afraid of in the way this is being presented.

They are just muddying the waters, Mr. Chairman. They are just muddying the waters, and not helping the situation at all. There is no doubt—

An hon. member: What specious talk.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Everything said on this side is specious, of course, and everything said on that side is intelligent and we know it; we know it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I agree that there are some employers who act outrageously and are heartless in respect of employing people of certain ages. On the other hand, and this was brought out quite forcibly in the discussion on my bill and the bill of the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Davison) I think it was; or perhaps it was the hon. member for Wentworth East (Mr. Gisborn) who brought in a bill at the same time, two years ago. It was brought out quite forcibly then that there were many employers who could not be blamed for taking this action because they were doing it in self-defence in competition with other employers—in respect to the fact that they had to consider pension plans, and the effect that age had on their pension plans, and so on.

I have no doubt that something must be done about this and I will continue to apply myself to that problem as long as I am able to speak for it. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the Liberals have changed their views somewhat in this because now they are in a position of having tried to steal something from a Progressive-Conservative member and from a member of the N.D.P. both of whom brought in bills for this originally. And I am sure their interest at this time stems from the fact that they saw that there was some interest in this problem on the part of the public after it was raised by the hon. member from the small group over there and by myself.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) himself has just pointed out how difficult a problem this is because he just made a statement which in effect was discriminatory in respect of age. He said that he is in favour of compulsory retirement at 65. Now, that is discrimination if there ever was. There are many people at 65 who are more active and able than many people much younger, and as a matter of fact, at the time I presented my bill I pointed out that many people, due to early retirement, forced early retirement, had actually been killed by this retirement long before they might normally have passed away; because they were very active and mentally alert at 65 and would have been better carrying on.

Now, it was obvious at the time I presented my bill, Mr. Chairman, that the House was not ready for this particular bill—

Mr. Bryden: That was three years ago.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That was two years ago—it was two years ago, and at that time I stated that my bill was being presented at least to bring the problem to the fore. At that time I had a voluminous file on this subject and it was quite apparent—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would suggest to the hon. leader of the Opposition he had better not laugh because I am going to quote him in a minute. It was quite obvious at that time that the big problem was to bring it to the attention of all concerned that a problem existed and something should be done about it.

At that time, Mr. Chairman, at page 2521 from the same copy of Hansard, the hon. Prime Minister at that time stated:

Mr. Speaker, I am going to call the 21st order which stands in the name of the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman). Now that bill is almost identical—as a matter of fact the principle is the same—as order No. 22, standing in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Davison).

I am going to call the first order, but both the hon. members might speak to the principle of the matter, after which I propose to call resolution No. 1 of the public notices of motion which, I think, is really inseparable from that problem. So, sir, I will call order No. 21.

Order No. 21 was the resolution presented by the hon. leader of the Opposition at that time having to do with portable pensions. The resolution was:

That the government make available facilities for the development of a province-wide scheme of portable pensions for all workers.

And the hon. leader of the Opposition, in rising to speak to that, stated:

Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this particular discussion I must say, at the outset, that I agree with the observations of the hon. Prime Minister.

That is the observation that these were inseparable from the problems of pensions at that time.

Further on, Mr. Chairman, the hon. leader of the Opposition stated:

Now, herein comes the problem that the hon. member for St. Andrew has outlined, a real social problem. One of the difficulties today is that an employer hesitates to employ a man over 40 because of the substantial contribution that he is going to have to make to that man's pension plan, a contribution that will cost him more dollars than it would to employ a younger man for whom he would pay a lesser sum of money. That is one problem I would outline to hon. members.

Further, Mr. Chairman, the hon. leader of the Opposition, at page 2530, stated as follows:

I think the hon. member for St. Andrew is right.

Now I am not going to mislead the House; this was on the other matter of pensions, we were discussing pensions at the time, but he went on to say:

Not only do I think he is right, but I must say that, from the very beginning, I have felt that the question of vesting is the big question.

That is when we discussed the vesting of pensions. But his next paragraph, Mr. Chairman, his next paragraph is somewhat illustrating. He said:

Now, of course, the hon. members to the left will say: "Well, now, why not pass our bill?"

And he went on to explain why the hon. leader of the Opposition was not in favour of the bill presented by the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Davison). He said:

We recognize vesting to be the problem.

And he went on to point out how this was the great problem involved. But the fact remains, Mr. Chairman, that he was pointing out that there was a good reason why he was not in favour of the bill that was presented at that time.

Further on the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) stated:

What I am saying, sir, is that with this bill—and I agree wholeheartedly and commend the government and the hon. member for St. Andrew for having brought this bill No. 34 before us—we should not just feel that, because we legislate that industry must employ an older person, and that they should not discriminate on the basis of age, that is sufficient. There is a much deeper area, and much deeper thought, in connection with the whole economy, and I do not think that we should lose sight of that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, lest anyone should feel that I am now saying that I am not in favour of such a principle, let me repeat again, I am. The principle is much more complex than appears on the surface, and there is not the slightest doubt, Mr. Chairman, that it became apparent even that first night when we were discussing it here and then discussed portable pensions, that this is tied in completely with the matter of pensions. And, Mr. Chairman, I think that it will only muddy the waters at this time to confuse this issue while there is a study being made and which we hope will be productive of something we are all looking forward to—a solution to this problem.

Again I say I am wholeheartedly in favour of the principle, but as I say, it is completely tied in with the matter of pensions.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is repeating himself.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I have heard the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) repeat himself a thousand times and it did not sound any better the last time than it did the first.

Mr. Chairman, if, as and when we decide that the portable pensions programme is not adequate to meet this problem then I will be just as strongly in favour of taking the kind of action we are talking about today.

Mr. Chairman: The amendment is before the hon. members. Will those opposed please say "nay". In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

I declare the amendment lost.

On section 5:

Mr. Bryden: Section 5 is a re-enactment of the operative section of The Female Employees Fair Remuneration Act, which will be replaced as soon as this consolidated statute comes into force.

Unfortunately section 5 is in identically the same terms, as far as I was able to determine from comparing the two, as the comparable section of The Female Employees Fair Remuneration Act. I would submit to you and to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that in its terms it is far too restrictive. The section reads as follows:

No employer or person acting on behalf of an employer shall discriminate between his male and female employees by paying the female employee a rate of pay less than the rate of pay paid to a male employee employed by him for the same work done in the same establishment.

Now that phrase, "the same work," Mr. Chairman, made The Female Employees Fair Remuneration Act a dead letter or close to it. Carrying the same clause into the new legislation will make this particular section of the legislation a dead letter too. It is the easiest thing in the world to evade the purpose of the section simply by making a slight difference in the nature of the work performed, so that the section is then inoperative.

As it now stands the principle of equal pay for equal work is applicable only in the cases of jobs that are absolutely identical. I doubt very much if there was ever a case where the old Female Employees Fair Remuneration Act ever operated because, principally, of this narrow terminology. I would have hoped that the hon. Minister in re-enacting this legislation would have used language that would have meant something and would have made the principle of equal pay for equal work—with which I think most people now agree—would have made it operative.

I am therefore going to move an amendment, Mr. Chairman, which I think will broaden the language of the section in a way which will make it effective and create an opportunity for the principle to become applied in practice.

Mr. Bryden moves, seconded by Mr. Gisborn: that sub-section 1 of section 5 be amended by striking out the words "the same work" in the last line and substituting the words "work of substantially the same nature."

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the words I have proposed will give meaning to this section. It will not then be possible to differentiate and discriminate to any significant degree on the basis of very minor differences in the work performed. As long as the work is substantially the same then the principle of equal pay for equal work should apply. I know it has been suggested that the phrase "substantially the same" is not absolutely precise, which is true, but there are many phrases in the statutes of the province and other provinces which are not absolutely precise. These acquire precise meaning as they are interpreted and applied over the years.

It will be the function of the human rights commission to indicate the ranges in which it thinks the equal pay principle is clearly applicable, and for the courts, where necessary, to review the decisions the commission makes. But to give some flexibility of interpretation and some flexibility in administration, as my proposed wording would do, would give an opportunity at least to make the principle effective.

As it now stands, this section is nothing but a pious hope. It will not have any effect whatever in establishing the principle of equal pay any more than the Act which it replaces has done over the past 10 years.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour—

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, I want to speak in opposition to the proposed amendment which I think is just sheer nonsense.

First of all, if we had this amendment in as proposed we would have nothing but chaos in industry among the workers the length and breadth of this province.

Mr. Bryden: That is nonsense. It is the same wording as in other legislation.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: What does the word “substantially” mean? You would have a run on the human rights commission, who would be spending every hour of the day trying to decide the definition of “substantially” within the meaning of this section. I think it is so ridiculous it calls for no more comment.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, does this not merely demonstrate the hon. Minister’s profound ignorance. Language of that kind is used in legislation in effect, and successfully operating, in other jurisdictions. The only difference that my proposed amendment would make would be that the section would become operative whereas now it has no force, effect or significance whatsoever—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That is what you think.

Mr. Bryden: —and apparently that is the way the hon. Minister wants it. I defy him to show a case where the equal-pay principle was ever established under the legislation as it now stands. It is nothing but a dead letter or a piece of window dressing.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Thank you very much for your contribution.

Mr. Chairman: Will all those in favour of the amendment please say “aye”.

Those opposed, please say “nay.”

I declare the “nays” have it.

Section 5 agreed to.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there was a request from more than five members for a standing vote.

Mr. Chairman: They were too late.

Mr. Bryden: We may have been too early but we certainly were not too late.

Mr. Chairman: Call in the members.
I declare the amendment lost.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to bring to the attention of the House the extension of the winter works programme. Our hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has received a communication from the Honourable Michael Starr, Minister of Labour at Ottawa, advising that the government of Canada has authorized the extension of the winter works incentive programme from April 30 to May 31 this year.

I am pleased to say that this government, as a partner in the federal-provincial-municipal winter works incentive programme, has also authorized an extension of the time from April 30 to May 31.

This will permit municipalities to complete projects which were commenced under the programme and which have been delayed in many cases by the severe winter conditions we have lately experienced.

The current winter works incentive programme commenced October 15, 1961, and I may say that again this year, as has been the case for several years, there has been increased participation in the programme by our municipalities. Our records indicate that there is better than 12 per cent increase over last year in the number of jobs provided unemployed persons. Applications for winter works projects from our municipalities are being received daily showing a continued interest and with the extension of the programme for an additional month I have no doubt that the continued interest will be maintained.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister would permit a question in regard to that statement? In the budget which was introduced yesterday, it was rather interesting to note the amount set aside for winter works for next year was less than the amount for the current year. In view of the hon. Minister's statement, about the importance of winter works, would he care to explain this?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I think that when the estimates of this department are considered before the House, this will probably be explained to the satisfaction of the hon. member. I may say that we have found in the past that we have been very enthusiastic at the beginning of the season and have provided much more money than was actually used.

Each year the amount being used has increased, and each year we have tried to make the estimates more realistic. I think the hon. member will find that is the situation in this case.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), notice of which he has received. Actually there are three questions: Who are the members of the hon. Minister's committee on vertical integration of fruits and vegetables; what organizations do they represent; what are their terms of reference?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to thank the hon. member for sending me advance notice of this question.

With your permission, sir, I would just like to say that vertical integration is a matter of great concern, I am sure, to every hon. member of the House who has anything to do with agriculture in his individual riding. It is a problem for which there is no easy solution and no simple answer.

While we have suggested that as far as our government is concerned we feel we now have legislation, but if our legislation is not sufficiently strong now we propose to introduce amendments that will cause all growers to come under marketing plans that are already in existence regardless of the size of that grower's operation—when it comes to a matter of vertical integration this is something we feel we must have the very best advice on. We must take a look at it to assess all of the facts that are possible and to come up with what would appear to be an answer that would be suitable to all concerned. It is not primarily a matter for the growers' concern, although they are the ones who are vitally affected—and detrimentally affected, but it is also one of concern to the entire industry and to the agricultural economy.

So, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the hon. member's question. Our answer to the first part of his question: "Who are the members of the Minister's committee?"; is to point out that this is a Minister's committee appointed to explore the facts in relation to this matter. The chairman of the committee is Dr. H. L. Patterson, farm economics and statistics branch of The Ontario Department of Agriculture at the parliament buildings, Toronto. The secretary is G. F. Perkin, commissioner of marketing, Ontario Department of Agriculture, parliament buildings, Toronto. The members of the committee are Mr. Earl Mighton, senior purchasing agent of Campbell Soup Company Limited, New Toronto; Mr. Ben Ormseth, vice-president and general manager of Green Giant of Canada Limited, Tecumseh; Mr. J. L. H. Puddicombe, Maple Grove Fruit Orchards, Winona; Mr. Frank Parry, a vegetable grower from Chatham district and a member of the Ontario Vegetable Growers Marketing Board; Mr. Lawrence Kerr, of Kerr Farms, Chatham, Ontario; Mr. A. Dees, president of Hardee Farms International Limited, Toronto; Dr.

John Brown, secretary-treasurer, the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association, Ontario food terminal; Mr. A. G. Shantz, president of the Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association of Ontario at Richvale; Mr. Mel Tebbut, Ontario Farmers' Union, Guelph, and Mr. William Tilden, Ontario Federation of Agriculture president.

In answer to the hon. member's third question: "what are their terms of reference?" I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that these are not hard and fast terms of reference, they are terms of reference that are set down as an outline of what might be attempted or examined in the initial stages. If there are further channels that should be explored we shall be prepared to broaden their terms of reference, as this is a Minister's committee.

But our first suggested terms of reference would be this: this committee is designed primarily as a fact-finding committee.

Second, because of the present personnel, the investigations and studies will be confined to fruits and vegetables. If it is felt necessary to include other commodities, representatives with knowledge of these commodities will be added to the committee.

Third, it is suggested that the committee proceed by: (a) inviting written submissions on first, the extent of the problem in given areas; second, the reasons favouring vertical integration; third, the reasons not favouring vertical integration; and fourth, suggestions for improvements of the whole industry; (b) outlining and interpreting available information, to be assembled by research staffs, to aid in appraisal of the situation.

Fourth, appraisal of the problem by the committee with recommendations for improvement of the whole industry.

Mr. Belanger: Thanks very much.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): May I also ask the hon. Minister when he expects this committee to report? Will it be a continuing committee over a number of years, or is he going to try to get them to come to grips with the problem immediately and report to him?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I anticipated that question. I must confess that I preferred to wait for someone to ask it.

The committee has already met. Their first meeting was held on February 20. They propose to continue meeting and we have asked for an interim report; I believe it is due in the middle of April. We have asked them to do everything they can to be as far as they can on their deliberations and if possible to report to the department by mid-summer or early June.

Mr. Oliver: If the hon. Minister will excuse me; I was wondering why he has limited the examination of this problem to fruit and vegetables. Surely one logical further step would have been the broiler industry in any event, if he did not want to go any farther.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: As I said, Mr. Speaker, it is in the terms of reference that the other commodities would be examined if necessary as time went on. But we feel as far as the urgency of the matter at the moment is concerned, certainly vegetables is the commodity that is the major concern and this is where we propose to start.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask another supplementary question?

This is something we discussed many times before with regard to Ministers' committees. What opportunity is there going to be for hon. members of the House to benefit from the studies and conclusions of this committee? Will their report be made available to hon. members of the House or will we have an opportunity to meet with them—for example, before the standing committee on agriculture—or is this going to be a private report to the hon. Minister upon which we will have no detailed information?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, this is a Minister's committee and it will report to the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

House in committee of supply; Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY AND MINISTER OF CITIZENSHIP

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1601:

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship): Mr. Chairman, in dealing with vote 1601, this is the vote in which I have a particular interest. As the other votes are dealt with, there will be notice taken of some of the increases which have become necessary; but it is the increase in vote 1601 in which I have particular regard, for it is within that vote that the monies provided for the citizenship division of the department are made available and there are certain significant increases for this year.

Hon. members will recall that a year ago The Department of Citizenship was formed by bringing over to join the very small section which existed in the department, that section of the community programmes branch that also had had dealings with citizenship, especially with the teaching of English or French, as the case may be.

I am pleased to say that with the fusion of those two small sections and with no additional staff, except secretarial assistance, I have a very strong belief that the work of the division in the field of citizenship has expanded far beyond what we might have originally expected. However, we have reached the stage where in carrying out our commitments for the future we do need further assistance. So in the vote for main office, salaries and travelling expenses and maintenance, there are certain increases which are brought about by the expansion of the work of the citizenship division.

An increase in salaries is being asked which will provide the department with two liaison officers and secretarial assistance. Their appointment will necessitate travelling throughout parts of the province, and accordingly there is an increase in travelling requirements.

There is an increase of some $30,000 in the language and citizenship training section to provide for an increase in classes for special groups, such as persons in institutions, shift workers, the unemployed, both in the Metropolitan Toronto area and other parts of Ontario.

We are asking for an increase in the maintenance portion of the main office. There is a sum of approximately $45,000 in this regard in the division of citizenship to provide for additional expansion in several fields.

A year ago I announced to this House the holding of certain seminars. They were held and proved very successful indeed. Leaders of ethnic groups and community agencies and other interested persons were invited to hear the senior personnel of various government departments present the story of the work and the services of their departments, with special reference to the needs and interests of newcomers. The seminars which were held were on labour, education, health, welfare and the workmen's compensation board.

From our own observations and from the reports from various departments, and primarily from those who attended, we believe that the seminars have served a most useful and unique service within the community.

The interest which was shown was heartening indeed. The seminars started at 6.30 in the evening with a light supper provided at the cost of the department, through the facilities of the international institute. Then there were discussions by the departmental experts and then the people broke up into several panels.

It was very interesting to note the attention that was paid. Individuals sat from 6 o'clock until almost midnight interested in the discussions that took place.

It is our hope this year to do two things: to have additional seminars dealing with other departments of government and other services, and then perhaps arrange that these seminars will be held in other centres of the province of Ontario where a need for such seminars is being felt, in such areas as Hamilton, Niagara Peninsula, London—I also notice interest from the city of Ottawa in this regard. Monies are being provided for this.

The seminars provided the department with a useful compilation of information in that we were able to bring out those points which were of particular interest to those present. We are proceeding now with plans to have the basis of the discussion at these seminars published in brochures in 13 different languages. They have been selected as representative of perhaps the largest number of our newcomer groups and are related to need.

It will be a programme which will cost, with respect to these seminars, in the neighbourhood of just under $60,000. We are hopeful that it will serve a very useful purpose at this stage of the growth of our province, where so many have come to this province and there is a necessity for their integration into all aspects of our life.

We are providing in the maintenance a sum of $10,000 to carry on research. In respect of the needs, the desires, the aspirations and the procedures to be followed in the integration of the newcomers, there are a lot of ideas which have been put forward. Ideas, or expressions of opinion, are something we do not lack. We are hopeful that by applying the tested methods of research we will be able to find out in which directions the needs are the greatest and in which direction the return for dollars expended will pay the greatest benefits.

There is additional provision for the holding of exhibitions which we have found to be most useful and for translations, the demand for which is growing continuously.

There are a couple of matters which I should like to refer to directly in which the department has taken active participation.

I remind the House again, Mr. Chairman, of the participation of this department in the teaching of English by television in co-operation with other interested groups in the city. Those hon. members who may have had the opportunity of seeing the programme on Saturday and Sunday at noon will have seen the unique methods which have been developed in this field.

This is the first time anywhere in the world where there has been an attempt to teach a language by this media to persons who do not understand any words of the language which is being taught. The cost to the department of this programme will be some $7,000. It will have consisted of 78 half-hour programmes over CBLT.

It is in this area that we are also doing research work to determine the effectiveness of this media. The cost of $7,000 to the department, we feel, is a very negligible one indeed. I would imagine that the estimated cost of this programme on television, the whole cost, would be well over $100,000, perhaps into several hundreds of thousands of dollars.

I say this on behalf of those in the department who played a great role in bringing about this co-operation. Had it not been for the spark of the individuals within the department working very closely with the organization META, this programme would not have come off. I think it will be one of the outstanding achievements of this department, provided our research proves its effectiveness. But certainly it was an indication of how groups could get together to co-operate in this and I remind the House, Mr. Chairman, that the supporting agencies, in addition to our own division, were the Canadian Scene, of which I have spoken at some length on previous occasions in the House; the citizenship branch of the federal Department of Citizenship and Immigration; and of course META and the station.

Another example of co-operative action involving a community welfare agency, charitable foundations and two levels of government, is a special project of The International Institute—an institute, Mr. Chairman, which is doing outstanding work in the field of citizenship and in the field of making people welcome to our city and to our province. I will not go into the detail of the work at this time except I should like to make mention of Mrs. Nell West and Wing-Commander Harry Forbell as the persons most vitally concerned in the institute work and who are doing an outstanding job.

The field of co-operation that I referred to and the people participating are as follows:

the Laidlaw Foundation is providing $12,000; the Macnamara Foundation, $1,500; the federal citizenship branch, $2,500; and our own branch, $2,500; each for two years, to operate a special branch of the International Institute in the area of Toronto settled primarily by newcomers. Its job will be to study the welfare needs of these newcomers, to acquaint them with the services of all community agencies, especially those financed by the United Appeal and, if necessary, to recommend such changes in the pattern of services as may seem necessary in order to draw these newcomers more fully into the total life of Metropolitan Toronto.

And again, Mr. Chairman, I say, with due respect to all participants, that it was the active interest and the spark of men and women within the citizenship division which encouraged the International Institute to approach all these agencies to bring about this co-operative effort.

In respect to the research project which I have mentioned, I should like also to make reference in detail to the work of one agency which grew out of our seminar on education. I refer to the Centro Organizzativo Sevole Tecniche Italiane, known as COSTI.

One of the participants in the seminars was Father Carraro of St. Helen's Church, on Dundas Street West, which has a very large Italian membership. The problems raised by Father Carraro at the seminar led to the formation of a three-man committee, consisting of Father Carraro, Mr. Graham Gore, assistant superintendent of secondary education in Toronto, the director of citizenship in our department, and later other members—Mr. Arthur Pigott of the Canadian Association of Adult Education, and Mrs. West, of whom I have made reference, from the International Institute; Miss Charity Grant of the federal citizenship branch—were added to this committee.

The role of this committee was to devise a scheme for educational upgrading, and vocational training for Italian immigrants whom Father Carraro undertook to assemble and register. As a result, some 300 Italian young men were tested, registered and sent to special courses in two Toronto secondary schools. This again was the result of excellent co-operation between an ethnic group, the officials of the Toronto Board of Education, and our citizenship division.

I shall not go into the details, Mr. Chairman, at this time, of our teaching of language, apart from the reference I have made to the work of META on television, except to say that I had the pleasure this summer of speaking to a group of students who were graduating from one of our summer classes. Summer classes achieve two purposes; they provide classes for students to attend in the summer time, and they also provide a method by which we can train and teach teachers to teach English to newcomers.

I was very much interested that one of the students who participated in the graduating proceedings, Mr. Edgar Reich, quoted a poem. It may not rank with the poetry that has come down through the centuries throughout the world, or in our own homeland, but I was very much interested to see what a student of basic English could compose, and I quote as follows:

We all came to Canada,
Biggest of all free lands,
To share in all its promises
And the freedom for which it stands.

Though sometimes suffering heartache,
For those we left behind,
We'll always do our very best
In any job we find.

Canada gives us freedom,
Our old customs to retain;
May we always use them wisely
And new Canadian customs gain.

We're learning to speak Canadian
As our Canadian neighbours do,
So we can take our rightful place,
Being Canadians strong and true.

May Canada in the future
Turn to us with rightful pride,
And say she's very happy
She welcomed us inside.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, I have always admired the poetry in the soul of the hon. Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Yaremko), but really what the newcomers to this country are concerned about is not poetry but action. And I would say, at the start of these remarks, the department that he is heading always impresses me with a certain irony, because the work that he—and I think he is trying to achieve with great sincerity—really should have been started a long time ago. It is something like having a small boat which is brought down to the seashore with great fanfare to be launched, only to find that the tide has ebbed, and there is not much water around to make use of the boat.

The tide, in connection with people in this country, unfortunately is ebbing. I think we are all deeply concerned that the ratio of immigration to emigration in Canada is to the advantage of emigration. And, of course, this is of great concern.

I remember a number of years ago that a certain gentleman perceived the necessity for immigration; and he said: "If I get into office I can assure you that we are going to populate or perish." That gentleman is known for making a number of such statements which he has not kept. As we all know, I refer to the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada, John Diefenbaker, when he was speaking to a group of ethnic editors and had been asked a question on immigration. "Populate or perish," he said. Well, he certainly is a man of gloom if he looks at the figures of immigration today. They are the lowest they have been for many years.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, perhaps you may not see fit to make a ruling on this, but I bring to your attention that there is nothing in the estimates of The Department of Provincial Secretary on immigration. This is a department that deals with citizenship.

Mr. Thompson: I was talking on citizenship.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am just bringing up a point of order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, surely when one talks about citizenship, one cannot ignore the stuff that makes citizenship—which is the immigrants to Canada.

I agree with the hon. Minister (Mr. Yaremko) that it may be hard to find a number of them now, and therefore he does not want to talk too much about it. This is the very purpose of his department; and if he is not going to talk about immigrants and immigration, why on earth is he even standing up as the hon. Minister of Citizenship?

Now what is the citizenship branch doing? Last year the hon. Minister of Citizenship told us that there was a Department of Citizenship Act and it described the purposes of the citizenship department. He said that the Act specifies that the Minister, and I am quoting now from Hansard:

The Minister shall initiate action not only on his own but in co-operation with other Ministers in the government of Ontario, within the public service of Canada, at the municipal level and with other organizations. The department will develop as a channel through which communication can be established, and action taken, and information provided to all, so as to make their citizenship more meaningful.

Further on, he said:

The branch will also study the problems of newcomers requiring information in reference to other departments, and the staff will be able to handle requests in 12 languages.

And then, in referring to these departments further on, he describes them:

I would think that the following branches would have a contribution to make: apprenticeship branch—

I would like to repeat that: “apprenticeship branch” was one which would have a contribution to make.

—operating engineers, fair employment practices: minimum wages—

I would like to repeat that: “minimum wages.”

—anti-discrimination, workmen’s compensation, and I think it would be advisable to have a representative of the national employment services.

He is referring to the seminars, about which I congratulate him, mentioning the kind of problems that could be discussed. Well, sir, I would like to come to these problems, a little later.

But first let me say that he talked about the classes in English or French. I appreciate he recognized the two national languages of our country. One question, sir, which I would appreciate if the hon. Minister would answer at a later time, is: how many language classes has he in Ontario, for newcomers, in which French is taught?

Another question, what is the fall-out of the students who attend the classes? I suspect there is great deal of garnishing with respect to stating the number of people attending classes. But the real emphasis should be placed on how many go through the classes; who attend them right to the end. And I would appreciate if the hon. Minister, through his department, would let us know the number of people who have fully attended the course on learning English.

Another question in connection with language classes: I would be interested in knowing if he has a particular course on citizenship, if he is still continuing that, and how many people attend that course. And secondly, if he has been able to make an arrangement with the courts, the citizenship courts, that they will acknowledge graduates who take the citizenship class.

I would be interested in knowing about the kitchen groups about which he talked. They were experimenting last year in having classes in kitchens for mothers, and I wonder how successful they have been. I am taking advantage as I am talking now, sir, and I hope the hon. Minister will not mind; I am looking anxiously at him—I realize there are a number of questions and I am wondering whether he is noting these down. I would suggest he do so if he has not made a note of them.

The other thing that interested me was that he talked about the TV programmes teaching English. I must say that we on this side have urged that such experimentation should take place; we have been asking for two years that this experiment should be tried. But I would say that I had hoped, when they were going to try the experiment of teaching English to newcomers through TV, that they would use some horse sense and common sense in the method by which they went about it. And I would think that the hon. Minister knows, I am sure he knows as well as I, that many of the newcomers who would want to take advantage of a TV course are also God-fearing people and attend the churches of their choice. And, as I understand it, his TV course is at noon on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: On Saturdays and on Wednesdays.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I am particularly referring to the Sunday time. I would say that the noon period may be a reason why he is not getting as many people to watch the programme. On the other hand, I would be interested in knowing whether the hon. Minister could tell me if there is any way of knowing what the numbers are who are watching. I would suspect that on a Sunday there would not be as many watching, and I question whether that was an advisable time to have it; but I am sure the hon. Minister has checked, and will have the information for us.

I notice where the hon. Minister wants increased estimates in order to have two liaison officers. I am not sure specifically what these people are going to do. There is a federal citizenship branch. I would appreciate it if the hon. Minister would be good enough to spell out in concrete terms just what they are going to do. I would suggest that when this citizenship branch was launched the purposes that were suggested did not appear to be particularly concrete.

I do not blame the hon. Minister for the launching; he took it over after it was sinking; but it was launched on a sea of tea, Mr. Chairman. There were going to be tea parties, and the gallant man who was going to launch this told us he knew there were tea parties around but he could not exactly tell us where they were. The hon. Minister has brought the thing down to more concrete terms; I must be fair to him in that.

But I still suggest that it is not concrete enough. I had read that he was going to try to explain the apprenticeship branch to newcomers. How can he explain this to many newcomers across this fair land of ours when he must be embarrassed by the barriers imposed through The Apprenticeship Act? It is not permitting newcomers to take advantage of apprenticeship training. He knows this very well; for he referred to Father Carraro.

As I understand it, and I may be wrong, it was the hon. Minister's department which was keen in pushing this training, and he was quite uncomfortable and embarrassed when he found that there was this difficulty in the part of The Apprenticeship Act. I suspect that the hon. Minister himself is very keen that there will be opportunities for retraining of newcomers under Schedule 5, and I urge him, because I feel he is keen on this, I urge him to do everything he can to see that the Act is changed.

I have just put in a bill in connection with the age limit; also there must be recognition given to the background of the immigrant before he comes to Canada. I gave the figures of the group, to the hon. Prime Minister—I think they are in the hon. Minister's own riding—who were hoping to take retraining. And then they find, after their hopes have certainly been raised by the action of The Department of Education, they find that unfortunately they can only take English but not the practical training.

I know the hon. Minister himself personally is disappointed, as we were, and as those men were, when this took place. And I am sure that the hon. Minister will do everything to make citizenship concrete, to make the programme concrete. Because, sir, as well as talking of the glories of Canadian citizenship—it is certainly a wonderful thing to have—the means to feel the satisfaction of being a Canadian surely rest on a number of aspects. One of the most important is the opportunity to work.

And I know the hon. Minister must be as concerned as many of us at the number of newcomers, and indeed the number of Canadians, who are out of work. He stated last year that he had a counselling service in his department. I would suggest that the greatest counselling that could be given to many immigrants who are keen to get a job is counselling as to where they could get a job—whether it is with the extended winter works programme, whether it is building hospitals, or whatever it is. It would cure much of the unhappiness and much of the difficulty of integrating into Canada, if there was work for people.

I have every day, in a little office on Bloor Street, men coming to me saying they would do anything to get work; they want to work in the public works programme. And some of them with bitterness, sir, say: "You know we came to this country because we heard it was a land of opportunity. We want to be citizens, we want to live here, but how can we when we can't even provide for our children?"

So I would suggest that tied in, in fact one of the cornerstones of citizenship work that the hon. Minister could be doing, is to encourage his hon. colleagues to start more public works programmes, to really seriously look at the unemployment picture, particularly as to how it affects many of our new arrivals. I suspect there is still a certain cynicism on the part of some of the hon. members when you tell them that there are men unemployed through the winter; that they have the feeling it is because they are shiftless. The hon. Minister knows as well as I do the great number of people who came here, who came with hope in their heart for a better future; they want work.

Next, I notice that the hon. Minister has talked about safety as one of the areas which he might explain to the newcomer. I am talking about the previous speech of the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I was talking about the seminars that we were going to hold.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, in talking about the seminars; I had asked the hon. Minister a question during last year's estimates with respect to safety, and the hon. Minister said this was an area that he himself was deeply concerned about.

Well, as the McAndrew report mentions, covering the aspect of interpreting safety legislation to the newcomer, it was badly needed to have safety regulations and the rights of the newcomer printed in three languages. I know the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) has read this report thoroughly and is probably considering this. I think there were three languages suggested in the McAndrew report.

I notice that one of the points of emphasis that the hon. Minister makes is that he is going to interpret not only the regulations and the laws of this province, he is going to see it gets known by the new people across our land. Well, I would suggest that the greatest help for him would be to read the McAndrew report and to follow its suggestions.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have read it.

Mr. Thompson: And is the hon. Minister going to follow the suggestions? That is, by translating safety regulations and the rights of the workers into the three languages suggested? What is the hon. Minister going to do about it; that is the question I raise, because I feel there is a terrible susceptibility on the part of the hon. Ministers on the other side to read but not take action. We have been waiting a long time for this action. I know that the hon. Minister is concerned; I know he is concerned; but we want to see more than concern; we want to see action.

I shall move to another point the hon. Minister was going to explain in his seminars. I congratulate him on his seminars and I congratulate him on the contents that he was going to discuss. One point was minimum wages. What a tragedy to discuss minimum wages to men for whom there is no minimum wage Act. What one earth was discussed?

When the next seminars are held I will supply some of the people gladly with information on the inequality of wages for many men in this country, examples of the exploitation of immigrants. I will supply that for the seminar. From these seminars we hope to get action. And I would hope that the hon. Minister, realizing that citizenship can be emphasized through concrete action, will be urging a minimum wage Act in order that there will not be exploitation of immigrants.

Let me come to another point—welfare. I must say I do feel personally very strongly about this, because this is one area about which I get a large number of people coming to me in my little office. They are apprehensive, first of all, about applying to the welfare offices. They do not really want welfare; they want a chance of a job. And when they do not get a job, in desperation, because of their families, they have to apply for welfare.

There are people, and I am thinking again of newcomers, who because of language barriers, because of a tradition of fear towards bureaucracy, are concerned and apprehensive about going for welfare to which they should be entitled. They are, in fact, concerned about going to any government office.

Does the government office ease the lot of these people? Has the hon. Minister, with his concern of interpreting services, has he thought that he might get this right down to the point that when a man applies to a civil service office, and cannot speak the language, he should have adequate interpreters there?

The hon. Minister, as I have, has been with newcomers; I am thinking of a particular group of newcomers, almost 200,000 of them, and they are paying taxes. They have worked and built many parts of this city and this province; and then, because of hard circumstances, economic circumstances beyond their control, they turn to this government—which, I am sure, as much as the federal government, has invited them, encouraged them and welcomed them here—and they go to an office provided, supposedly by the government, to assist people in need.

I have gone with some of those people, and I have watched the difficulty they have had; I have watched the lengthy time they have had to wait.

I had a man in my office yesterday. His face is scarred from an accident on his job. He has got new tissue placed around his face. His hands are burned. This man, for the last nine months, has been trying to get some work. He gets something like $29 a month from the workmen's compensation. He has got a family of two young children.

He came to me yesterday. He had been going around trying to get work; he picks up an odd job here and there, he will do anything. Believe me, this is the point that irritates me.

I have listened sometimes to men, comfortable, complacent, saying that really the jobless are a shiftless lot. I would like them just to go out to meet some of the people who are jobless and realize the tremendous need and desire they have for work.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. member has never heard any man in this House say a thing of that kind.

Mr. Thompson: Sir, I will tell you this. It crossed my mind, when the hon. Minister was talking about the need for people to get work, that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) suggested that really there is not that much need because he put an advertisement in the paper applying for some kind of a cow herder or goat herder, for whatever kind of animals he keeps on his farm there, and he said no one had answered the ad. I have listened—I do not know if this is familiar to you or to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, but there has been a reference to people who want to talk about reality; that they are prophets of gloom and doom. In other words, there is the suggestion in some quarters that everything is rosy and happy. I notice the hon. Minister smiles; it rings a little bell with him.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I look at the hon. member's rosy cheeks and see that that may be completely wrong.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I feel uncomfortable that I have put on so much weight.

But, sir, I would like to say that I do feel very strongly about this. The services are not being properly staffed in order that people who do not speak the language can get the compassionate attention that they need. This man who came to my office yesterday told me he hated going down to the welfare office; first of all, because he had dignity; he wanted to get a job, but secondly he hated going down there because no one understood him.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Which welfare office is that?

Mr. Thompson: This is the welfare office in my riding.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Operated by whom?

Mr. Thompson: Operated by the city, but the hon. Minister's department gives grants for it, and I think that if they give grants they should have certain standards. I admire very much the work that the people are doing down there, but I still think—. The hon. Minister was at a banquet with me the other night at which this was emphasized again; that where we have a large group paying taxes, helping to work and to build up this city and this province, surely when they see the needs that they have, rightful rights that should be given to them, the hon. Minister through his department, with his experts on interpreting these rights, should see that the government agencies are properly staffed in order that when a man comes in he gets adequate attention to provide his rights.

I am suggesting, sir, that these government agencies are not being staffed properly and efficiently, particularly where you have a large segment of the population that speak one particular language and are struggling to learn English. You need to get more representatives of those people in government services.

I would like to suggest this, sir, because this is all part of citizenship, the struggle of the newcomer to integrate. If he has not got a job, if he does not understand his rights, if he is concerned about an adequate wage, and if there is no protection for him to get an adequate wage, and if he is exploited when he is in dire need, if he cannot interpret his need to people, surely citizenship to him and talk of citizenship is very empty. That is why I am sure that the hon. Minister himself, who says that he is going to work with other government departments, will not only work with them but will get them to push forward for some action in order that there really will be equal opportunity.

I want to just emphasize again; the hon. Minister has talked about his teaching English, and I would hope, sir, that as well as teaching English he will emphasize vocational training. Now, I know the hon. Minister does not want me to talk about immigration but I somehow cannot disassociate his department with immigrants even though he might see that there is a disassociation. It seems to me that his department should have some connection with immigration. I do not know that he agrees with me, but to me it is rather apparent that the purpose of his department is in connection with the integration of immigrants.

I would like to say, sir, that the hon. federal Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) has said that the skilled will be allowed to come to Canada and this is how their selective process will be. So we know that the skilled from countries which, probably during the past 4 or 5 years, enjoyed better management than ours are now enjoying prosperity. I am speaking of the industrial countries, and in particular the European Common Market group.

We, unfortunately, have not had, in some cases, the enlightened dynamic leadership in our country in connection with our economic affairs that they have, and therefore there will not be the same attraction for skilled immigrants from those countries to come to Canada. So if the government wants skilled immigrants, it is going to have to go to rural areas and overpopulated areas. If it is going to attract these people who have skills to come we have got to make some provision for adapting them into our economy; I would suggest, sir, that in connection with the citizenship branch it would be well to look at the experience in West Germany, for they are bringing immigrants in, from Italy, for example, and as they are adapting them into the economy and into industry they are training them.

I suggest, sir, that some people may say: Why should we train newcomers? But as the economy starts to develop again and is developing again, I would think we need more people. I think the hon. Minister believes this very strongly.

If we are going to invite more people, we are going to have to provide some kind of a retraining programme for them. That is why I think it is so important a decision that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has to make now if he is going to provide retraining—should it be more than just English language training—retraining in connection with vocational skills.

His ruling is going to affect the way the province is going to cope with the influx of people. I suggest that the hon. Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Yaremko), because of his departmental responsibilities and his own personal sentiments, is close to the problems of many of these people. I suggest he urge the hon. Prime Minister and Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) to think very carefully before he holds fast to that decision in connection with retraining.

I have just two other questions on which I would like to hear from the hon. Minister. I notice that he says that he gets, I think it is, 25 ethnic papers on his desk. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, I read 12 every week. We get about 40, I think, in the department.

Mr. Thompson: I see. The question I am interested in is why does the hon. Minister get 40 of these papers? Are these translated and to whom do the translations go and for what purposes?

On my other question: I enjoyed it very much when the hon. Prime Minister came near my riding and spoke to an ethnic group a little while ago. It was an inspiring speech he gave and it showed his detailed knowledge of the group. He either has a fantastic memory—sure he is fantastic in many ways, but in his memory particularly, I thought, because he pointed out by name people who live both in the riding of the hon. Minister and myself.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I thought it was a good speech too.

Mr. Thompson: It was a good speech. I would be interested in knowing who wrote it, that is really the question to which I am coming. I have a strong suspicion that the citizenship branch could be used for political purposes—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Who wrote Pickersgill's speeches when he was Minister?

An hon. member: Mr. Pickersgill did not need anyone to write his speeches.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How many have been written for Mr. Pearson?

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Pearson is very apt at writing his own speeches. I would like to point out—I do not think the hon. Prime Minister sees this—I am not a civil servant so that if I had to write a speech for Mr. Pearson—which, of course, is completely unnecessary—but if I had to, I would be doing it quite legitimately since I am not a civil servant. That is why I ask the question regarding this very informed, good talk on the part of the hon. Prime Minister, with the knowledge he showed of the names, with his fluency in Lithuanian as well—for which I should congratulate him—interspersed with greetings in Lithuanian. I understand he will be doing the same thing in other languages.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: He is a very accomplished man.

Mr. Thompson: Indeed he is. The citizenship branch, I hope, will never become a little extra department of the hon. Prime Minister's political office—the political office of the hon. Minister.

Now the hon. Minister may say, as the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) said: "Andy, that does not become you". The only reason I had just a small seed of suspicion was that I remember at the previous election, the last election we had, when I thought I would go down to the C.N.E. and try to make myself known that an affair that was taking place—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: A non-political affair.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, a non-political affair! But here I saw what the taxpayers of this province were providing, a great, big sign with—I must say he is a very good-looking man—with a picture of the hon. Minister of Citizenship—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The sign was big but the picture was smaller than the hon. member is showing.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I have also noticed that there are many pictures in advertisements in the ethnic papers—perhaps they have eased off now—but for a period there was a flurry of these pictures through all the language papers. They would be talking about the problems of the newcomers and then they would look at a picture of the hon. Minister.

How is the picture of the hon. Minister associated with interpreting their problems? I would be interested in knowing if the citizenship branch is a branch that wants to give concrete action in helping newcomers towards citizenship. I feel the hon. Minister is a man with a lyrical tongue, a man with a deep sense of poetry—he has a place in our society, believe me, as a poet. My question is, has he a place in our government as the Minister of Citizenship?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member poses so many questions, I cannot even begin to remember all of them, and all because I brought to his attention we had a staff of nine people and we were going to ask for funds for an additional two, which will bring our staff to 11. Including the deputy Minister of Citizenship and myself, that makes 13.

If we were to tackle one hundredth of the the problems involving all levels of government which the hon. member has posed to me, we would be very busy indeed within this one field for the next year. I can tell hon. members that we have more than our hands full operating the plans of our department without telling the local governments or other governments what they should do.

I was very much interested in some of the remarks of the hon. member. In reference to the political purposes that the department may be put to, I can assure him that The Department of Citizenship is devoted utterly, completely and solely to the integration of newcomers and citizenship generally in this province. I might have thought that perhaps the hon. member was speaking from personal experience. He is one of the few men in this province who is in politics that was himself, I believe, a liaison officer with the federal Department of Citizenship.

I remember so well, in those days, meeting the hon. member as a civil servant at various gatherings and wondering what the job of that particular section was. I must confess that I never could put my finger on one concrete thing in those days that the federal Department of Citizenship was doing in integration. I suggest to the hon. member that the most forward steps have been taken by this government in actual concrete programmes.

Mr. Thompson: We worked very closely, in co-operation with the provincial government.

The citizenship branch had many language classes and seminars at Couchiching and if they were not concrete things—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I know the hon. member's sincere interest in this problem, because I knew him as a civil servant. I picked up the paper and I saw that the hon. member had resigned from the service, he was out of it. I thought: at last, in protest to the fact that that government was not doing what he thinks it should, he had resigned.

But then there was a coincidence. It happened that a change of government took place and the hon. member went from The Department of Citizenship and Immigration to be liaison officer for the hon. leader of the Opposition. That was the closest and the quickest transformation I have ever witnessed.

Mr. Thompson: On a point of privilege, first of all the hon. Minister suggests my motive, which I do not think—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I never suggested a motive at all. I was telling about the misapprehension I had been under.

Mr. Thompson: I see.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I would never suggest any motive to the hon. member.

Mr. Thompson: The basis, sir, of my transfer, or my leaving the department, was because—I did not realize this at the time, but I do now. I left a department which was active, with many immigrants coming in. Today, unfortunately, there are not quite as many immigrants, it is not quite as active as it was in the boom days of practical immigration policy under the Liberal government.

I did not go directly from the citizenship branch to work for the leader of the—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: To CBC!

Mr. Thompson: I went to the CBC.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Oh, yes, why did the hon. member work there?

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate the hon. Minister knows as much about this—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I was very interested in the hon. member's interest in immigration, as I have definitely—and have been all my life, as the hon. member knows—been interested in immigration, although that does not come within the jurisdiction of The Department of Citizenship. I was interested in seeing the hon. member's tremendous interest in the present department and the work he would like to see it undertake. I was in this House less than two years ago and the hon. member stood there and scoffed at the idea of The Department of Citizenship in Ontario. The hon. member said on February 22, 1960, on page 593 of Hansard:

It was not until a little later that I started to think—

I am under the impression that the hon. member really thinks all the time—

An hon. member: That is a lot better than the hon. Minister does!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: This was a method of expression.

—that I started to think: "Surely citizenship is a federal matter. It is a federal concern, and the Ontario government should not move in to establish Ontario citizens."

But we certainly have enough work to do, now we have.

An hon. member: He is broadminded.

Mr. Thompson: I stand on a point of privilege. This has been quoted out of context. I was talking of the actual granting of citizenship—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Oh, the hon. member is not against The Department of Citizenship for the province of Ontario.

Mr. Thompson: I suggested to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that he should get busy—he quoted me as saying that: It is a great and wonderful thing for idle hands to get busy. I see many things they can do.

But when I spoke previously about the confusion between the federal and provincial area of citizenship, I was referring to the actual granting of citizenship which I still think should be—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am glad the hon. member has clarified it for me, because for two years I have been under the misapprehension he was opposed to the division, but now I can—

An hon. member: The hon. Minister is under many misapprehensions.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I will just take a moment on immigration, just a moment. I have three clippings, one is of December 19, 1960:

MORE IMMIGRANTS OUR NEED, FROST

I will just read the heading of that clipping. I will read some other clippings:

IMMIGRANTS ROBBING US OF JOBS

Ottawa: H. W. Herridge, CCF Kootenay West, complained in the Commons yesterday that immigrants were taking Canadians' jobs.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That is out of context, if anything ever was.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is one. Now from the Toronto Daily Star of May 25, 1960:

LIBERAL CHARGE FAVOUR IMMIGRANTS OVER JOBLESS

A Liberal MP charged yesterday that the government is luring immigrants to Canada with jobs that could be filled by our own unemployed.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): What was his name?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Now those are—that was Mr. Alex Carron, of Hull.

I am just giving hon. members the attitudes of three people: the province of Ontario, through the then hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost); a CCF member, and a Liberal member.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): What is the hon. Minister's view? Why are there not more immigrants right now?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I believe in more immigrants. I am delighted to see that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has finally at this stage of his life—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege. I recall very vividly making a speech in this Legislature approximately a year ago.

An hon. member: Absolutely!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It took the hon. leader of the Opposition many years to get around to it, a great many years.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Oh, go on! The hon. Minister is the one who can do something about it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am glad I can give credit to the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) for one thing—I will give him credit for that—he was able to persuade a little change of heart in the people that sit beside him to call for action, action with regard to immigrants.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Why does the hon. Minister not take action now to provide more jobs?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There was a Liberal government. Action? Action on immigrants? There was a Liberal government in power for 22 years and I stood in this House year in and year out and I badgered the Minister of Welfare—of course, I should not use the word “badgered” because he had the most sympathetic ear that I ever could get at—

Mr. MacDonald: But he had a tough Cabinet, like the hon. Minister has.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —to get Ottawa to change the residence rule for qualification for old age pensions, for example. For 20 years, and delegation after delegation, and members stood up in this House and said to Ottawa: give us some action, let us treat these immigrants fairly and squarely. Can hon. members imagine a man coming here at the age of 60 and waiting 20 years, to the age of 80, to get the pension—

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Can the hon. Minister imagine anybody coming here?

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Would the hon. Minister permit a question? Did he not say earlier in the debate that he thought this matter of immigration should not be discussed?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am answering a question. He wanted action and I am just telling him about the action.

Mr. Thompson: If I could ask a question, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. Minister wants to talk about immigration, the action that hon. members judge is in the terms of the number of people who come in. Hon. members know as well as I do that immigration under the Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker and the Conservatives has been the smallest that we have had—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Under charges by members of the hon. member's party that immigrants were taking away jobs—

Mr. Thompson: I could refer to many quotes—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I want to answer questions! Regard for the welfare of the newcomer—that is what we are talking about.

The hon. member, I believe, has an honest and sincere desire for the welfare of the immigrant. But there was a change in government in Ottawa and I was very much interested in reading in the ethnic papers, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Whicher: In what language?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: In a dozen—in Italian, in Polish, in Ukrainian and in Slovak. I was reading ads—ads placed by Liberal candidates on the eve of the 1957 election. And after having heard the Minister of Welfare talk and myself talk and others talk against the residence requirements of 20 years, I was delighted to see in some of the ads by some of the Liberal candidates—mind you, in small print, the print was not very big—you had to look closely, that at that stage they advocated a residence reduction.

Mr. Thompson: I do not think the hon. Minister is quite clear as to what my question is. I never suggested to him that I wanted to know if he spends his time reading the ads in the ethnic papers. I did not want to embarrass him by letting him tell he was doing this.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I read everything.

Mr. Thompson: What I want to know is the reason for the hon. Minister's reading.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, finally there was a change in government and the residence rule was reduced by half, from 20 to 10 years. One of the greatest welfare steps taken in respect of newcomers was that reduction of residence brought in by that government.

The hon. member talked about welfare. Another great step, and it is too bad that he is not in this House, was taken by the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) on behalf of the province of Ontario—

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, what about the estimates?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. member brought this up.

Mr. Thompson: My question, sir, was how the hon. Minister—

Mr. Chairman: Order! The hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Bryden: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. Minister has the floor,

I suggest that he should stay in order. He is roaming all over the lot under the guise of answering questions that were never asked.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Roaming all over the lot! The hon. member had me involved in the affairs of all levels of government, all boards, all agencies—and I am answering the question.

Mr. MacDonald: No, the hon. Minister is not answering the question.

Mr. Thompson: On a point of information—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am just about to give the hon. member the information.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, I have been waiting a long time to hear it and I think I clarified my point again. My questions were—I do not want to go through all of them—but in connection with welfare in the provincial government, I want to know what the hon. Minister is doing with respect to interpreting the services, not only through the foreign-language papers but through the seminars and also personnel in welfare offices.

I am not talking ten years back, sir, or about the things that are done in Ottawa. He said he did not want to talk about immigration, so I appreciated he would not want to, and I left that out.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. member went to great lengths to talk about immigration. We will talk about this government and the province of Ontario and welfare. Early in 1959 the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) came out—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, this is becoming ludicrous. A specific question has been asked and I suggest that all we request is a specific answer.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. Minister of Public Welfare brought forth a programme that newcomer indigents would be treated exactly the same as anybody else in Ontario. The hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) was the only one in this city who scoffed at the programme at that time.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of information, and on a point of order as well—

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member will get no information from him.

Mr. Thompson: I do not know if the hon. Minister, in reading the many languages, has misunderstood English now. I think I have asked, as it will show, a number of questions. Now, sir, if the hon. Minister decides to—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If the hon. member will stop interrupting me, I will get around to it.

Mr. Thompson: If he finds it so embarrassing he cannot answer them, please tell us and I will not ask any more, but if he can answer them, then let him try it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, it is not the questions that are embarrassing me, it is my answers that are embarrassing the hon. member.

Mr. Chairman, as to teaching French in classes, we have—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am treating the hon. member's question seriously; please treat my answer the same way.

There is one class, I believe, in Timmins, and we have had a request recently from Moose Factory. Our position is this: if any group of newcomers is within a community and indicates a desire for the learning of French, then we will provide the classes the same as we provide any. We will also provide the resource material and everything else; the facilities are available for the teaching of French the same as they are in English. If the interest and demand within the community is there we will supply them.

As a measure of the appreciation that The Department of Citizenship and Immigration has for our activities, the courts may, and do, accept our certificate as proof of sufficiency in English and citizenship; and I am delighted to say that our relationships with the court of citizenship here are excellent.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask, sir—and I appreciate the hon. Minister answering these questions—how many people got their citizenship graduating certificate from his classes last year?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have not that figure here, but I will be delighted to get that for the hon. member.

I would say this in respect to the students who take our classes: we are interested in everybody who shows up in our classes, we will do everything possible to maintain his interest, but if for some other reason he feels that he should drop out we do not wield the big stick to force him to stay.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Does the hon. Minister encourage them to stay?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We do everything possible to get them to classes; we do everything possible to create classes for their needs; and we do everything possible to encourage them to stay. If circumstances—

Mr. Thompson: I want to know, sir, apart from your programme, what is the fall-out in these classes? I never suggested the hon. Minister used a big stick to force people. What is the fall-out in these classes?

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): There are those here, other than the hon. member opposite, who are interested in hearing the reply of the hon. Minister and I wonder if he would have the common courtesy and grace to let the hon. Minister finish a question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The numbers getting certificates are, I believe, well over 2,000.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, if I am to answer all the questions of the hon. member, I must proceed.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, but I am simply trying to make—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We do not categorize how many stay one day, or 10 days, or two weeks, or six weeks, or eight weeks. We have not got that kind of computation.

Mr. Thompson: Would the hon. Minister mind me making—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: And we are doing our—

Mr. Chairman: I must proceed with the estimates.

Mr. Thompson: My point, sir, is that it would be useful to know—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is why we have taken the forward step of having research monies available, in order to be able to re-study all these needs. In respect of kitchen classes, we had about 100 participants in the kitchen classes last year. They were very expensive to operate because of the fact that there were only four or five individuals involved. It was done in conjunction with the social planning council, in an effort to get as much value for every educational dollar that we have spent. We have no classes this year.

Mr. Thompson: Is the hon. Minister going to continue with these classes?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We are going to go wherever we feel there is a need and will get a good return for our dollar. If a dollar can be spent somewhere else more beneficially, in an attempt at teaching, this is where the dollar will be spent.

Mr. Thompson: There are not many of those classes?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There are no classes at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, to indicate how far the hon. member roved, he attempted to—perhaps I am using too strong language—heap scorn or something upon this department, to put them in a derogatory light, in the fact that the TV classes were held at 12 noon, Sunday. I could tell him the times that I would choose, the premium times that could be available, but the time is designated by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which, I must admit, in this instance, and I indicated at the time, is already contributing well over $200,000. They have been very generous indeed in this light.

Mr. Thompson: But the hon. Minister is not completely satisfied with the time; is that what he is inferring?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister would prefer another time if he could get it? He is not satisfied with this time?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Everybody knows about premium time.

Mr. Chairman, I think that I have completely answered the hon. member's questions.

Mr. Thompson: If the hon. Minister does not mind, I do not think he has. I have asked him, for example, about the safety regulations in the McAndrew report. I think it does affect the hon. Minister; he is looking after the interpreting services. He has held a seminar on minimum wages. I asked what came out of that seminar and what suggestions were made. Is he going to promote the cause of minimum wages? When he had the seminar did people urge it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, our job is to co-operate with other departments. We do not run the affairs of other departments or other levels of government.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. Minister what is the point of having the seminar on the problem of another department? Why does he call it if he is not going to do something about this, the result of his seminar?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The point of having seminars, and I quote from a letter of one of the reverend ministers who attended, and I quote as follows:

Your department is to be congratulated on initiating these seminars which have provided excellent guidance and vital information to the representatives of the various ethnic groups in our city.

That is the purpose of the seminar.

Mr. Thompson: I leave it at that, sir. I had hoped that from these seminars, as the hon. Minister said in his speech last year and as he said in his speech this year in his introductory remarks, he got a great number of suggestions to which he was giving consideration; and I had hoped the minimum wage was the one he would give great consideration to.

The other point is that, under retraining, I have asked the hon. Minister what the situation was under Schedule 5 for the retraining of people with vocational skills from another land. I think the hon. Minister knows to what I am referring—the effect of these classes and the fact that the decision has been that it will only be academic material that will be taught, that vocational skills will not be taught. Is the hon. Minister going to stay with that decision or is he hoping to change it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, the estimates of The Department of the Provincial Secretary are up before this committee; I cannot and do not run other departments.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I would like to say that the hon. Minister is running classes for newcomers. He has spent some time telling us about how useful these classes are. My question is: does the hon. Minister think it would be more useful, in the contents of these classes, to include some vocational material, vocational skills material, and if so, what is he going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, that comes within other jurisdiction—our job is to provide classes for the teaching of English and citizenship, and I am very proud of the job we are doing in that regard.

Mr. Thompson: So then, Mr. Chairman, as I see it, the hon. Minister feels that he does not have a responsibility for any further content of these classes? That they are simply for the teaching of English and French? I would hope that he would feel a larger responsibility than that.

And the other question I asked was in connection with professional training of immigrants. I was thinking of immigrants with a professional background. He said last year he was deeply concerned about this and was going to do something about it. But I ask him what he has done about it, to integrate immigrants who have had a professional training in Europe and are now here? I repeat, Mr. Chairman, through you, and I ask the question: the hon. Minister last year said he was deeply concerned about this, about the immigrants who had special training and were now in Canada, and he was going to do something in connection with getting them integrated with a recognition of their previous training. What has the hon. Minister done?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I do not recall the reference the hon. member is making, Mr. Chairman. I have always taken a personal interest in the situation in which these men find themselves. They are confronted with the same handicaps as everybody else with language; when they overcome that, having passed the requisite examinations set by other authorities, they are accepted. I am delighted to say, within the government services there are many men who fall within this category.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I was looking for the Hansard record, and if I could make this suggestion to the hon. Minister—I think it would be a very useful thing for his department to meet with the professional associations and, perhaps at some of the seminars, to have representatives of some of the professional associations meet with the representatives of ethnic organizations to discuss the barriers that are raised, perhaps of necessity, to hold high standards within the associations. But there are these barriers, which therefore means that immigrants with professional training get excluded.

May I thank the hon. Minister for his attention.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are a few general remarks I would like to make before we get into the details of the estimates.

The first one, Mr. Chairman, is that one would get the impression, from the hon. Minister's (Mr. Yaremko's) remarks, that the department which he now heads does nothing but citizenship work. He has made no reference to anything else that is going on in the department, and yet in discussing the main office he quoted figures for increase in salary, increase in travelling expenses; all these apparently are going to be with reference to the citizenship work.

I would think, just as a matter of presenting these estimates to the House so that we would know where this citizenship activity is in terms of the rest of the department, that next year there might be some breakdown.

I assume this department did something before the hon. Minister arrived with his ideas of citizenship, and I assume those former activities are still going on, but they are completely lost if one interprets the 100 per cent attention to citizenship. I just draw attention, Mr. Chairman, that there is no specific reference to citizenship work in any of the estimates, including the main office estimate.

I think we, as hon. members of the House, are entitled to some sort of a breakdown so that we get some idea of what of that main office expenditure is going into the citizenship branch and its work, and what is there for the continuing work of the department before the hon. Minister arrived—and after he leaves.

The other comments I want to make are going to be of a general nature too, Mr. Chairman, because the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) has covered pretty thoroughly a number of issues that I think quite appropriately should be raised. I want to attempt to draw what I think are some general principles with regard to the work of this department, and they perhaps are clearer in light of the detail the hon. member for Dovercourt has presented to the House.

I think there are two functions that the citizenship branch has to perform. The first one is that it is engaged in an educational activity to get information out to new Canadians, with regard to what their rights and their privileges are—with regard to what protection they can get from certain legislation. In other words, it is a glorified public relations function with specific references to the needs of new Canadians, because of their language difficulties; their unfamiliarity with our traditions; our laws; and our practices.

It is only dealing in a special way with the new Canadians what I would suspect The Department of Public Welfare, The Department of Labour and many other departments are doing with regard to communicating to the citizens of Ontario what the government is doing, and what rights and privileges they have in light of the legislation that is on the books.

Since this is an educational activity, Mr. Chairman, I want to get to a point that the hon. member for Dovercourt finally concluded his remarks on; that is that it is very difficult to put your finger on it, but there is a subtle borderline beyond which this educational activity becomes, beyond any shadow of doubt, very closely integrated with the activity of the Tory party.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mm-hmm.

Mr. MacDonald: And as a matter of fact, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) may “Mm-hmm” in approval; I do not know how that will be put down in Hansard, that “Mm-hmm”. However—

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): They have done it before, and they approve of it.

Mr. MacDonald: He may comment an approval on this, but I am interested in this pot-calling-the-kettle-black procedure that developed here between the hon. member for Dovercourt and the hon. Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Yaremko). If there are two people who have developed into professionals in cultivating the new Canadians, and integrating them into their own political organizations, whatever be the position they held at the time, it is these two people.

The hon. member for Dovercourt—I would concede him this—the hon. member for Dovercourt is better equipped than anybody else in this House to be able to sense that subtle borderline between the legitimate activity of a government and its integration with a political machine, because he was engaged in it for a long time up at Ottawa. And he started out, you see—perhaps I can do a bit of interpretation—he started out being critical of the citizenship branch two or three years ago because he saw that the hon. Minister was smartening up, he was going to do what the Liberals had done, he was going to use the machinery of government to integrate the new Canadians within the Tory machine.

So at first he started out being critical of the citizenship branch. In one aspect, the work merits criticism, because I do not think it is a very noble proposition to use the machinery of government for political exploitation—that is what the Liberals did for years and that is what this hon. Minister is now doing at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Vote to reduce the estimate.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, having said that, Mr. Chairman, I am willing to add that I think there is a job to be done in terms of providing the education and the services of these new Canadians, and I think that it should be done even if it gets subtly mixed up with political exploitation which both the Liberals and the Tories have been engaged in in the past. I am not heaping derogation on the work of the department, because I think it should be done with regard to these new Canadians.

Now, the second aspect of this branch's work, Mr. Chairman, is to act—if I may describe it in this way—as a catalyst with other departments of the government—

Hon. G. C. Wardrobe (Minister of Mines): Is that a capitalist?

Mr. MacDonald: Catalyst?

An hon. member: What is that?

Mr. MacDonald: —to act as a catalyst with the rest of the government in terms of what the rest of the government should be doing to meet the particular problems that the citizenship branch finds in its activities.

The hon. member for Dovercourt has spelled out many of these problems, and he is on very solid ground in spelling them out. It is little short of fatuous, that this government should be holding classes on labour and, as the hon. Minister said, talking about minimum wages, when this government is drifting along without a minimum wage Act. This is not only fatuous, it is ludicrous, you can heap all the strongest terms you want to describe it.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): The hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Grossman) would approve in principle but vote against it.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly.

However, Mr. Chairman, I want to illustrate the kind of thing that makes me, on occasion, just a bit exasperated with the activity of this department which deals with the "frosting" on the cake without getting down to the real problem and solving it. If they solved it then perhaps they would not need so much activity on the part of this particular branch.

Let me illustrate this with one instance. I remember two or three years ago I was sitting on a select committee of this Legislature looking into The Labour Relations Act. We had before this committee some pretty serious charges with regard to the activity of unions. The result was, quite rightly so—and with my approval, certainly with my endorsement of it—the committee ruled to establish a Royal commission to look into the activity of these unions.

Mr. Justice Roach was established and he looked into the operation of the teamsters in Connie Smythe's gravel pits north of here. A few months went by and as a result of continued misrepresentation of what trade unions were doing, the Ontario Federation of Labour came back with a supplementary brief; they submitted a supplementary brief to the committee. In this brief they pointed out this kind of thing, I have quoted this in the House before, but I think it bears repeating because there have been some subsequent developments that make it significant. In the brief they said this:

Bruno Zannini, who founded a union for new Canadian workers, conducted a survey of bricklayers soon after his local 35 was chartered. The survey revealed that 85 per cent of the new Canadian bricklayers he organized never received holiday pay, compulsory under Ontario law. They had never seen a holiday pay book or stamp. Fifty per cent had never heard of unemployment insurance and their employers had never deducted the workers' share or paid their own.

Most of these cases revealed outright "chiselling" by employers. Three out of four workers worked 12 hours a day, including Sundays, a practice banned by law. Workmen's compensation, especially needed in the construction field, was a joke. Employers who were not deducting income tax payments could not be bothered with making payments to the compensation board.

Although wages were pitifully low, when the worker could collect them, the men were cheated on hours worked. If they worked 72 hours a week they were paid for 50 and if they rebelled a threat of deportation hung over their heads. At least 20 per cent of the firms employing new Canadian bricklayers made income tax deductions for the total hours a man worked although they deprived him of at least one-tenth of his rightful earnings. According to their books they paid a man for his work but on the job the worker took what he could get.

Well, Mr. Chairman, it still seems to me—that was in May of 1958—

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Who wrote it?

Mr. MacDonald: Never mind who wrote it—it was presented by the OFL. It still seems to me, Mr. Chariman, that this is an absolutely unbelievable thing; that a responsible organization like the Ontario Federation of Labour could come into a select committee of this Legislature and spell out the most shocking list of criminal and civil violations of the laws of this province and of this land—and what happened, Mr. Chairman?

Now we are talking about the problems of the new Canadians. What happened? I suggested to this committee, in view of the fact that we had representations just shortly with the illegal activities of unions—and this committee saw fit to establish a Royal commission to do something about it—we had absolutely no alternative but to submit this to The Department of the Attorney-General, to establish a Royal commission and find out whether the law was being violated as charged here.

I submit to you that my case was beyond any questioning; that with that listing of illegal acts, we were shirking our responsibilities and our duties in not seeing why this illegality was permitted to continue. Well, do you know what happened, Mr. Chairman? I could not even get a Liberal member of the committee to second my motion. And what was the result? The result was that this kind of condition went on like a festering sore until last summer we had an explosion in this city. Now, three years later, this government got around to establishing a Royal commission under Mr. Goldenberg to solve this problem.

This is just another instance of how, when you have the real guts of the problem—and I use the blunt term, Mr. Chairman—the real guts of the problem in terms of exploitation, the Liberals and the Tories on occasion will not come to grips with it. This is the reason I get just a little bit cynical about the hon. Minister of Citizenship who gets up with the “frosting” and all of the propaganda to try to integrate these people into his machine while giving them some education.

I repeat, I am not objecting to the education, but I get a little bit tired of them when they will not act decisively to help these people who are in the position of being victims of those who want to exploit them. This government is an accomplice in the exploitation, because of its inaction; the Liberal Party now gets up with bleeding heart when at least two of its hon. members were accomplices because I could not get a seconder to my motion.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They believe in the principle but they will not vote for it.

An hon. member: We do not believe in the motion.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly. The hon. member was not there. His heart is bleeding but it was the rest of the callous reactionaries on the benches who would not do anything at the time. That was the problem.

Mr. Chairman, I started out by saying I thought there was an education and propaganda job which this government should be doing with the new Canadians to help them to know what their rights are, and I wish they would do it without spending so much of their time integrating the new Canadians into their machine. They would be doing a public service then and not a political job.

But there is the other job and I recognize the limitations that the hon. Minister has. It is his task, also, to get the other departments in the government to do something about some of the basic problems. And this is where the hon. member for Dovercourt is correct, there is no excuse for the hon. Minister to sit in the Cabinet and to share the responsibility for the kind of conditions in the McAndrew report and yet have a government which is going slow, at best, with the solution of those problems.

He cannot slough it off. Like Nathan Phillips, who is the mayor of all the people the hon. Minister is the Minister of Citizenship for all the people and therefore he must assume the responsibility, particularly when this government will not come to grips with it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I speak perhaps in a little different vein than has been done heretofore.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Is the hon. member going to be complimentary?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: No, I do not intend to be complimentary. For the sake of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) I should like to be complimentary, but the matter I wish to discuss is not such that I can be complimentary about it.

I was interested to hear the answer of the hon. Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Yaremko) when he was asked why he had not translated some of these matters which came under the scrutiny of this House as a result of the McAndrew report. I refer to the only publication which I have yet been able to find which in any way designates the various duties of the departments of this government, and I will read in the Ontario Economic and Social Aspects Survey which was printed in the year 1961, the section which refers to the citizenship branch.

That section states that in 1959 a citizenship branch was added to the hon. Provincial Secretary's department "to co-ordinate activities of the various government departments in respect to new Canadians and act as a counselling and information centre".

Now surely if they are going to act in this capacity one of those responsibilities would be to print some of the instructions from these other departments in various languages, if they are really going to co-ordinate the various departments as they apply to the ethnic people. I do not think he is being consistent when he says this does not come within his jurisdiction.

I would like to speak about the matter of the overall estimates of the department. This is the first time in this session that we have been able to consider any of the estimates in the light of the overall budget, and I am tempted to think that there really is a lack of leadership with respect to the job that is to be done. I think that from year to year the departments of the various hon. Ministers opposite increase by a proportionate amount, without any respect to the additional services to be supplied, or in any way related to the interest of the taxpayers. I am tempted to think insofar as these estimates are concerned, that they bear a direct relationship to a law which has been commonly known as Parkinson's law, which he called the law of the Rising Pyramids, and for the benefit of the hon. Minister's office I should like to read just one short paragraph from that publication, because I think it points out the situation which exists in this government.

Last year we raised taxes in this province by 20 per cent and over the past two years the 20 per cent has almost entirely been taken up in additional budgets by the government which really have not provided very much additional in the way of additional services. If I may be accused of being pro-taxpayer for a moment I would like to suggest that perhaps the time has come for the government to take a sharp look at these expenditures before they bring them to this House and find out whether they can be pared down a little bit.

I had several questions which I would like to ask the hon. Minister. I note that there is one item under statutory expenses, where we are asked to approve four Ministers without Portfolio. I believe the salary to those people is $2,500, per year. Now, they are nice people, I like the Ministers without Portfolio but I do not think they are doing very much. I do not think they need portfolios and I think if we are going to increase taxes in this province by 20 per cent we had better find out whether or not these expenses are doing for us what we intended they should do. If I might revert back to Parkinson's law, he said:

Politicians have assumed that a rising total in the number of civil servants must reflect a growing volume of work to be done.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Is not that true? Does the hon. member not believe it?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Yes, I am afraid the hon. Minister believes it. I quote further:

Cynics in questioning this belief have imagined that the multiplication of officials must have left some of them idle or all of them able to work for shorter hours but this is a matter in which faith and doubt seem equally misplaced.

I suggest that these estimates rise in direct proportion to the overall budget each year; I suggest that each department comes forward, building their empires. As a matter of fact we have four Ministers without Portfolio in training so that they can build their own empires and spend more of the taxpayers' money. The Ontario Municipal Board, before they approve the expenditures—any expenditure of a municipality which is the creature of this Legislature—look very carefully into the need for those expenditures.

I suggest that no thought has been given in these estimates as to whether they could have been pared.

I note, for instance, that last year we appropriated some $30,000 under the estimate to provide what we call the government hospitality fund. I note on checking the public accounts for the year ending March 31, 1961, we expended some $43,000. Now, these are all good things, we want to encourage these people to hold meetings in our province; but surely when it is necessary to burden the taxpayer with an additional 20 per cent in his overall taxes we should give some thought to paring these estimates where they can be pared.

I see no place in these estimates where any concentrated effort has been made to cut expenditures in any direction. It has been a matter of milking the public of these funds so we can build these empires and build our own ego in so doing.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Is the province growing any?

An hon. member: The Cabinet's growing; it is growing in age.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I do not know that the province is growing in proportion to the Cabinet, I would answer the hon. Minister of Mines.

I would like to question three or four items in the last public accounts which have been given to us. I should like to know why we gave a grant of $500, for instance, to the Canadian Automobile Association or $931 to the Hotel Association of Canada, or $1,800 to the Congress of Anaesthesiologists. We could go on and on. There are several here and I should like to know why these grants were given and what was done with the money. Perhaps the hon. Minister would answer that question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am sorry, I did not hear that last question.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the question again, sir, and I would would refer to the statement that the hon. Minister of Mines just made.

I would remind him that it is the duty of the Opposition to ask questions in this House so that they can be made public. To suggest that we could get this information privately is only an attempt to cover up the government's sins. I would tell the hon. Minister further that as long as I sit as a member of this House representing the people of Wentworth, I am going to ask the questions publicly. I have no intention of asking them privately.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I will be glad if you will go to my department and get information there that is factual, rather than always bringing these matters up in the Legislature.

An hon. member: The hon. Minister does not want to answer them publicly.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is not the point. The hon. member does not want it that way. He wants to make politics out of it, that is all. He does not want the proper information; he can get it at any time from my department, or any other, if he cares to ask.

Mr. Wintermeyer: May I hear the question, please?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: May I hear the question, please?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, the question was simply this. Since there was an increase of some $13,000 in the actual expenditures over the estimates with respect to the matter of government hospitality fund, would the hon. Minister tell me why these grants were given—to the Canadian Automobile Association $500, $4,500 to the International Union of Applied Physics, $931 to the Hotel Association of Canada? Why to these three in particular?

Why do we not try to keep these grants within reasonable bounds? Is there any sense, rhyme or reason in the way these grants are handed out, and why did not other associations get the same amount? I would like to know the policy we follow with respect to these expenditures. I have another question before I yield the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Well, Mr. Chairman, I say in all honesty, as a taxpayer of this province, that every dollar should be watched and watched carefully; and it is watched carefully. I cannot conceive that the people of the province of Ontario would regard a hospitality fund in the amount of $40,000 as being excessive for a jurisdiction the size of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Whicher: That is just for your department.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: This is done on behalf of all departments, and under a—generally—basic rule, for those things which are of a national import.

I want to bring this to the attention of the hon. member very briefly. This year one of the most successful gatherings that we had in this city of Toronto was the convention of the Kiwanians; the Kiwanis International held their meeting here in the city of Toronto. I think the whole aspect of the government hospitality fund is reflected in certain words which were used by the Toronto Telegram in reference to the Kiwanis International convention, when they said: "Small Outlay, Big Reward."

A return of $3 million for an investment of $12,000 is spectacular business. It cost the Metropolitan Toronto Convention and Visitor Association $12,000 to bring the Kiwanians to Toronto and it is estimated that the Kiwanians, in the course of their conference, left behind in this province $3 million. I think that is a pretty good reward. The province's contribution was $2,000.

I cannot think of a better use for the hospitality fund than extending $2,000 worth of hospitality in conjunction with someone else in arranging for the vice-regal party which was held on the campus of the University of Toronto for a group that brings in $3 million. Now, that is one of the criteria, to encourage groups from outside to—

Mr. Bryden: Is the hon. Minister suggesting they would not have come here without the $2,000?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I can suggest this: that in view of the participation of this government in the idea that was conceived of having a vice-regal party on the campus, that is one of the factors why the Kiwanians are considering returning to the city in 1967 for another $3 million. That is one point.

There are other items. There is an exchange visit from the University of Southern Carolina; some 25 students came up here on an exchange visit to Toronto. I cannot think of dollars that are better spent than in the promotion of that type of visit.

We had a visit here from one of the most recent independent republics of the Commonwealth, Western Nigeria. Hospitality was extended to them out of the hospitality fund, and I quote from the External Aid Office of Ottawa, with whom we co-operated:

The Nigerians were unstinted in their praise of the programme and hospitality which had been arranged for them during their Toronto visit, and I assure you that the friendly generosity of Canadians like yourself and your colleagues makes a favourable impression on these official visitors and will greatly assist in improving Canada's relations with the countries and governments they represent.

That is another criterion. I could go on—

Mr. R. W. Gibson (Kenora): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister permit a question? I am a new member and I would like to know of what this hospitality consists.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the hon. Minister, he is not answering my question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have a very interesting letter here which I will proceed to read. It is from Il Sottosegretario di Stato per gli Affari Esteri, Roma, and states:

Caro Ministro,

Rientrato a Roma, desidero esprimere le nuovamente il mio grato apprezzamento per quanto Ella, a nome del Governo dell'Ontario, ha voluto fare in occasione della mia visita a Toronto.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, sir—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I could go on. Mr. Chairman, I could go on for the benefit of those in the Opposition who do not understand—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, sir.

I asked the hon. Minister a specific question; I referred to three particular organizations. I did not refer to the organization the hon. Minister is talking about at all. I asked him on what basis this money was advanced and he went all around the subject instead of answering the question. I have all the time the hon. Minister has, but I suggest to you, sir, that he is evading the question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, it would be impossible for me to have all the files relative to this correspondence. I am giving him some of the criteria by which the government hospitality fund is spent and I have some of the examples before me. The letter I was reading, for the benefit of those who do not understand Italian, was from the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs. He states as follows:

Dear Minister:

I have now returned to Rome and again I wish to express my grateful appreciation for what you, in the name of the Ontario government, did on the occasion of my visit to Toronto.

I have all kinds of correspondence along that line.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue this matter if I may. I am sure it would be quite easy to get up and read letters from anybody to whom we give hand-outs. If he would give me one, I would be pleased to send him a letter too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, now, that is not a hand-out.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Singer: Why do you not tap your gavel there, or do you only tap it at this side?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the hon. Ministers who seem to insist on interjecting, this is my opinion, and certainly I am entitled to that. I wonder if the hon. Minister could advise me on what basis grants were given to the Canadian Automobile Association, the International Union of Applied Physics and to the Hotel Association of Canada. Does he have any information here with respect to these expenditures which appear in the public accounts?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I indicated at the outset of my answer to the hon. member that these are gatherings which are national in character; the province of Ontario was the host province in this instance, and it was felt proper that hospitality should be extended in this regard.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Then might I ask the hon. Minister if this hospitality is extended to every association of national character which holds a meeting in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: All I know is that I have not, I believe, refused any reasonable request in the last couple of years.

Mr. Bryden: What does he consider a reasonable request?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I thank the hon. Minister for his answer and I—

Hon. B. L. Cathcart (Minister of Travel and Publicity): Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the hon. Minister, he may recall—I recall one anyway that I brought to his attention a year ago and the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Manley) will support me. There was hospitality extended on your behalf down in the city of Cornwall.

Mr. Singer: For what association?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I cannot recall.

Mr. Singer: Well, if the hon. Minister is going to speak about these things he should recall it.

An hon. member: Why do you not stand up and support the hon. Minister?

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Why should I be answering the hon. Minister's question?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to point out that hospitality is extended beyond this particular area.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might pursue this again. I was not quite satisfied when the hon. Minister answered the previous question that I asked him. Do I understand that this hospitality fund will make grants to any organization, national in character, which holds its annual convention or meetings in the province of Ontario? Now, in answering my question, he said that he had not turned down any reasonable request. With due respect to the hon. Minister I am sure that in his opinion he did not turn down any request which in his opinion was reasonable; but his opinion and mine might possibly vary.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: But he is the Minister; that is the difference.

Mr. Singer: Oh, the big wind from the north again.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: The reason I ask the question, Mr. Chairman, is that I am endeavouring to find out the policy under which these grants are paid. If they are not paid to all organizations national in character, as was suggested a few moments ago, then the next question I would ask is: on what basis is it decided who shall receive a grant and who shall not receive a grant?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have spent about 5 minutes explaining the various criteria by which the consideration of these grants are made, by giving examples of the recipients. Some of them are national, there are some that are international, there are some that have to do with government bodies, there are some that have to do with student bodies, there are various criteria. The Minister makes the decision.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, then may I ask the hon. Minister this question? We have before us the estimate of some $40,000 for this fund in the current year. Is this a guess in the dark or is this a predetermined figure which is based on requests which we already have?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Well, as a matter of fact, last year in the estimates there was $30,000 and our expenditures will exceed that; and there is the necessity for a treasury board order. We anticipate, on the basis of past experience, and in view of the fact that the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association conference will be held in the province of Ontario, that there will be additional sums required for that purpose.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, as a result of the answers which I have received from the hon. Minister I reiterate the statement that I made earlier—that these estimates seem to me to be vague, not on an actual budget estimate on what we—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I do not know and cannot tell who is going to approach me for a grant or assistance of hospitality 9 months from now, or 10 months from now, or 11 months from now. We do not line everybody up and say: well, we are going to be considering the following year. This is an estimate, as are all figures; they are the estimates based on past experience, the advice of our accountant, and the anticipation of what type of gatherings will be held within the province within the next year.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. Minister for his statement and I think it amplifies the statement that I am making—that this is based principally on a guess; that they are not sure to whom they are going to pay it. I am a little bit concerned about the comment which has been made with respect to what is reasonable and what is not, because I feel that this should be based on some kind of a predetermined line of reasoning.

I was quite interested to hear the hon. Minister state, two or three times, about organizations which we brought to our city. Now I happen to come from a city which is a little bit removed from here and I am wondering, and I think it is a fair question to ask the hon. Minister, on what basis are these grants paid? Solely at the discretion of the hon. Minister without any policy consideration? On what basis does he decide what is reasonable and what is not reasonable?

For instance, if an organization were going to meet in some city removed from Toronto, would it be solely at the discretion of the hon. Minister as to whether or not these people would receive any assistance? I think it is a reasonable question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: One of the responsibilities assigned by this Legislature to the Provincial Secretary is the operation of the hospitality fund. There is an item in the estimates, as there is for every other item of responsibility, in this case $40,000. The expenditures are published in the accounts every year—the hon. member has it before him—these are not confined to one locality.

The hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) reminds me of that in the riding of the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Manley), up at the Lakehead, and various parts of the province; there is no restriction on area or anything. If it is a reasonable request in the light of what the province of Ontario should do in hospitality, the Minister so acts.

Vote 1601 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee rise and report progress, and asks for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed: Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof it do stand adjourned until 2 p.m. on Monday next and that Rule No. 2 be suspended so far as it applies to this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the motion I would like to mention that in the House this morning, and since the House opened, we now have some new visitors in the west gallery, from Malden Public School; and I would point out that the Malden Public School is situated in Essex South.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) whether the 2 o'clock commencement will be the order of the day from here on. I can understand that on specific occasions there is need to do exactly that, but my personal experience—and other people may want to voice their opinion—was that last year the session from two to six did become very onerous and I wonder in my own mind the worthwhileness of regularly sitting for four hours at one time.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, it is simply a question of doing the business of the House in the most efficient manner possible, and I could not undertake that we will not meet at two o'clock on occasion. As a matter of fact, I was considering sitting at two o'clock every afternoon but that may not be necessary until a few weeks have passed and the work load builds up. But we have a good deal of legislation ahead of us and it may be necessary for us to sit at two o'clock, but I will bear in mind the remarks the hon. leader of the Opposition has made.

On Monday we will go on with the estimates of The Department of Agriculture, and there will be a night session on Monday, a night session on Tuesday, and probably a night session on Thursday.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I think this is an appropriate occasion to ask of the hon. Prime Minister that he outline for us the schedule for next week. Now, I understand, and it is understandable, that on one or two occasions, particularly shortly after the budget, there is certainly a degree of hurry with the presentation of particular estimates. But you will understand that the opportunity now to prepare for Agriculture is very limited. I certainly would ask the hon. Prime Minister to detail for us the various estimates that will be called during the ensuing week.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, I would be very happy to do that. I do not want to be held too tightly because of circumstances involving the business of the House—it requires a certain amount of flexibility. So, in detailing what I have in mind, I do not want to put myself in the position where I cannot alter it if necessary. And on that basis, next week it is my intention to proceed with the estimates of The Department of Agriculture on Monday; on Tuesday the Opposition's financial critic will speak, and the hon. member from the NDP party will speak in the budget debate. So Tuesday will be pretty well given over to the budget debate and the ordinary business of the House, that is the introduction of legislation and matters on the order paper.

On Wednesday we will have a committee day and the House will not sit; and on Thursday, if my present plans materialize, we will have the estimates of The Department of Transport. Then, of course, we have next Friday with nothing scheduled as yet. The completion of the estimates of the hon. Provincial Secretary might be called at any time, to fit into the time that is available, because naturally I do not know how long these various matters I have mentioned are going to take.

I will then undertake to detail for the House, some time next week, what estimates we will consider in the following week, and then the hon. leader of the Opposition will have an opportunity to prepare for them.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Well, Mr. Speaker, earlier in the session the hon. Prime Minister stated that he would try to have night sessions on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. Surely three nights next week is rather a heavy load for all hon. members. Why the sudden change?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not know how we have come to debate this but, in fact, this will be the first Monday night we have sat. It will be the first night session other than a Tuesday or a Thursday and it will be the first night session since we have resumed after the Christmas recess, so I personally do not feel that the burden of work has been just too staggeringly heavy so far in 1962. I will attempt not to call more than two night sessions a week but, if circumstances dictate, in order to complete the business of the province of Ontario I will have to do so.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1:10 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 5, 1962

The House met at 2:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: in the east gallery, St. Vincent de Paul Separate School, Toronto, and Charles E. Webster Public School, Toronto; and in the west gallery, Dewson Street Public School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. W. G. Noden (Rainy River) from the standing committee on standing orders presented the committee's third report, which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following petitions and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

Of the Township of Nepean praying that an Act may pass relating to imposition of sewage and water rates.

Of Christ Church, Anglican Church of Canada, Amherstburg, praying that an Act may pass varying the terms of a trust created by the will of the late Loftus Cuddy.

Of the United Church of Canada praying that an Act may pass authorizing the corporation and emanations thereof to invest in such securities as are authorized for Canadian insurance companies.

Of the Town of Rainy River praying that an Act may pass exempting the Baudette and Rainy River municipal bridge from all municipal taxation.

Of Laurentian University of Sudbury praying that an Act may pass enlarging the senate thereof; and for related purposes.

Of the City of Hamilton praying that an Act may pass vesting in the corporation all assets, etc., of the board of park management of the said city; and for related purposes.

Of Riverview Health Association praying that an Act may pass providing for the distribution of its assets in the event of dissolution; and for related purposes.

Of the board of education for the City of Windsor and the Windsor Suburban District High School Board validating an agreement whereby the suburban district board will erect and pay for additions to a secondary school in the City of Windsor and be guaranteed certain accommodation in such school.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

UNITED CHURCH OF CANADA

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting The United Church of Canada.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

TOWNSHIP OF NEPEAN

Mr. W. E. Johnston (Carleton) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting The Township of Nepean.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

LAURENTIAN UNIVERSITY OF SUDBURY

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park), in the absence of Mr. R. Belisle, moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting Laurentian University of Sudbury.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CHRIST CHURCH, AMHERSTBURG

WINDSOR BOARDS

Mr. Wintermeyer, in the absence of Mr. Reaume, moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting The Windsor Board of Education and the Windsor Suburban District High School Board.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CITY OF HAMILTON

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting The City of Hamilton.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. R. W. Gibson (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have two questions to direct to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow), due notice of which has been given to him. The questions are:

When will the contract for the proposed Werner-Gordon Lake access road be let and when will work begin?

Secondly, what is the completion date of this project?

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge the questions sent to me by the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) and I might say that the Werner Lake access road is receiving every consideration.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

The University of Toronto president's report for the year ending June 30, 1961; the report of the board of governors of the University of Toronto for the year ending June 30, 1961; the annual report of the Ontario College of Art for the fiscal year ended May 31, 1961; the report of the board of governors of the Lakehead College of Arts, Science and Technology for the period June 1, 1960 to May 31, 1961; the annual report of the Teachers' Superannuation Commission for the year ending October 31, 1961.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

House moves into committee of supply; Mr. K. Brown in the Chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Chairman: On vote 101:

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, I want to say first of all that this is a very unique, and I must confess an unnerving, experience to present one's first estimates in this House.

Before I get into anything that might be described as a report of The Department of Agriculture for 1961 and activities at the moment, I would like to pay tribute to those who have preceded me in office. I had the privilege of being a farmer in the province of Ontario under the guidance of men like Colonel T. L. Kennedy and the late F. S. Thomas, both of whom were outstanding Ministers of Agriculture in this province. As a farmer, I enjoyed the benefit of their leadership in The Department of Agriculture and, like so many other farmers in this province, I profited by the policies of this government as enunciated by those very able Ministers.

Then as a farmer and also as a private member of the House, I had the opportunity of knowing, in a very personal way, my immediate predecessor in office, the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow). In my humble opinion, Mr. Chairman, these three men—and certainly by no means the least of them was my immediate predecessor in office—were men who devoted their lives and dedicated themselves to the service of farmers and to agriculture in the province of Ontario. I feel very definitely that their contribution has been one that is indeed very hard for one to follow in office and hope to match. I sincerely trust that, as time goes on, I may be permitted to make some contribution, even though it may not measure up to theirs.

I would like to say a word about the agricultural picture in the province of Ontario for the year 1961 and point out that it was a year that began, as far as farming was concerned, with a very late seeding, and we were fearful that we might have a crop failure, but ideal weather conditions brought on one of the best crops ever grown in the province of Ontario.

Indeed, I believe that had it not been for the disastrous rains we had right in harvest time and the hot humid weather that came along just at the time of harvest, we might have had the greatest crop yield ever grown in this country.

A good deal of the crop was harvested before bad weather struck; but a sizeable portion was badly damaged, before it could be harvested. Although it may not have been as good quality and the colour may have deteriorated, it is still mighty valuable and good for feeding.

Those who were counting on winter wheat crops for a cash crop were disappointed in some respects. Many had their wheat damaged by sprouting, due to the weather, and some were unable to sell their wheat for milling purposes.

Most of the farmers who could not sell their wheat for milling purposes found some way of drying it and storing it and are using it now for feed—putting it through livestock, which is today paying off very well indeed. I would say that perhaps those farmers are making more out of it today as feed than they might have made had they sold it on the miller's market at that time.

This, I believe, pointed out more than anything else the necessity that we have in Ontario today for on-the-farm storage of grain. So often, our farm people come to harvest time and, not having a place to store their grain, have to sell it to the nearest elevator at a price that is not as good as is might have been had they been able to hold it. I believe this is one of the things that has pointed up the necessity for farmers to provide on-the-farm storage for their grain in an ever-increasing quantity.

We had a record corn crop in the province of Ontario this year with ideal growing conditions right through the entire summer and ideal harvesting conditions last fall after the wet weather subsided. I believe most of the corn in this province was harvested. It is either in silos or in cribs or in bins, after being dried. We have never had such a crop of corn as we had this last year.

Also, we had ideal pasture conditions. I believe our dairy farmers have never experienced a year when the luxurious pasture lasted for as long as it did during the summer and fall of 1961. Ideal weather conditions, lots of rain and warm weather, kept the pasture growing and kept it green.

We had good hay crops. There is probably an abundance of hay in most of Ontario this year. Some of it got weathered a bit, but generally speaking there is an abundance of hay.

Our crops could be described, for 1961, as outstanding.

We in this province are fortunate to have enjoyed the kind of weather and other conditions that gave us this crop. In western Canada, conditions were not so bright. They suffered a severe drought out there. In fact, in the mid-summer it looked as though it might reach disastrous proportions and the governments of the day, in co-operation with the hon. federal Minister of Agriculture, held meetings and decided what was the best course of action their farmers might take and then encouraged them to follow specific courses of action that seemed to work to the benefit of the whole agricultural industry.

There was, we admit, a serious shortage of feed grain because of the drought in western Canada, and this was of real concern to farmers in Ontario with respect to securing grain for the 1961-1962 feeding season; because in Ontario, we have in the past been bringing from western Canada—importing into this province—between 22 and 28 per cent of our normal feed grain requirements. Out west, they just did not have this grain and so it was impossible to bring it in.

Recognizing this was the problem, the federal government allowed importation of oats from the United States, as well as considerable quantities of corn to stabilize the feed-grain market in the province of Ontario.

This was a great departure from anything that has happened in previous years as far as our province is concerned.

Nevertheless, it did stabilize the feed-grain situation in Ontario, and while feed-grain has increased in price, we must also recognize it has been a benefit to those farmers who are growing grain for sale in the province of Ontario.

The wheat surplus of western Canada is virtually a thing of the past. Hon. members may say to me this is not a matter of concern to The Department of Agriculture in the province of Ontario. I must agree that is true to a degree but we have always recognized, as farmers in Ontario, that the wheat supplies or the wheat surplus that existed in western Canada was a backlog for feed-grain supplies, if needed in eastern Canada.

This wheat surplus is virtually a thing of the past. We have sold tremendous quantities of wheat to the Orient—China—and much more is to move out. Indeed, our farmers of western Canada are now being encouraged by the hon. federal Minister of Agriculture to increase the production of wheat in order to meet the demand that apparently exists for this product. It is a great step forward, I should say, in marketing of export farm products in this country.

We in Ontario are concerned with live-stock and livestock products. We are told by our economists and our statisticians that over 70 per cent of the income of Ontario farms is derived from livestock or livestock products. This brings me to a point which I think is of real concern to us as farmers in Ontario and as people interested in agriculture. We recognize that there is indeed a changing pattern, a changing picture in the livestock situation as far as Canada is concerned.

For years we farmers in Ontario have depended on feeder cattle supplies from the western provinces to stock our feed lots and our farms in Ontario. But with the tremendous growth in population of the western United States, and indeed of western Canada—and because there has been a considerable amount of feed grain and wheat in western Canada available to farmers out there—there has been an encouragement to those who were interested in feeding beef cattle in western Canada, to establish feed lot operations. There, with their dry weather conditions, they do not have to build the expensive buildings that we have to have down here in Ontario to provide shelter from the weather. And they have, in many instances, built rough shelters, some of them out of bales of straw that have been piled up to enclose a feed lot; there have been rough board fences built, but generally speaking they have not gone in for the expensive buildings that we have to have in eastern Canada.

They have had access to the cattle at the ranches; their costs of transportation in moving these feeder cattle from the ranch to the feed lot has been next to negligible; and they have access to all kinds of feed grain, at a reasonable cost, right at their door. And in some cases there has been a co-operative effort by producers of feeder cattle on the one hand, and growers of grain on the other, to establish a feed lot. One fellow puts in the cattle, another fellow supplies the grain, and they have marketed their grain and their beef in a co-operative way. This has certainly had an effect on the source of feeder cattle for the province of Ontario.

Along with that, there has been a tremendous increase in the demand for feeder cattle in western Canada, from our American neighbours. Literally thousands and thousands of cattle move out of the western plains to feed lots in the United States; and the quality of our Canadian cattle is so appreciated that they have commanded a very high price. This puts us in the spot of competing first of all with the feed-lot operators in western Canada, and with the American feed-lot operators from the United States, in getting our sources and supplies of feeder cattle moved into Ontario.

I would say that this is one of the things that I feel we in The Department of Agriculture, and indeed all farm organizations and people in this province, must recognize if we are going to provide a source of feeder cattle for the farmers of this province in years to come. It may well be that we should, in a very practical way, follow some of the examples that have been set in the demonstration farms established by The Department of Agriculture at Sault Ste. Marie and New Liskeard, where substantial beef cow herds have been established. There, the use of good bulls has proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that we can provide good feeder cattle in our north country for the—I might say, almost inexhaustible—demand of our southern Ontario and central Ontario feeders for these cattle.

It seems to me that we must take a good look at this and do everything we can to provide this source of cattle, or to encourage the establishment of cow-calf operations in marginal areas of the province, in land where they do not enjoy the quality of soil that we have in some other parts of the province where more expensive cash crops may be grown. This is something at which we should take a good look.

Then I would like to point out that an innovation has taken place in the province of Ontario as far as the sale of cattle is concerned. I point to the innovation of auction selling at the Ontario stockyards.

On a trial basis, auction selling was inaugurated for the last three days of the week—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday—and it was tried for a period of some three or four months and worked successfully. It allowed those people who, in the initial stages, had some doubts and reservations about the method of auction selling—as to whether it was the thing that was really needed in selling our cattle—to use the first two days by private treaty method, the same as we had always had in this province.

But it was found that the demand increased, and there were increasing representations made to the stockyards manager, Mr. Fred Campbell, and to his board of directors of the Ontario stockyards, to extend auction selling. And so we got into a 5-day auction selling at the Ontario stockyards.

I think it is interesting to note that, because of the great demand for western feeder cattle across the line, and the feed-lot operations of the west, there has been a great reduction in the number of feeder cattle coming to Ontario through the stockyards; and certainly because Canada is now declared a TB-free area, as far as cattle are concerned, we do not have to have cattle tested in western Canada and read at the Ontario stockyards before being delivered to the farms, or have them held at the Ontario stockyards while that test is made. This has reduced the number of cattle that have come to the Ontario stockyards through this sort of channel by over 33,000 head.

And yet the Ontario farmer, because of auction selling at the Ontario stockyards, has increased the number of cattle sent there by a very substantial number. As a matter of fact, in the first five weeks of 1962, the annual weekly increase over 1961 sales amounted to something like a thousand head per week. This has had the effect of determining price at terminal market levels. I think it was only a natural evolution by the farmers of this province themselves, who were using the services that had been provided by the various community sales across the province—some 60 or more in number—where farmers were selling their livestock, where the packing houses were sending out their buyers to buy livestock for their trade.

The auction-selling innovation at the stockyards, here in Toronto, has had the result that, in many instances, more cattle are coming here than ordinarily would have gone to those sales or been sold direct to packing plants. And it has had the effect of establishing a market here, where buyers of various plants can bid on these cattle competitively and can establish a going price for the cattle of that particular grade and quality. And it is working out, generally, to the satisfaction of farmers across the province.

I had the opportunity a few weeks ago to go out there, completely unannounced, to the stockyards just to take a look for myself. I spent one Monday afternoon there, just to see what happens, and I was impressed with the activities of the auction. I was impressed with the number of cattle that were moving through those auction rings, and there were four rings operating the afternoon when I was there.

A number of buyers were there, representing various packing plants and individuals. It was a vast difference from the Ontario stockyards, as I recalled them, many years ago when under private treaty. I have been on those yards many times on a Monday, with cattle of our own, or buying cattle for ourselves, and found that there were literally thousands of cattle on that yard and buyers, to my mind, had the field all to themselves. They could bid on the cattle; and if you did not want to take it, they would leave them there and they would wait for you to take it later on in the day or later on in the week; and in cases I recall very well, the cattle had been there for as much as a week before they were sold.

The auction selling has had the effect of bringing cattle to the yards on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, in just about equal numbers, and we do not have this large carry-over. We have a number of cattle coming there more in consistence with the buyers' demand. Generally speaking, this has been a policy that I think has worked out very well. There are great improvements in livestock marketing in this province.

While I am on the subject of livestock, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word about one of the problems that has plagued dairymen for as long as there has been a dairy industry. We have been successful in cleaning up tuberculosis in cattle. We have been largely successful in cleaning up Bang's disease. I think we should now direct our attention, as definitely as we possibly can, to perhaps one of the worst scourges that the dairy and the livestock industry know: that is, to this problem of mastitis in dairy cattle.

It has been recognized that this is a disease which annually costs the farmers of this province, and in fact the whole country, millions of dollars. It is our intention to initiate a programme in Ontario designed to control and, if possible, to eradicate mastitis from dairy herds. Now, this is a very large order and it is one that cannot possibly come about overnight. But the policy that will be developed is on the basis of a pilot project which will centre around the regional veterinary laboratory at Ridgetown. This will be a voluntary plan. It is the intention to enrol at least 150 herds of dairy cattle.

All lactating cows in the herds of the participants will be subjected to tests at 6-week intervals in the 9 months following enrolment, and at 3-month intervals thereafter. Each voluntary participant will be required to sign an agreement obligating himself to have infected cows treated under the direction of a veterinarian and to eliminate from his herd all animals that fail to respond to treatment. The Ridgetown experience is to be considered as a pilot project, initiated for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it is possible to establish and maintain herds that are free from mastitis; and, if possible, to formulate a province-wide, comprehensive, mastitis policy.

It should be pointed out that considerable testing work for mastitis was conducted last year in the regional veterinary laboratories, and a total of 150,000 tests for farmers were carried out. It is also proposed to carry on a more accurate and intensive educational programme, with reference to mastitis as a first step. Courses will be staged for extension workers to come in direct contact with dairy-men, such as the dairy branch field men, the Dairy Herd Improvement Association field-men, and other extension workers—in order that they may be informed on this particular subject, and thereby pass along the information to the dairy farmers.

One of the programmes that was initiated by my hon. predecessor in office (Mr. Goodfellow), and one which met with very great approval and interest in the province of Ontario, was the programme of farm safety. This was initiated two years ago, and a farm accident survey was conducted across the province of Ontario. I would like to point out that we in The Department of Agriculture appreciate, more than anyone can ever know, the voluntary co-operation of the women's institutes across the province, the junior farmers' organizations, and indeed all farm organizations who co-operated with The Department of Agriculture in making this farm accident survey possible.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, to quote just a few of the figures that were revealed. I dare say that many of the hon. members know all these figures but, in case they do not, I would like to bring them to the records of the House.

Between March 1, 1959, and February 29, 1960, this survey applies. The figures from this survey should not be filed away and forgotten, however. This, I think, is most important because they are of real significance in dollars and cents. I would like to recall them to the House.

During this period there were 293 fatal accidents—three times the traffic fatality rate in Metro Toronto. I think it is difficult to put a price on life. There were 336 permanent injuries sustained, and I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that money is no compensation for permanent disability. There were 5,688 temporary injuries. Now what was the result of these, in dollars and cents? $700,000 was paid out in medical bills and $5,254,000 was suffered in property damage through accidents on farms.

Now these are very startling figures; and, aside from the very personal situation of fatal accidents, these are figures which represent dollars and cents in our farm economy today—dollars and cents which farmers cannot afford to lose. I was privileged to attend the Ontario farm safety conference at Guelph a few weeks ago, where representatives from every county and district in the province of Ontario came together to discuss the reports of this survey and to find out ways and means whereby we could bring home to farm people the importance of safety on our farms. I would like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that The Ontario Department of Agriculture has plans well under way to provide a number of educational farm safety standards where, according to the farm accident survey, the greatest number of all accidents occurred.

I think it is interesting to note that the preponderance of accidents occurred in this order: through tractor operation, machinery operation; home area; barn area and highway travelling. These are the areas in which the accidents were really most pronounced.

It is intended to carry out this campaign through the use of posters, on paper durable enough to last a number of years. It is felt that posters can be tacked to walls of buildings around the farm in places where they constantly remind one of this matter of farm safety. We brought into the House today a few samples of these posters. Here is one on home safety. It depicts a lady on the stair-steps carrying her washing, I believe it is, in a basket downstairs; on the stair-steps are a number of bottles and cans and pails, even over-shoes and boots. This is one of the things that we hope to remind people that they should not do.

HOME SAFETY

Stairs are for people, not temporary storage space.

We hope to have something to do with correcting this situation.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): What kind of bottles? Is that liquor advertising?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, if my hon. friend was interested in farm safety, he would listen to this instead of trying to make some wise-cracks.

Here is another one on tractor operations, showing a man falling off the back of a tractor. He has been riding—as one might say—tandem on the back of this tractor. This points, in a very feasible way, to some of the things that we should not do.

Here is another one on machinery operations—a man with his coat caught in the power-shaft of a tractor operating a machine. These are some of the things that I think it would not do any of us, as farmers, any harm to have tacked up around our implement sheds, so that it would be indeed a constant reminder to us to be more careful.

These are some of the things that we would like to mention and, along with that, we are promoting and continually encouraging all farm organizations to promote farm safety; because, after all, we are dealing with people, and if we can save the life of one farmer or one farmer's wife, or one farmer's child, then it will more than repay us everything that this bit of advertising and suggested literature will cost us.

Mr. Sopha: Are those from McKim Advertising?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, they are not; they are prepared by our own people. Any further question on that?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word or two about agricultural education. We are taking a look, in The Department of Agriculture, at the overall agricultural educational picture in the province of Ontario. We are told that our estimated attendance at three Guelph colleges will jump from 1,563 on the roll this year, to 2,500 in 1965, and possibly go up to 4,000 by 1970. These are figures that we must be concerned with.

We must determine the best way possible for providing the physical accommodation for these students who will likely come to our Guelph colleges for admittance and for training in scientific agriculture. Then we must also make the best possible use of the facilities that we already have, not only at Guelph but at Ridgetown and at Kemptville. We have set up a small committee, among ourselves in The Department of Agriculture, of the people involved, to take a good look at this and see if there is something we can do to prepare ourselves and the department for what I am sure will be an increased demand for agricultural education as time goes on.

Hon. members had the opportunity last week, as members of the committee on agriculture, to deal with the federated colleges bill and the agricultural research institute bill at Guelph. We will deal with that again in committee and in the House.

But I believe that we could safely say that this was one of the greatest steps forward in the agricultural-educational programme in this province that has been taken in some time; and I am sure you will agree that the agricultural research institute bill is one of the most important pieces of legislation that has ever been brought in.

I would like to remind the House that the College Royal which is on at Guelph this week—the students' College Royal—has as its motto: "Today's research, tomorrow's methods," and surely that is true. We must pursue research if we are to keep pace with the ever-changing picture of Ontario agriculture.

The students at Ridgetown last week celebrated their students' Royal and their motto was "Research advances agriculture". These, I think, give some credence to the thought, which is going through the minds of young people in this province today, of the importance of research and its place in agriculture today.

Then I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, a word about some of the activities of our market development branch. Some 18 months ago, the government of Ontario appointed an agricultural market study group to make a study, during September 1960, in the interests of Ontario farmers, of the United Kingdom markets for farm products. The chief objective of the study group was to inquire into the possibility of increasing export trade in Ontario agricultural products, as the result of the removal during 1959-1960 of most of the United Kingdom restrictions on the import of foods from the dollar countries.

In the past, Ontario food products enjoyed a general acceptance by the British consumer. Now, after being highly restricted for 19 years, this market had to be reopened. As a result, it was necessary to bring to the attention of a new generation of British consumers, the attractiveness, the taste, the quality, and the value of Ontario farm food products. It has been our purpose to pursue this study that was made there and we have had some effective results.

We appointed Mr. E. F. Merritt to the market development branch in July of 1961; and Mr. Merritt, who is an OAC graduate, has had considerable experience in the business and sales field. He was given the particular task of co-operating with industry and the marketing boards here in Ontario, in an attempt to locate additional markets for Ontario produce in the United Kingdom. His appointment was a recognition of the fact that the United Kingdom has been closed to practically all agricultural products for 19 years. This is something that I think we must recognize—that it has just been reopened.

In the face of increasing competition from other countries, if Ontario was going to again regain any of the markets disrupted by the restrictions on dollar imports, then a very personal contact would have to be built up between agricultural operations in Ontario and the potential importers in the United Kingdom. Mr. Merritt spent September, October, November and part of December visiting importers and wholesalers, in the United Kingdom, who might be interested in imports of Ontario products.

He has made a complete assessment of that United Kingdom market. He has also built a very close contact with the agricultural industry and the producer marketing boards concerned in Ontario.

While there may be increasing problems created because of the United Kingdom interest in the common market—and this is something we cannot ignore—at the same time a positive approach must be taken in order to keep our foot in the door. It is believed that the Ontario government can play a role in market development in co-operation with industry. It might also be of interest to say that Mr. Merritt has this weekend returned to England, where he will be completing arrangements for a very large display of Ontario farm products and a further follow-up of contacts with the United Kingdom food trade.

I would like to say a word, too, Mr. Chairman, concerning our farm management programme in the province of Ontario, which started back in 1948 with a very small beginning. Interest developed as time went on, to the place where, in 1961, priority was given to the establishment of farm management courses in every county of the province.

In 1956, the county of Bruce set up what might be described as a pilot project in farm management under the guidance of the agricultural representative, Mr. George Gear. Along with him was appointed a supervisor, Mr. Larry Rosavear and, after 5 years of concentrated effort on the part of these young farm people—and some of them not so young—who are members of that course, I had the opportunity last fall of meeting with them in what was their first get-together as a group.

Some 125 of those farmers, with their wives, came out to a banquet on a very cold, wintry, snowy night. They got together and congratulated themselves, and I say this very justifiably, for the excellent job which they had done in establishing a farm management course on the basis of practical operation of their farms on a business-like basis.

And I would like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it is to the advantage of all farm people to operate their farms as a business as well as using it as a way of life; because, certainly, too often we have been told that as farmers we do nothing more than enjoy the value of country living and describe ourselves as living in a way of life that is beyond reproach from anything else. In today's economy it is necessary that we look beyond that to the place where we must consider ourselves as operating a business. And too often we, as farm people, perhaps—and I know this certainly applies to me as a farmer—have been so fraught with tiredness at the end of a day that we perhaps have not been giving sufficient attention to the actual acts of business management and operation of our farms. And I think if we can instil in the minds of farm people the necessity for business management on sound principle, then I believe we will have gone a long way in bringing a keener appreciation for the application of business to the science of agriculture in the province of Ontario.

We have felt that across this province there has been a tremendous interest in this project. In our own county we have a very active group. The hon. member for Middlesex South (Mr. Allen) will know the group in Middlesex; I was told the other night it numbers well over 90 farmers participating in the club at the present time. This is true right across the province of Ontario.

I would like to say that these groups are being supervised in the various regions of the province—with a supervisor in Ridgeway, one stationed at Kemptonville and, of course, the central office of all this programme is located in the agricultural economics branch of our department, working through the economics department of the OAC. It is initiated by our agricultural representatives at county and district levels.

I would certainly like to point out, Mr. Chairman, that our bankers' school has been developed across the province by Professor A. C. Robertson of Guelph, where he has brought together the bankers of the province, those who are providing credit for farm people, from various financial lending institutions, from the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation, from all types of sources of credit for farm people, brought them together and tried to develop among those people a keener appreciation for the need and for the use of farm credit in the operation of our farming enterprises across the province.

I say, without any hesitation, Mr. Chairman, that the activities of Professor Robertson have brought literally millions of dollars to the use of Ontario farmers in the last few years. Confidence has been created in the minds of our bankers and our lending institution executives, in the farming industry, when they have been shown that where farming is carried on in a businesslike way it is a profitable enterprise. And credit is, to my mind, just another implement that farmers can use as a useful tool in today's economy.

I would like to say, in concluding these remarks, Mr. Chairman, that the policy of this government since it came into office, and not only the policy of this Department of Agriculture, has been to improve the standard of living of the people of this great province who are fortunate enough to be a part of our rural way of life.

I pay humble tribute to the farm organizations, to the farm women's institute groups, whose motto is: "For home and country"; and can we think of a better motto for people to have than that of our women's institutes who have dedicated their lives and their service in their organization to their home and their country?

I would like to pay tribute to the junior farmers' organizations and to point out to the hon. members of this House, through you, Mr. Chairman, that in Ontario we have 37 junior farmer county associations forming 171 individual clubs with 7,099 members; that we have in Ontario today 733 4-H agricultural clubs with 12,820 members; that we have in Ontario today 1,687 girls' home-making clubs operated under our 4-H organization, and we have a total membership there of just under 16,000. And I recall very well, Mr. Chairman, the late member for the riding of Brant last year pointing out, in his own inimitable way, the great contribution that these young people are making to the province of Ontario—where we have these young junior farmers so often marrying girls in the junior farmers' organizations and settling down on the home farm, to carry it on and make a success of it as they have so well in the past.

This is what Ontario rural life really is, and I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it will be the policy of The Department of Agriculture—as long as I am permitted to have anything to do with it—to determine to carry on this way of life through rural Ontario.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Chairman, joining in the debate on the estimates of The Department of Agriculture, I first would like to congratulate the new hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) in his promotion and would hope that his contribution to agriculture will be more than what his speech indicated this afternoon. I had hoped that he would have touched on some of the real problems of agriculture, some of the ones that are the concern of all the farmers in the province, instead of touching on the ones that have not been a concern—although mainly because of the farmers taking the initiative themselves and promoting them to some degree.

I feel that the farm safety he has mentioned, the great work that has been done in that organization, has been spirited primarily by the individuals themselves; but I will hope that in the future, when he gets up to give his estimates, he will touch on some of the controversial subjects such as marketing, such as an over-all milk marketing plan, such as workmen's compensation—and I could name many more of them.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks are going to be brief this afternoon and I will join in on the various estimates as they come up. The last few years have seen a great decline in the farmers throughout Ontario. As you know, the farm income in the last 15 or 20 years has doubled; unfortunately, the farm expenses of those individual farms has tripled, and this is not a good situation. I notice that this government has seen all these rises in expenses taking place and has done little or nothing to cope with the situation.

We on this side of the House believe in a fair return to the farmer for the crops and the products that he produces. We believe that parity prices for all farm products should be an objective of any government whether it be on that side of the House or a Liberal one. I can tell you that this party believes in adequate farm prices, and that they will be necessary if we are going to serve the farm economy and save that economy from the present condition it is currently in.

We are much concerned, frankly, that the marketing plans are not getting the full support of the farmers at the present time. On whose shoulders does this blame fall? We are concerned because the recent votes in the corn and the tobacco, as of last weekend, have indicated that the marketing plans throughout this province are in jeopardy; and with the defeat of those two votes, namely corn and tobacco, how could one think any other way? It indicates that this government is not competent to carry out the best interests of the farmers. It is a sincere threat to all marketing plans in the province.

We believe that a concerted effort must be made to incorporate a national marketing plan for all Canada. This seems to be one of the features that has not been promoted by the Tory government on the other side of the House and we feel that it has got to come if we are going to get the real benefit of any individual marketing plan; and I think the time has come when the government must look to that end. Ontario is the leading agricultural province in Canada. Ontario farmers produce a greater variety of food, worth more money, than farmers in any other part of Canada.

Agriculture is still one of the biggest industries in the province of Ontario; despite the fact that many people are leaving the farm, the revenue continues to rise. The problems of farmers and the problems of agriculture, therefore, are of vital concern to all the people of Ontario.

We hear a lot today about the farm problems. What is the farm problem? Well, one of the main problems of farmers today is that they have surplus products, or that they are over-producing, and the revenue that they are receiving is very, very low. Ontario farmers today have become the victims of a price squeeze in which the farmer continues to get low prices for the food he produces and at the same time has to pay higher and higher prices for the things he buys. An hour's work in manufacturing today buys 40 per cent more food than it did 10 years ago.

The farm problem in Ontario is also an economic problem, with the family farm, a relatively small economic unit, having to compete more and more frequently with the large corporations. It is also the problem of thousands of individual farmers competing with each other and selling their products to a large corporate buyer.

But the farm problem in Ontario is more than just an economic problem. It is a social problem, as farmers leave the land and the community life of rural areas disintegrates under the loss of people, with the decline of local industry and attraction of the cities.

In the 15 years from 1941 to 1956, 38,000 Ontario farms went out of production. Experts tell us that if the present trend continues another 25,000 farms will fail in the next 20 years.

The farm problem is also a problem of automation. Machines cut down the number of farm jobs while increasing production and adding to surpluses that, in turn, drive prices down still further. Of 140,000 farms in Ontario, 26,000 earn less than $100 a month.

In the last 10 years the cost of operating a farm has tripled. Net farming income in Ontario in the year just past was the lowest since The Department of Agriculture began to keep records. This, hon. members, is something we should be very careful about.

Mr. Chairman, the tax burden on Ontario farms continued to mount, with the cost of education alone accounting for well over half of all the land taxes levied in the province. Actually, the one vital question for farmers is not whether vertical integration is good or bad, but who should control vertical integration. Farmers do not want to become hewers of wood and drawers of water, as my hon. friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver) intimates. Farmers want to be self-employed, self-sufficient, independent businessmen and want to control their own industry.

I believe that farmers should control the agricultural industry. I believe they can and should control the process of vertical integration through co-operatives which are organized by the farmers, to work for the farmers. I believe that the role of government is to help the farmers accomplish this.

I read a recent editorial from a farm co-operative movement in Nova Scotia. It is interesting, and I am going to quote from it:

There is considerable interest in this area in co-operatives and it is always a good thing to take a look at the other areas when trying to determine the value and the problems which might be met in our own area. A few years ago, the farmers of Nova Scotia decided that they needed a farmer-controlled meat packing plant in Nova Scotia. At that time, most livestock were marketed through a few privately owned plants or shipped to Montreal for processing. It was felt that the price of the finished meat products was unduly high compared with the price received by Nova Scotia farmers for their livestock.

In co-operation with the government of Nova Scotia a co-operative abattoir was financed and established to provide two things. First, a farmer-controlled outlet for livestock; and, second, some measure of competition for the established trade.

Concurrent with the new plant was a push to greatly increase meat production in the province. The aim was to increase production so that Nova Scotia could provide all its own needs for meat. In the past, Nova Scotia had imported from other parts of Canada a large proportion of meat as needed.

The co-operative abattoir was established and opened about a year ago. Recently the Minister of Agriculture for Nova Scotia had this to say about the plant: "The establishment of a co-operative abattoir in Halifax has been a great boon to the beef raisers in Nova Scotia."

The hon. Minister was speaking this afternoon about beef-raising.

He noted that since the plant was opened there had been a tremendous improvement in the price Nova Scotia farmers received for their beef cattle. In fact, since the opening of the plant, Nova Scotia beef prices had risen to be about equal with the price at Montreal. This indicates how a modern, well-managed co-operative has helped the livestock producers of one of Canada's problem areas, the Maritimes.

The farmers of Ontario, operating their family farms, have achieved great efficiency. The farmers of Ontario have not failed the consumer or the economy. The economy, none the less, has failed them.

In an expanding economy, it is only fair and just that farmers share in the growth of prosperity. It is not fair to farmers that, while the rest of the work force grows richer, they grow poorer. It is not only unfair, it is also unhealthy. The government can help farmers to help themselves to a just share of prosperity by encouraging the growth of co-operatives.

If hon. members will notice in the estimates, when we get down to them, we have an appropriation of about $450,000, and each year only about $300,000 of that is used up.

In other words, about a quarter of the price of what it will cost to build an over-pass for one of our super highways, that is the contribution, the meagre contribution, that this government is loaning to co-operatives. It seems rather unfortunate that the Tory government, which seems to be the champion of all the people, would give this meagre appropriation to this great co-operative movement, which could do so much throughout the province—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Would my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Innes: —by making available the capital farmers need to keep pace with automation, to expand their buildings, to re-equip their farms and to establish the processing and marketing facilities that will bring farmers a greater share in the over-all profits of the food industry.

I might ask the hon. Minister if he is in favour of aiding the co-operative, FAME?

We in the Liberal party recognize the problems confronting the farmers in Ontario. We are concerned to find the best means with which government can assist farmers to solve their present dilemmas. To me, the premises that I have outlined constitute a reasonable base upon which a sound farm policy can be constructed in the best interests of all the farmers and the people of Ontario.

Now, there are a few other items that I would like to touch on. I feel that, possibly, when the estimates come up, we can reach into them a little bit more, but I would want to say that the hon. Minister did speak a little bit about research. That is a good step forward and one that should have been taken many years ago. It has been a problem where one institution has been overlapping research on another. This has been a wasteful extravagant feature, in keeping with some of the other departments of this government. I think a programme here was long overdue and we hope for great success in the research department.

Mention was made of the tremendous growth in the education and of the students attending our various agricultural institutions and the education that will be forthcoming in the years ahead, and also the almost doubling of the student body at some of the schools and colleges. My only comment is that I would like to stress very strongly the importance of the Ontario Agricultural College. It is the largest in the British Commonwealth, a college that is known throughout the world for being the first in many achievements, but I would mention to the hon. Minister that it is not going to attain the success that he intends unless he will go along with the thinking of the hon. members of this side of the House and incorporate it to a doctor's degree granting college. It will then receive recognition of students from all over the world who will come to the agricultural college and obtain their doctorate degree in both veterinary and agriculture. I say this in all sincerity. The late member for Brant and I, Mr. Chairman, both being graduates of that institution, felt that it should have this recognition. When other lesser colleges throughout Canada have those facilities, it seems rather unfair to think that an institution—the largest in the British Commonwealth—does not have that opportunity. I think it is only fair to students who are attending that they have the opportunity to get that further education. It will instill in the minds of people all over the world the importance of agriculture to Ontario.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, at the outset I would like to congratulate the hon. Minister (Mr. Stewart) on two accounts.

First, on his elevation to the position of Minister of Agriculture. I know it is a task to which he will turn his time and energies with interest and satisfaction because of his own position as a farmer in this province. The second thing I want to congratulate him on is that I did not think it was possible for an hon. Minister to get up and introduce his estimates and so skilfully avoid all of the major issues that are now plaguing the agricultural industry.

I am not ignoring the few that he raised; but when hon. members think of vertical integration, when they think of marketing, when they think of all the real issues pre-occupying the farmers of this province today, he did not touch on them except in passing. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, his speech was exactly—he tackled it to a degree, I grant, in the category of the hon. Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Yaremko) the other day—I will not say the Provincial Secretary, because he has forgotten he is the Provincial Secretary, he is just the Minister of Citizenship—when he discussed education and all of these other features, which are important enough in themselves, but never got down to the real issue which is creating many of the problems for the new Canadians.

Now let me take just one point to illustrate. The hon. Minister referred, with commendation, to the mottoes of the students at Ridgetown and OAC with emphasis on research. I have been impressed myself, Mr. Chairman, on reading agricultural journals, and those who are writing on agriculture for non-agricultural journals, by the fact that our real problem today is not research on production. The problem of production is not the problem on the farm front. In most places the problems are created because of surplus production. Our desperate need is for research in marketing, in pricing and in difficulties that arise after the farmer has actually produced.

We heard very, very little of that.

I think it is rather significant, Mr. Chairman, that a short time ago the hon. Minister of Agriculture appointed a fact-finding committee. This appointment is a belated acknowledgment of what has now become a rather desperate position on the agricultural front—the threat of vertical integration.

The family farm, which is the basis of agriculture as we have known it in the past, is faced with the real possibility of extinction. During the last 10 years we have had a relentless cost-price squeeze.

I was interested, for example, in the hon. Minister making a plea to farmers that they must be not just farmers in the sense that they regarded themselves in the past, but they must be businessmen. Mr. Chairman, if most farmers were really to take his plea seriously and examine the normal way in which business operates, they would be leaving the farm even more quickly than they are at the present time. Because if farmers were to operate on the basis of most businessmen, namely, that he should get a fair return on the capital which he has invested, that he should get a fair return for his own labour and the labour of the rest of the family, then farmers as businessmen would be getting out of the business overnight.

So I think maybe he should push that plea just a little bit more quietly.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. MacDonald: Surely. I can hear the hon. Minister. The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) could not hear him.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Thanks very much. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member for York South realizes that in the group that I referred to—and this is only in one particular county—that after an actual analysis of their books for some years, the top farmers of that group had a net income of well over $5,000, after all the expenses that the hon. member referred to had been taken off.

These are the things that I think we should recognize. We should not always plead the case of down in the mouth. I resent, being a farmer myself, being told continually that I am a member of a group of people that the hon. member would describe as being always in desperate, dire financial circumstances.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, it is all very well for a few of the aristocrats in the agricultural industry, for whom the hon. Minister is apparently quite willing to be the voice; but I invite him to re-read the introductory portion of the submissions of both the federation of agriculture and the farm union. If he thinks I am misrepresenting the voice of organized agriculture at the present time, then I think he had better go back and re-read it, because I am not exaggerating the situation they have presented.

It is all very well for the hon. Minister to come in here and present this rosy picture; but what are the facts? The facts are that in the past ten years agricultural costs have gone up 23 per cent, while receipts have gone down 12 per cent. This is the basic position of agriculture today.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I cannot agree with the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: These figures are accurate figures that are available from agricultural economists; and this squeeze has gone on relentlessly for the past ten years. The hon. Minister need only take a look at the past year. I have here, for example, the figures available from the federal bureau of statistics on February 20, 1962, in which they point out that the net income—and this is the important figure to look at, not the gross income—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It was the net income I was talking about.

Mr. MacDonald: The net income of agriculture in the last year is now down to $1 billion. Now I will read the next paragraph, which throws it all into the appropriate context of the moment:

The drop of $307 million brought net farm income in 1961 to the lowest point since 1957 and underlines the extent of the loss suffered by western farmers for low grain yield and the drought-afflicted prairies.

Mr. S. L. Hall (Halton): We are in Ontario now.

Mr. MacDonald: We may be in Ontario, but—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I did not know which of the backbenchers made that comment, but I remember a year or so ago one of the agricultural organizations invited those of the standing committee on agriculture to come down and have a meal, and in the course of his remarks we had rather illuminating comment from the hon. member who has just spoken. It was to the effect that he hears an awful lot about farmers who are poor and down in the mouth, but he cannot figure this out because he has been selling cars to them and he has been getting his money and therefore farmers really are rich and it was about time they cut out this kind of talk.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): What is wrong with selling a few cars to them?

Mr. MacDonald: It is striking home a little, anyway, Mr. Chairman.

However, Mr. Chairman, the net impact of all this trend, this process that is now going on, is revealed rather interestingly and dramatically in a statement of this government itself. As far back now as seven years ago, when this government made its representation to the Gordon commission which was looking at Canada's economic prospects for the next 20 or 25 years, they pointed out the significant fact that half of the farmers in the province of Ontario today were newcomers who had come onto the farms since 1945. Now what that simply means, Mr. Chairman, is that half of the people in agriculture had been driven out of agriculture since 1945.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Do not be silly.

Mr. MacDonald: They have not been able to survive, and the industry that we used to know in the olden days—an industry with a degree of stability—has in fact become an industry of transients. Even those who are today on the farm, and trying to make a go of the farm, are not able to survive from the income of the farm alone. The result is that there is a very significant proportion, and a growing one every year, of farmers who are working in industry, who are forced to seek an income from some supplementary source to be able to survive on the farm, or to have a standard of living that is in keeping with the standard of living of the rest of the people in the province of Ontario. So there is no need for the hon. Minister to get up and quote a few isolated figures with regard to a few farmers and ignore the generality of the problem the farmers are facing today.

Now, Mr. Chairman, some people view these agricultural problems today with equanimity; in fact they almost gloat over them. I do not know whether the hon. Minister is in that category; I do not think I should be unfair and suggest he is, but some of his political pals in the newspaper world certainly are. I am referring to the editorial writers of the Toronto Globe and Mail. Their views on agriculture are of constant fascination.

For example, earlier this month, February 10—last month now—the Toronto Globe and Mail had an editorial, the first paragraph of which read this way:

Warning the meat packers council of Canada against further vertical integration of the agricultural industry, Mr. Everett M. Biggs, Ontario Deputy Minister of Agriculture, said that if food processors are permitted to raise a substantial proportion of their own raw product requirement, the existing system of marketing farm produce will break down. There could hardly be a better reason for encouraging vertical integration.

Now there is one of the voices of Toryism in the province of Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Is the hon. member in favour of it?

Mr. MacDonald: Of course I am not in favour of it. And if the hon. Minister has misjudged any of my comments so badly up until now, I ask him to listen a little more carefully.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I thought the hon. member was opposed to that.

Mr. MacDonald: Here is one voice of Toryism in this province, in effect, saying that if farm marketing, which of course encroaches on the free enterprise which those people who have been exploiting agriculture traditionally down through the years are happy with, is creating this kind of a problem and is going to be hurt by vertical integration, then let vertical integration come all the more quickly.

However, they had a few more comments with regard to the hon. Minister when he set up his vertical integration committee. In an editorial entitled:

EXPENDABLE FARMERS

—a view incidentally which is fairly widely held in Tory ranks—the editorial writer had this to say in the final paragraph from an editorial on February 23:

Mr. Stewart said last month that vertical integration is “not in the interests of agriculture or our family farm” and should be treated accordingly.

He might better have echoed the remarks of one of his predecessors as Agriculture Minister, the late Mr. Tom Kennedy, who was himself a farmer. After observing that “the day of the family farm is fast coming to an end,” Mr. Kennedy said: “What we need today is an educational campaign to bring home to the farmer that he is expendable unless he can change his mode of operation.”

We hope the committee will consider the advantages of vertical integration as a realistic change in the farmers’ mode of operation.

Now there is the one wing of the Tory party, and incidentally a pretty dominant wing of the Tory party, the big business wing of the Tory party that provides most of its slush funds—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, now, who does the hon. member think he is kidding?

Mr. MacDonald: Is it not wonderful how they are cut to the quick; and we get the squeals from the other side of the House—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York South has done the present Minister of Agriculture the greatest favour any man has ever done him in commending him on the stand he has taken on vertical integration.

Mr. MacDonald: Agreed. But I trust the hon. Minister did not ignore the opening comment of mine that this was a belated action on the part of the government in recognizing a desperate problem. What he should have been doing—he and his predecessors should have been getting at this some 5 or 10 years ago, and he would not have had so many of the farmers leaving to let somebody else try their hand for a time to see whether they can survive on the farm.

An hon. member: Where were you?

Mr. MacDonald: This is the kind of ambivalence and contradiction in the Tory approach. And, incidentally, Mr. Chairman, while I am always interested in the views of the Liberal Party to my right, I am very curious to find the same kind of ambivalence in their ranks.

For example, during the by-election the new hon. member for Brant—

An hon. member: Oh, do not talk about that.

Another hon. member: He made such a poor show, he would have been glad to stay home.

Mr. MacDonald: We doubled our vote and we will do it once or twice more and hon. members will see the difference.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am quoting from the Brantford Expositor of December 21, in which they have a direct quotation from Mr. Nixon, the new member for Brant, quoting him as saying this:

The family farm is now being threatened by the big food processing companies which are buying up farms and invading the field of production which rightly belongs to the farmer. Mr. Nixon emphasized that this invasion of the big processing companies was threatening all types of farming, dairy farming and tobacco farming as well as the growers who concentrate mainly on fruits and vegetables.

So far, a very eloquent, able statement, but just to show, Mr. Chairman, how deep is the conflict right in the heart of the Liberal Party, at the same meeting—

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): The hon. member should not worry about our heart; he should worry about his own.

Mr. MacDonald: —at the same meeting they had another speaker and what did he say? The news story continues:

The meeting was also addressed by Senator William Taylor, who strongly criticized the New Democratic Party candidate for his attacks on big business. Senator Taylor pointed out that the shareholders of most of our big corporations include farmers, school teachers and housewives and people in all walks of life.

So here we have one voice of the Liberal Party deploring the threat to the family farm—

An hon. member: Who won that by-election?

Mr. MacDonald: —deploring the threat to the family farm by corporations; and here we had the same voice—another voice of the Liberal Party at the same meeting—being critical of the New Democratic Party candidate because of the fact that he was pointing to the threat of corporations to the family farm.

An hon. member: A different thing altogether.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, maybe it will take a little time before the people see the contradiction in the Liberal Party but I submit that they will.

An hon. member: Is the hon. member trying to say that the people are not intelligent?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I did not say that. The people did not get all the facts, but one day they will get all the facts and in their intelligence they will vote accordingly.

The answer, Mr. Chairman, as to why you have this kind of contradiction in both the Liberal and Conservative parties' approach, is of course, if I may borrow that current phrase at the moment, that both of the old parties are the victim of sinister influences within their ranks—

An hon. member: From where?

Mr. MacDonald: From the big business interests who dominate them. And that is the reason why, of course, on one hand they promise to protect the family farm and on the other hand they speak on behalf of those forces that are destroying the family farm.

Now lest there be any doubt as to where the New Democratic Party stands as far as the family farm—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Oliver: The only farmer the hon. member's party had has gone.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you with me, Mr. Chairman, or with all this babble?

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Thanks. I want to read one quotation from the interim statement of of the New Democratic Party provincially, as was adopted at the founding convention last fall—

An hon. member: This one may be changed, eh?

Mr. MacDonald: No, there are a lot of farmers participating in the full statement of it. And you know, interestingly enough, Mr. Chairman, since I have now had some reference to a late and unlamented gentleman—

An hon. member: Who is that?

Mr. MacDonald: —who has joined the Liberal party. When this happens, you know, it reminds me of the time when somebody in the House of Commons who was a big burly fellow said to Tommy Douglas, when he was a member of the federal House of Commons years ago, that he was such a small little fellow that he could eat him with one gulp. Whereupon Tommy Douglas said: "If you did you would have more brains in your stomach than you have in your head."

An hon. member: That is an old one.

Mr. MacDonald: I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, before the cheering takes place among the gentlemen to the right, they had better wait until they find out what they have got. However, Mr. Chairman, the point I wanted to refer to, since there was some derision poured on our programme and how it is being shaped, is that in that famous press conference that was held when the none too cordial and intimate relationships were established between Mr. Pearson and Mr. Argue, and which was accurately referred to in the news story of the Ottawa Citizen in this way:

—that Mr. Argue looked calm and confident but Mr. Pearson looked ill at ease.

An hon. member: And with good reason.

Mr. MacDonald: Anyway, in the course of it, somebody said: "Well, what is going to be the Liberal party programme on agriculture, and will Mr. Argue support it?"

Mr. Pearson said: "We have not got the agricultural programme drafted yet, but when it is it will be given to Mr. Argue."

That is how farmers have to operate within the party, where other than farmers shape their programme.

However, do not let me digress any further, Mr. Chairman. I was enjoying myself on the digression, however.

The New Democratic Party believes that the family farm, enlarged to meet modern needs and conditions, is a basically sound unit for agricultural production and a desirable social institution. It provides a unit of production in which families may exercise ownership and management; it fosters personal responsibility and human dignity, all of which contribute to a great stability for our rural communities. I just want to say, in contrast to some of the forces in the Tory party such as those who speak from the car agencies or from the Toronto Globe and Mail editorial writers, that there are others who disagree with them.

As the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) made a few points on which I agreed with him, I want to acknowledge one. He stated during the course of his remarks that, to a degree, vertical integration is inevitable; to the extent that vertical integration is going to improve the efficiency of production and marketing, it is inevitable. The real question that faces the farmers is: who is going to control this vertical integration?

Is it going to be vertical integration from the top down, so that the farmer is reduced to the position of a twentieth-century serf who has no sense of ownership or no sense of management—he gets $1 per pig per month for the production on the farm and he is just a hired man for the packing company or the feed company? Or is the farmer going to have the sense of dignity with vertical integration controlled from the bottom up, where he is going to have control of his product beyond the actual production, into the processing and into the marketing? That is, of course, the kind of desirable vertical integration; but that is not the kind of vertical integration that the Toronto Globe and Mail editorial writers are in favour of because that, of course, would wrest the control from the packing and the feed companies, the machine companies and all the others.

Now, the question, Mr. Chairman, that I think we should address our attention to for a moment, is: what is going to be done about this? This is the real basic problem upon which the hon. Minister, in the year 1962, has set up a fact-finding committee to give him some idea of what this government should do. The farmers have been living with the problem for a long time. I think the rest of us in the House should direct our attention to this while the government drifts a little bit further.

One of the things that I think we have to do is to give far greater attention to the development of co-operatives. I know that the government has moved, after great pressure for years—this is the only condition under which they do move, the result of pressure for years—in establishing, not a department of co-operatives that might do a real over-all co-ordinated job, but a co-operative branch within The Department of Agriculture. This is a step in the right direction.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that we should take note of the fact that while everybody pays lip service to co-operative enterprise as being the finest kind of economic activity that is possible, within the last 10 years—and I think this would be true even if one went further back—the co-operatives have no more than held their own as a proportion of the economy in the province of Ontario. In other words, this highly desirable kind of economic activity is not becoming a growing and a larger proportion of our economy; it is no more than holding its own.

I was interested just this past week, for example, to read in the February 24 issue of the Financial Post an article on co-operatives; and I quite acknowledge that maybe these figures should be analyzed to find out just what is the classification in the various provinces. But, on the surface, it struck me as rather significant that of the 2,883 co-operatives in Canada—marketing, purchasing, service and fishermen's co-operatives, doing a business of $1.5 billion approximately—if you contrasted the situation in the province of Quebec with the situation in the province of Ontario, you have 364 co-operatives in the province of Ontario and 732 in the province of Quebec. In other words, the number of co-operatives is well over double in the province of Quebec as compared with the province of Ontario.

Another rather disturbing feature, Mr. Chairman, is that the co-operative movement, at least in its agricultural wing in the province of Ontario, is based on the family farm. This is the very sector of the economy in agriculture which is being destroyed. If you go out into the rural part of Ontario it is the little family farm that is in the co-operatives. "Agribusiness"—that rather unlovely term that has developed—a combination of business and agriculture, the corporation farms and so on, are the people who are less interested in co-operatives. They are not interested in co-operating as fully with the rest of their fellow farmers.

In other words, the whole vertical integration process is a threat to the present co-operative movement—in addition to the failure to expand in the manner we would like to see.

Why have we got this? Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest that there is no mystery to it. Despite a certain amount of political footwork to suggest that the government is intensely interested in co-operatives, when farmers have moved to that next step—for the control of vertical integration, not just for production but moving into the processing of it—we have had some rather dramatic revelations of the basic hostility of this government. The best one, of course, of the attitude of the government, was expressed by the former hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) to the proposal for building meat packing plants, in the province of Ontario, known as FAME.

Hon. members will recall the hon. Prime Minister's very succinct and eloquent comment was that he had "never heard of anything so silly in his life." That, Mr. Chairman, was with regard to the principle, the ideal, not to all the subsequent difficulties that emerged because of personality clashes and difficulties over finances. This was just simply to the principle, the idea that Ontario farmers should seek to get control of the processing of their meat products in the fashion that Quebec farmers have, so that they control 35 or 40 per cent, or Danish farmers, where they will control some 80 to 90 per cent.

Contrast the situation and attitude that we have in the province of Ontario with the one that the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) referred to down in the province of Nova Scotia, where at exactly the same time—and interestingly they were concerned with another Tory government—the farmers down there wanted to go and extend their control of the product, the control of vertical integration, through building meat packing plants throughout the province. They were told in advance by the government that for every one dollar they raised the government would make another dollar available. Very quickly, the farmers raised the necessary amount and they have their plants in operation.

Now, I am not suggesting that this government should provide financial assistance to FAME in the province of Ontario because the tragedy, Mr. Chairman, is that many of the farmers in this province are suspicious of the kind of domination and influence exercised by governments in farm organization. They are not asking for the money because they are fearful that if they get money from the government then their organization is likely to come under the control of the government and producer control would be destroyed altogether.

Furthermore, you have such things as the relentless campaign against co-operatives for an alteration in the tax structure, emanating from the chamber of commerce, the manufacturers' association—once again those very bodies that are normally in political working partnership with the Conservative government.

I was interested, in the MacFarlane report that was made on trying to reconcile the marketing boards and co-operatives, to find that one of the recommendations urged that greater credit should be established for co-operatives—not just credit on the limited basis that is available now—such as the hon. Minister was trying to draw attention to a few minutes ago. In fact, it struck me as rather significant that out of the whole of the MacFarlane report the one item that was picked by the rural co-op, one of the voices of agriculture in the province of Ontario, was this particular recommendation.

The first two paragraphs of their report read as follows:

That the establishment of large-scale, government-backed credit facilities for aiding the rapid co-operative development was advocated by David MacFarlane, Professor of Economics, of the Faculty of Agriculture, McGill University in Toronto last week. Presenting the long awaited agricultural marketing report at the co-operative union of Ontario's annual meeting Dr. MacFarlane said that he had in mind a credit organization patterned after the U.S. bank for co-operatives.

In other words, an attitude on the part of the government—a willingness to make available to co-operatives, the credit that is required so that the co-operative sector of the economy can expand, instead of merely holding its own as a proportion of the economy. These are some of the things that we should give our attention to.

The second answer, I think, to meeting the problem of the farmers at the present time is to be found in the marketing field. I am not going to rehash a great deal of old straw in this connection, but I think basic to our consideration of it is the action of this government a year or so ago, Mr. Chairman, with regard to Bill No. 86. We had in the province of Ontario one of the better, if not the best, farm marketing Act in this Dominion.

There were weaknesses in it, weaknesses which I think we should have paid some attention to and corrected. But because of the government's reaction to certain battles that took place on the farm front in the province of Ontario, they brought in amendments through Bill No. 86 that are now part and parcel of The Farm Products Marketing Act. These amendments have, in effect, destroyed the basic principle upon which marketing had been built, namely, producer control.

One of the other problems that we must take cognizance of, as has been illustrated in the recent corn vote, is that because of the influence in the control of corporations, and those who are willing to go along with corporations in contracts and things of this nature, it is becoming increasingly difficult to get marketing schemes established today.

I suppose each person is entitled to his own judgment as to why the corn vote was lost, but certainly I was interested to discover that this was the considered view of the executive of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture when they came and presented their annual representation to our caucus the other day.

What we need to establish, Mr. Chairman, is orderly marketing. This has been one of the goals of agriculture for the last generation at least, orderly marketing, which starts at the provincial level. But if we are going to get orderly marketing, as we discovered with cheese, and to a degree with hogs, and many other products, we must face up to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that we must go beyond the province and recognize the need for national marketing boards.

Related to national marketing boards—and here is where I wish the government would spend some of its research money—we need some research on trying to get a price for the farmers so that agriculture's income would be closer to parity, not just as an objective but as a reality in this province and in this nation.

The basic figures here, Mr. Chairman, are simply these: With 12 per cent of the people today in Canada on farms, they are receiving 6 per cent of the national income, so that there is need for whatever effort can be made to get a greater parity in terms of income—not the kind of situation that we have seen in the cost-price squeeze over the last ten years.

Without going into the detail of it; this is complete justification for guaranteed prices or deficiency prices or whatever other kind of approach this government or any succeeding government feels must be taken to make certain that agriculture gets a fair share of the economy. And they must proceed in working this out in a fairer fashion despite the criticism from the sidelines and from those powerful voices within the government itself.

It is all right to subsidize the gold miners but it is not all right to subsidize the milk industry or some other sector of the agricultural industry that is producing such a vital product as food. In fact, it is rather interesting in this search of organized agriculture from the marketing board to find what happened just a short time ago in the federal House of Commons, Mr. Chairman.

A member of the House of Commons, Arnold Peters, the New Democratic member for Timiskaming, moved an amendment to the Throne Speech reaffirming the principle of national marketing boards. Now, for these voices on behalf of agriculture that have come from my right in the Liberal ranks, the very intriguing thing was that when the vote came, the Liberals joined with the Conservatives in opposition to the concept of national marketing boards. It is very interesting when one thinks of—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order. In order not to take the time of this House, unnecessarily, I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that we in the Liberal Party believe in a national marketing scheme.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, here we have just another instance, Mr. Chairman, of the conflict, the schizophrenia and the ambivalence within the Liberal ranks. The record, if they just want to go back and take a look at the federal Hansard for Tuesday, February 20, reveals that the Liberals joined with the Tories in the House of Commons in voting against national marketing boards.

Mr. Oliver: We are not opposed to national marketing. This is a figment of imagination.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I shall not comment on the fact that if a party believes in something and votes against it, it creates another mystery that we ordinary folk will have to cope with in trying to divine the mysteries of the Liberal Party.

However, I was rather interested—to get back to the Conservatives over here—when Arnold Peters sat down after moving his amendment, which read as follows:

That this House regrets that Your Excellency's advisors have failed to give agricultural producers proper and countervailing powers in the market place through among other things taking steps to provide for national marketing boards,

The next man to get up was J. N. Macdonnell, a very respected gentleman who gave the most pained exposition of how frightening were the suggestions involved in the operation of national marketing boards. He could not conceive of anything that frightened him more than the pricing arrangements and the operations of everything involved in a national marketing board.

He summed it up all very beautifully, Mr. Chairman, by this:

Insofar as I am concerned it is inconsistent with the aims of the party to which I belong.

So you have the Tory party voting against it, and one of their respected members saying that national marketing boards were inconsistent with the aims of the party to which he belonged. Where the Liberal Party belonged, I do not know, except that they too voted against it.

If I may revert very briefly again to the issue that is one of such very great delight in the Liberal ranks at the moment—there was an article a week ago Saturday in the Toronto Globe and Mail datelined Saskatoon which read:

WILL THE PRAIRIE FARMERS SEEK A NEW VOICE?

I will quote one or two paragraphs here.

They said [these are the people in the Saskatchewan Farmers Union] that they had a great deal of sympathy for Mr. Argue when he first took his step. However, Mr. Argue will receive "no sympathy" for joining the Liberals from the majority of the farmers in the prairies who belong to the provincial farm unions. The reason for this quick reaction to Mr. Argue's orbiting is in the fact that the Liberal Opposition at Ottawa voted against national marketing boards. Where would Mr. Argue have stood on this question as a Liberal? This is the poser that SFU officials would like him to answer.

That is from the Toronto Globe and Mail, February 23, by Patrick O'Dwyer, a good Irishman.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to turn to one other aspect of farming and I want to raise this in terms of principle, dissociated from personalities, because I think this is something that is a matter of growing concern, perhaps for the moment among a minority of farmers, but nonetheless a matter of growing concern.

On page 7 of the OFA's brief this year, I was interested in their comment to this effect:

The agent of government policy, the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board, has been especially helpful in the practical interpretation and implementation of government and farm organization marketing aims.

Now here was a rather frank and blunt assertion that the farm products marketing board was an agent of government policy. If that be true, I think it is time for us to take a look at the setup of the Ontario Farm Marketing Board and to ask ourselves whether this setup does not involve two or three functions which are basically in conflict, if the government expects the same group to fulfill them.

For example, here is a quotation from the terms of the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board, the Act. It reads as follows:

The board may, subject to the regulations, investigate, adjust or otherwise settle any dispute relating to the marketing of regulated products between producers and persons engaged in marketing or processing their regulated product.

Another subsection in the same clause reads as follows:

Upon any investigation under this section the board shall have all of the power that may be conferred upon a commissioner under The Public Inquiries Act.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the first point that I want to make is that one of the functions of the Ontario Farm Products Board is a judicial function—

Mr. Sopha: Quasi-judicial!

Mr. MacDonald: Agreed, a quasi-judicial function! Then there is another clause in the Act, which reads as follows:

The board may require any local boards to carry out any purpose of the plan that the board deems necessary or advisable, to vary any purpose of the plan if the board deems advisable, and to cease or desist in the carrying out of any purpose or proposed purpose of the plan the board deems unnecessary or inadvisable.

In other words, that, now supported by the further powers of Bill No. 86 which are part and parcel of The Farm Products Marketing Act, underlines the fact that the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board in addition to being a quasi-judicial body, is also an administrative body which is empowered under the Act to intervene daily, if it so desires, in the operations of local marketing boards.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Has that ever happened?

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, it has. It happened in the instance of the hog board.

Then there is a third function of the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board and that is: increasingly, officials of the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board and members of it are moving across the province engaging in what could be described as, "propaganda or educational work" in terms of implementing government policy. So that this quasi-judicial body is engaged through its personnel in going around the province to try to get acceptance of government policy.

I want to suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is impossible to have these functions performed fairly and impartially by the same group of people. I am not just going to submit my own conclusions on this, I offer the comments of an eminent jurist in the province of Ontario. In another context, but with reference to the same kind of a problem, some years ago, back in 1947, Mr. Justice Wells was the author of a report looking into the milk industry. In his report Mr. Justice Wells had two or three comments to make which I would like to read to the House. The first one went as follows:

The milk control board, by virtue of the terms of the Act, has been called on to perform two conflicting functions. The one administrative, and the other judicial in respect to licensing. In my opinion the judicial function has not been performed judicially but is being governed by the overall administrative policy of the board. Administrative objectives seemed to have been the governing factor and to have coloured the board's interpretation of the terms of the Act and its application to the individual applicant. A more effective division of these functions would seem desirable.

In other words, what Mr. Justice Wells was saying—and his comment has perfect application to the situation at the moment—was that if the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board is an agency of the government for the implementation of government policy and if it has administrative capacities, it is impossible for it to act judicially in fulfilling its quasi-judicial function. In fact he goes one step further. He said this:

In my view, it is quite impossible to fairly combine the powers of bureaucratic administration with those of a judicial nature in the same person with any hope of dealing impartially with the subject's rights.

He finally makes a proposal as to what should be done about this, which I throw out for consideration of the House and maybe some years hence for consideration by the government for action. What he said was this, in his recommendations in that report:

That the administrative and judicial functions of the board as to licensing be separated by setting up an advisory board somewhat similar to the insurance advisory board, in order that the judicial functions of the milk control board be exercised as provided by the statute free from any administrative bias.

In raising this problem, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make this final comment. I think one of the disturbing things which is emerging in having a board with all of these conflicting functions is the fact that the government has gone one step further, and this government has a fantastically well-developed capacity for captivating, or half-captivating, agricultural organizations by getting key personnel in. Recently, what the government has done, is appointed to fill the positions on the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board three persons for whom I have the highest regard—one of them is a past top official of the farm union, another is a past top official of the federation of agriculture, the third one is a past top official of the UCO.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Good men!

Mr. MacDonald: Right! Now each of these people is going to be placed in the position where, by the comment of the federation of agriculture itself, their function now is to administer government policy and to promote government policy. In other words, the grass roots farmers, particularly those who took a trimming in the hog battle and some other battles that have gone on in the province, asked themselves this question: is it possible for a man to accept a position on a government board, set up in this fashion, and not in effect become a servant of the government and thereby qualify his own impartial judgment?

I want to submit to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that there is no other conclusion to come to in light of the nature of the board and the warnings of a man like Mr. Justice Wells, who knows whereof he speaks, on the conflict involved in this kind of thing. Therefore, the hon. Minister should give some consideration to altering the setup of the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board, because I do not think it is fair to men, who have acquired a respected position in farm organizations, and who accept such positions, feeling that they are going to continue to serve the agricultural community, only to be placed in the position where, wittingly or unwittingly, they must then become a faithful servant of government policy. That is the situation at the present time.

Now I leave that, Mr. Chairman, and turn to one final topic I want to speak about; and that is the government's handling of this farm machinery Act. The farm machinery situation is a very good illustration of the other side of the problem the farmers face, namely, costs. His income is tending to come down, while his costs are going up.

Agriculture expends approximately $60 million a year on farm machinery in Canada; approximately 17 to 18 per cent of their capital requirements are invested in implements. As hon. members of the House who are familiar with the agriculture scene in rural Ontario know, there has been a growing and longstanding feeling of dissatisfaction with regard to the handling or, more particularly, the servicing and the provision of parts in the agricultural industry. In fact the surprising thing, Mr. Chairman, is not that we had a request from agriculture for a farm machinery Act, but that it did not come many years ago. A farm machinery Act has been in effect in the province of Saskatchewan—for they recognized the problems of the farmer and met them rather quickly, instead of belatedly—since away back in 1949.

There is no need for pioneering in this kind of Act. As was pointed out by some of the top officials of both the federation of agriculture and the farmers' union when they met with us on December 7, in the standing committee on agriculture, there are similar Acts in some 21 countries in the western world. We are not asking this government to pioneer, all we are asking this government to do is to quickly adapt legislation for which there is a great body of experience, elsewhere in Canada, and get the legislation into effect in the province of Ontario.

The request put to the government was in terms of urgency. This is an urgent problem. Now, Mr. Chairman, what those farm leaders did not realize is that the government had already tipped its hand that they were not going to act with any degree of urgency on this. In the last week of November, in this House, when the hon. Minister announced that he was calling the standing committee for December 7 to hear these representations from farm leaders, both federation and farmers' union, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) rose in his seat and said that he thought this was a very good procedure. He added that after we had heard the representations of the farm leaders, then we might set up a select committee to look into it more fully.

In other words, it was clear in the minds of the government, at least in the mind of the hon. Prime Minister, that he had a slow-paced approach to this problem and he was going to set up another select committee. On some occasions select committees are useful; on other occasions select committees are designed to postpone action on problems. I submit this was going to be one of them. However, when they came to the standing committee on December 7 and made their representation—joint representations from farm leaders of the province, in the federation and the farmers' union—there were scenes that really should have been recorded for posterity. Because they no sooner had made their plea, and made it eloquently, than one of the key men in the stratagem of the Conservative Party, the hon. member for Lambton East (Mr. Janes), immediately sprang to his feet and moved that this issue should be sent to the hon. Minister for study.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I moved an amendment. I said that I was not objecting to study. There would be a minor degree of study required to adapt existing legislation elsewhere in Canada to the different conditions that we might have in the province of Ontario, or the legislation in other countries to the conditions here. But this is the kind of thing that clearly could have been done in six or eight weeks. So my amendment was the simple amendment that this committee should report by February so that the government would be in a position to respond to the plea of urgency from farm leaders and bring a farm machinery Act at the current session.

What happened, Mr. Chairman? I could not even get a seconder for my motion. In fact, the course of the discussion in the committee went something like this. After the hon. member for Lambton East had moved his motion, then that self-appointed hatchet boy for the hon. Prime Minister, the hon. member for London South (Mr. White) immediately got up and delivered a blistering attack on the whole proposition of a farm machinery Act. Here is where I would liked to have had the TV cameras! Here we had Gordon Greer, the man who was chairman of the policy-making committee—if they made any policy, which they did not at their recent leadership convention—the man who was chairman of the farm section of the policy-making committee, getting up and making an eloquent plea and listening to a fellow Conservative shooting down his proposals in flames. So much so that he indignantly got up at one point and handed Mr. White a sheet of paper upon which presumably he had the five principles of the Act written down, and he said: "Here. You are a little off."

That was the understatement for the day: he was a little off!

However, this really did not surprise me, coming from the Conservative ranks. What really puzzled me was what happened from the Liberal ranks. In the first place we had the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) who is a spokesman from an agricultural area, getting up and parroting in precise terms the comment of the hon. member for Lambton East to the effect that we must go slow on this. In the second place, we had that arch-reactionary of the Liberal ranks, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Chapple), getting into a real tangle with Gordon Greer. Then finally, we had the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), another agricultural area, seconding the Tory motion. So that the Liberal Party climbed right into bed with the Tories, just as it did in Weyburn—deliberately playing the game of the Tories in postponing any action on the urgent plea of the farmers. So once again, Mr. Chairman, we have this conflict within the Liberal Party, that talks about family farms and then has other voices on behalf of the business wing of the party, which is out killing family farms.

The suggestion, Mr. Chairman, the answer in general terms to the problems of agriculture today, is a planned economy. A planned economy in which agriculture will get, through the efforts of themselves through their self-help programme and the co-operation of governments, a fair share for the fruits of their labours. If the powers within the economy today are such that agriculture, with lower and lower bargaining strength, is not getting its fair share of the national income, then it becomes the responsibility of government—I admit primarily at the federal level—to make deficiency payments so that they will get a fair share. This we can only get through planned economic development. This, Mr. Chairman, brings me back to a point which I know will be sharply political and I do not know whether it can be said without great roars of protests from the other side—and that side too—that sooner or later they will have to make their choice as they see what happens to the family farm and what happens with the farm machinery Act and things of this nature. They will have to make their choice as to whether they are going to seek political partnership with the great mass of workers in this country to be found in the trade union movement, or whether they are going to find their political partners among the big business interests who have traditionally exploited them.

I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that in the fullness of time, they will see that it will be in their self-interest to have that kind of a partnership with the industrial worker.

Mr. Chairman, I give you as living proof that this can happen, two contrasting instances in recent history. When the CCF government was elected in Saskatchewan in 1944, a predominantly farm government, one of the first pieces of legislation they passed was what is still acknowledged as one of the finest labour relations Acts in the North American continent. They did it for a group of people who did not really represent a great force as votes.

There were, perhaps, at that time, no more than 15,000 labour voters in the whole of the province of Saskatchewan, because trade unionists were not great in number. But they gave it to these people because it is a fundamental right that any man in a free society should have the right to freedom of association, in the twentieth century, on the economic front—a principle that was first laid down in the Magna Carta away back in 1215 on the political front.

In other words, a predominantly farm government gave this kind of legislation to a small labour minority. In contrast to this, Mr. Chairman, and about the same period, in 1945, in Great Britain, a predominantly labour government was elected. They gave, through the planning of the economy of Great Britain, to a minority group, British farmers, a security such as British agriculture had never had in history. They gave it to them—

An hon. member: They are not in power now.

Mr. MacDonald: They will be again, never fret. This is the essence of a democracy.

They gave it to them because they were entitled to it as people who are entitled to a fair share of the fruits of their labour and not because of the fact that they represented a great number of votes. In other words, there is common ground and a working partnership possible among these two groups of workers on farms, in the factories, in the bush, in the mines. We can build policies that will meet their own needs and elect a government that will do it free from the sinister forces of the big interests which influence the Liberal and the Conservative parties.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman, if I cannot thank them, as I sit down.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to proceed with the estimates, but I cannot let go unanswered the charges that have been made here this afternoon by my hon. friend from York South (Mr. MacDonald). If anyone in this honourable House,

Mr. Chairman, has any reason to wonder why his party lost the only rural member they had in either Ontario or Ottawa, I think we realize after listening this afternoon why that happened.

I can suggest this, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. member's comments this afternoon are proven to be as directly and deliberately misleading next year as were the comments that he made last year when he talked about hog marketing in the province of Ontario, then I think we will prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that we have listened to a lot of hot air and nothing else this afternoon.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): What is the hon. Minister's answer?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will give the hon. member an answer if he will grant me the privilege of speaking just for a moment or two. I take exception to some of the aspersions that were made this afternoon and the inferences that are so typical of my hon. friend's way of doing things, when he referred to the fact that the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board was, in effect, carrying out government policy at the instruction of the Minister.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not say at the instruction of the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I want, as respectfully as I possibly can, to suggest to you this afternoon, and the hon. members of this House, that I do not know how we could have tried in the province of Ontario and succeeded in obtaining five men to succeed the members of the farm products marketing board who are as completely independent in their thinking and in their beliefs as are the five members of that board today.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the hon. Minister's comment on Mr. Justice Wells' remarks? Why does the hon. Minister not deal with the issues?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend says deal with the issues. I feel that we are dealing with the issues and dealing with them in a very practical and down-to-earth way. We have appointed a board to deal with farm problems which is comprised of farm people themselves. Now, who understands farm policy any better than do the farmers themselves; and who understands conditions in agriculture any better than do the farm people themselves?

My hon. friend suggests that we did things that were out of order in taking men who had gotten to the very top of this agricultural organization in this province. What men in this province had a better right to be members of the farm products marketing board than those same men?

Mr. MacDonald: Give them a job that does not have a conflict of functions, that is what I am after.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, my hon. friend always likes—as the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) a year ago described him—to be throwing stones on the roof and shouting down the chimney of farm organizations across this province and deriding the farmers' opinions. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that has never elected a rural representative and he never will have one as long as he leads his party.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not like to hear people stand up in this House, as my hon. friend has done this afternoon, and as he did at such great length last year when he went on for hours. It is interesting reading, if one does not believe what they have heard this afternoon, to read the things that he said, about the farm products marketing board and the top civil servants of our government, last year. Let me refer to just one instance here, among many, many instances that he referred to. He says here, on page 1136 of last year's Hansard:

The farm products marketing board, in its actions and in its role now, is off the rails, and the top civil servants are off the rails. This is a pretty bad wrecking of the situation.

He goes on to describe here on page 1135:

They have destroyed what was potentially one of the finest marketing schemes in this province.

Mr. MacDonald: That is right. Producer control of marketing has gone.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We have the finest producer-controlled marketing plans working for hog producers that ever was developed within the confines of this province right today; and I would like to point out to my hon. friend, Mr. Chairman, that he has gone on record last year in this House in deliberately misleading the people of this House in so many ways, in trying to show that we were doing things that were in contravention to the interests of farm people. He declared that we were siding with the packers; that we were the packers' chums as he described us.

Let me point out to him that the plan of sale that has evolved out of the marketing controversies that raged for nearly three years in this province has now evolved itself into the finest marketing plan for hogs now in existence in the Dominion of Canada. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the success of this auction-selling method today is a tribute, that I can find no words to describe in sufficient eloquence, to my hon. predecessor in office.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. Minister not deal with the issue I raised?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): He has only dealt with personalities up to now.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am dealing with the issue the hon. member raised this afternoon, and I am pointing out the fallacy of his argument last year and the fallacy of his argument this year, because they are as comparable as can be.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. At least three times the hon. Minister has risen and said that I deliberately misled this House and the people. He is imputing motives, and it is in violation of the rules of this House. Now, if he will deal with the issues I raised, instead of getting up and dealing with personalities and smearing, I will listen to him; otherwise I am going to interrupt him unless you are going to stop him violating the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, if I have said that the hon. member has deliberately misled the House, then I am sorry that I have given that impression.

Mr. MacDonald: He did not give the impression—he said it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: All the hon. member has to do, Mr. Chairman, is look through the records of Hansard; it is all printed here. If anyone doubts my word here it is; it is right there, and all I suggest is that the hon. member look at it and recognize it in the light of what he said last year and in the light of what he has said today; because certainly there is a great comparison in the way things have been said.

Last year he dealt for nearly two hours with hog marketing in the province of Ontario. This year it was hardly mentioned—hardly mentioned. I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that hogs today in the province of Ontario are selling higher than they are on any market across this country for the very fact, Mr. Chairman, that those men who were accused of being misled by my hon. friend last year are now going out across this country—they have gone as far as Alberta—telling the people of the western provinces of the success of our plan.

These are the people whom he held up last year, according to the records of Hansard, as being in opposition to any change in the marketing plan. This plan is successful, and we hope by what these people have told me who have gone across the country, and I have talked to these men and they say that there is tremendous interest in hog marketing, on the same basis that we have it in the province of Ontario today, right across Canada in every province.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure; and the hon. Minister is voting against a national farm board for hogs.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend has suggested that we are talking against a national plan. Might I point out that my predecessor in office, the hon. Mr. Goodfellow, established history in the Dominion of Canada by co-operating with The Department of Agriculture in Quebec in establishing an understanding of farm marketing that never existed before in this country.

Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend must surely forget that last fall, or I should say last winter, on January 4, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture for the province of Quebec and the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Quebec spent a day in my office and attended the annual meeting of the milk producers and cheese producers as head table guests. It was the first time that anything like this had happened in the history of this province.

When the hon. member suggests that this Tory party is opposed to interprovincial marketing, I think he should look at the records and the facts; he should be set straight before he misleads the House. I have no objection to national marketing plans whatever, absolutely none. The hon. member suggests this is the case at Ottawa—I do not know where he is quoting from because I never heard an inference of it at any time, never heard an inference.

Mr. MacDonald: I am quoting from Hansard; that is the official record.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I suggest that interprovincial marketing plans are being contemplated, and also many phases of commodity marketing in this country which are applicable to the individual provinces. And certainly, Mr. Chairman, when one listens to the kind of a diatribe that we have had this afternoon, one must recognize the circumstances under which they are stated and recognize the fact that this government has always stood for encouraging marketing, for the development of co-operatives, and for the fair treatment of Ontario's farmers; and it always will.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, it would appear that the discussion of broad policies which opened this debate has now concluded, in view of the fact that the hon. Minister has seen fit to drag a discussion of policy matters down to a discussion of personalities and a straight personal diatribe. And under these circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I should like to proceed to one of the individual items that arises under the estimates of The Department of Agriculture.

The matter that I would like to raise relates to this department, although it is of concern primarily, I would think, to consumers rather than to agricultural producers. That is the issue of meat inspection, which was brought very forcibly to the attention of the people of the province only a few weeks ago when it was disclosed through the efforts of the Canadian Association of Consumers, the Food and Drug Directorate of the federal government, and the RCMP, that substantial quantities of tainted meat had been placed and apparently were regularly being placed on the market in Toronto, and no doubt in other centres throughout the province. The reaction of this government to that very startling and disturbing disclosure, in the first instance, was a typical reaction of evasion and complacency.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, we are on vote 101.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member can raise this matter under vote 110.

Mr. Bryden: Which vote did you say, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 110.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am quite prepared to raise the matter at whatever opportunity you consider appropriate.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, now that the philosophical guns have boomed on a discussion of the estimates of The Department of Agriculture, I have four questions I would like to direct to the hon. Minister. But before I do I feel I would be in order in making a comment about the statement of the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. MacDonald) with respect to a gentleman in Brant county who is respected by everyone there, that is Senator William Taylor, a well-known farmer; a well-known Member of Parliament; and for many years a Senator.

The report that the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party refers to, stated very clearly the Liberal position and the fact that the agricultural industry must be protected from the erosion of the large processing firms in their vertical integration programme. This principle was first clearly enunciated by my good friend, the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), and has since then been picked up by the leaders of all other parties in this Legislature; and it was certainly brought fully to the attention of the people in Brant.

In this particular case, the newspaper report may not have been clear, Senator Taylor was replying to a rather insidious, spurious attack on the International Nickel Company, that had been brought before the public by the candidate for the New Democratic Party. Now we in the Liberal party are not socialists, and we are proud of this, and we feel the particular company under attack by the New Democratic Party was unfairly attacked; and while we feel that agriculture must be protected from the vertical integration of the food processing industry, that is no reason why we should condemn industry as such—as our crypto-socialists to the left seem to do.

Senator Taylor was being very consistent in his comments and I certainly agree with him wholeheartedly; I would like to say that I appreciated the support that he gave me at that time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, speaking through you to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), I would like to ask him, under item No. 7, why it is that the Ontario Beef Pasture Improvement Committee required a $6,000 grant from the department? I am not just sure of the procedure, sir, whether—that would be just a brief answer, I am sure, and I would like to go on following that.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can only say that this matter of beef pasture improvement—and I may not answer this correctly—but my assumption of it is that across the province of Ontario there were, I believe, five beef pasture farms that had been rented from the owners, in areas where beef cattle had been pastured and were being pastured in sizeable numbers.

Thought was given a good many years ago to the improvement of these pasture areas. Farms were rented, there were scales set up on them, and the idea was to use them as demonstration farms as to how pasture could be improved. They would get a group of cattle and weigh them; they would divide the farm into areas of one, two or three sections; one of the sections would be left as a test plot with no treatment on it, another area would be fertilized, another area might be plowed up and re-seeded.

The cattle were weighed when they came on the first of May, or the beginning of the pasture season; their weights were recorded; they were recorded during the summer time and, of course, recorded again in the autumn when they were taken off grass. This would give some idea of the relative value of the improvement in the pasture, taking into consideration not only the improvement in the pasture but the costs of renovating it and the costs of fertilization.

This was carried on as a demonstration programme for the beef cattle industry in the province of Ontario, and has been under operation for some years.

Mr. Nixon: Was that controlled by the soil and crop improvement committee?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It was operated, as I understand it, under the livestock branch—they really looked after it as far as the demonstration is concerned, but it is included in the main office vote. I think that is the indication.

Mr. Nixon: The second question, in a sense, may not be in perfect order, but it has to do with item No. 8, workmen's compensation, which I know refers to payments made from the department, I suppose, for compensation. But the hon. Minister did bring to our attention the tragedy of farm accidents that we read about frequently, and I am going to end in a moment or two by asking him if he has any practical plan whereby the benefits of workmen's compensation might be extended to the farm working population.

Now, this, at present, is economically almost beyond the ability of the ordinary farmer. The premium required for one hired man at a normal rate of payment is about $162, and many farmers feel this is too expensive for them. It ends up, I feel, that in agriculture only the large farms, perhaps employed in some special type of farming or controlled by some large organization, can afford the premiums of this group within The Workmen's Compensation Act. This means that most private farmers are not covered, and I get the definite impression, in talking to Workmen's Compensation Board inspectors, that they are not particularly interested in increasing the farm coverage.

Since the premiums seem to be almost prohibitively high and the Workmen's Compensation Board is not particularly interested in enrolling farmers, and since there is such a tragedy associated with farm accidents, I would ask the hon. Minister if there are any plans in his department or perhaps in The Department of Labour, for helping the farmers in this connection?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) has raised an important question and I appreciate his interest in this, because I think all farm people are very much interested in this matter of workmen's compensation coverage for their farm help and for themselves.

I agree that the cost is very high today but perhaps the reason for it can be recognized in the fact that when this programme was first inaugurated in the province of Ontario the rate was 75 cents a hundred for workmen's compensation. It was brought in at the request of the Minister of Agriculture through the petition of the farm organizations in the province. I think the federation of agriculture had a lot to do with it.

The scheme was implemented and the losses were so high that the rates had to be raised as they went along. I think it goes to prove that the vocation in which you and I may be engaged as farm people is a very hazardous one, and for this reason the rates had to be set accordingly.

We have recognized that this is a high rate as far as farm people are concerned. The rate today is $4.50 a hundred, and it all depends on the wages a man is paid, and includes his board, provision of house, and what have you. This is all included as the basis on which the assessment to the Workmen's Compensation Board is made. We have asked the farm organizations, the Federation of Agriculture, the Farmers' Union, to take a good look at this problem and to see if they have any ideas as to how this could be dealt with.

Frankly, we do not know how to approach this thing unless it is by giving a direct subsidy to the agricultural industry. Now, if this is the way, I suppose this is the way we should approach the problem, but it is difficult and I think we have to recognize this from a practical standpoint. If we say that we are going to do this for the agricultural industry, then we have literally scores of industries across the province who might say to us: "Well, if you are going to do this for one segment of our economy, do it for all."

It is not an easy question, I must confess, sir, and I appreciate the hon. member bringing it to our attention.

Mr. Nixon: Under item No. 12, The Farm Labour Service is spending $25,000. I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell us what this office does that the National Employment Service does not do? In connection with that we find in Brant County when farm help is required, the National Employment Service in Brantford has a special officer to deal with this and they deal with it very well.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member's question, the Ontario-Federal Provincial Farm Labour Committee co-operates with the National Employment Service in the active general farm labour programme. The committee's primary concern is in supplying labour in cash crop areas on a seasonable basis, where the number of workers in a local area does not meet the demand.

The placement of workers—if the hon. member might be interested in this—the Maritime workers brought to Ontario in 1961 was 274; in 1960, 310. Quebec workers brought to Ontario in 1961 was nil, and in 1960 it was 130. There are also many who come in from the United States to help here; I believe that in 1961 the provincial labour committee brought 3,133 workers into Ontario on a seasonal basis. I do not know how much further this service could be extended.

I wonder sometimes, thinking just as a farmer and not as a Minister, I wonder if, as farm people, we might be interested in asking our farm labour committee to explore the possibilities of bringing help from other provinces to the province of Ontario to act as year-round farm labour. I think there is a real need for such service in the province of Ontario.

I do not believe we in the province of Ontario have ever seen a year when farm help had been as hard to get as it has this year. I was talking to members of the national employment service in western Ontario and they told me there has never in their history of office been such a shortage of farm help as there is this year. I personally know several farmers who have married accommodation available ready for men to move into, but they cannot get experienced, reliable, help to fill those jobs today.

Mr. Nixon: Now, one last question, Mr. Chairman, and this is not covered by any specific item in vote 101 but the hon. Minister himself raised the point in this connection; it has to do with the agricultural college at Guelph. In our discussions up there it became quite apparent that the staff of the agricultural college, as well as that of the veterinarian college and the MacDonald Institute, feel themselves somewhat hampered in that their degree-granting privileges stem from, and are fully directed by, the University of Toronto.

In this connection the university will not permit the Ontario Agricultural College to grant degrees above the level of master and because of this, the students up in Guelph, who wish to continue their education, particularly in research fields, must leave the country.

Also in this connection, since we do not offer doctor degrees at Guelph, we do not have the advantage of having agricultural scientists from other countries come to Guelph to complete or further their work, so that it works against us in two ways. Even in the MacDonald Institute the graduate work in household science, apparently, is hampered in this connection and they have their research workers, or the people who are doing advanced work in whatever they do there, canning and so on, they have them come under a part of the budget that is not exactly connected with the research section of the MacDonald Institute.

Now, the hon. Minister has already told us that by 1970, there will be 4,000, perhaps, at Guelph and in connection with this also there will be many more students at the other—

Mr. Chairman: I would like to point out to the hon. member this comes under vote 117. It has already been raised.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): On vote 101, under item No. 4. Last Friday morning I asked the hon. Minister of Agriculture to name the members of the committee on vertical integration, and also the terms of the investigation. What were going to be the terms of the committee making the investigation? I would like to know from the hon. Minister whether these members are going to be paid, if they plan trips throughout the province, whether they are going to make a report which will be forthcoming to the hon. members, and whether this comes under this expense listed in connection with agricultural work?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: In answer to the hon. member's question, these men are paid out-of-pocket expenses and whether they travel around the province or not will be entirely at their discretion. I am not sure what they intend to do.

Mr. Innes: Well, Mr. Chairman, will they be submitting a report before the House rises?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My apologies, Mr. Chairman, I cannot hear the hon. member.

Mr. Innes: Will this board be bringing in a report before the House adjourns this present sitting?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: As I pointed out last week when this came before the orders of the day, I suggested that the committee had been asked to report before the middle of April and present an interim report if they were not ready to submit a final report. Now whether they will be ready to report then or not I do not know.

Mr. Innes: Has the hon. Minister impressed upon them that he would like to have a report sooner—let us put it that way. Vertical integration has been mentioned as a real threat and if the hon. Minister is going to move towards correcting it I think that he should move now and not leave it for another year.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I appreciate the thoughts of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes). I pointed out to the House last week that this was a Minister's committee and it has been asked to report by the middle of April in writing and that still stands. Now, I do not know what more one can do than that.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Chairman, before you carry vote 101, I want to say just a few words. The first is a word to the hon. Minister in presenting his first estimates in the House; I think he has done very well so far. It is unfortunate, of course, that in the language of the hon. Minister, borrowing one of the phrases that he used this afternoon, he said: "the tiredness of the evening hour." I was quite impressed with the impact of that phrase, because it is a bit unfortunate that this breath of fresh air comes to the government in agricultural matters in the tiredness of the evening hour. It is a bit unfortunate that we did not have that breath of fresh air before we got to the place where we say: "the tiredness of the evening hour."

The hon. Minister, of course, is a new man in the department in an old government; and no matter what he does to try to rectify the sins of the past or to improve the pattern of his predecessors, no matter what he does, he will not get any credit for it; because people have the habit, and I think it is a very good habit, of saying: "You have had the chance now for 20 years, and anything you do now will be viewed as death-bed repentance and coming too little and too late." In that unfortunate position, I am sure the hon. Minister will do well in carrying the ball.

I just wanted to say this to the hon. Minister, in respect to this vertical integration that has been talked so much about. I had no idea, when I spoke on this last fall, that I would arouse by that speech such wide public interest. That the speech was followed by interest was manifest by the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

I remember, in the by-election in Brant, he became quite concerned about the problem that was set up by integration, vertical integration, and he promised to do something about it. Now, I am not so surprised at the hon. Minister recognizing that this was a problem; but when I heard the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) this afternoon also getting on the band wagon and saying that it is a problem, it is, I think, the unanimous opinion of all that here is a real problem.

Then, I think I should point out to the hon. member for York South, I do not know how eloquent he could become if he rose to speak on a subject of which he had some knowledge. This afternoon, you would almost be sure that the callouses on his hands were put there by hanging too tightly to the plow handle, and you would swear that he had thorough knowledge of all the intricate problems of agriculture.

I would say to the hon. member in reference to what he said—my hon. friend says: "Deal with the issues"—I am on this item here which says investigations into agricultural conditions. My hon. friend says: "Deal with the issues". He did not deal with the issues this afternoon. In the first place he has mixed up the attitude of the Liberal Party with respect to vertical integration, and that is the subject of one of these investigations. When he called into question the statement of Senator Taylor, I think, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend was really digging pretty deep.

Mr. MacDonald: I was just quoting from the Brantford newspaper.

Mr. Oliver: No; what my hon. friend was doing was this: he was talking about the hon. member for Brant's (Mr. Nixon's) excellent statement of Liberal Party policy in respect to this matter. He wanted that to stand not alone; he wanted it to be assailed by the statement of some other Liberal if he could find one, and so he looked around and found the name of Senator Taylor. The only unfortunate part of my hon. friend's remarks was that he knew when he spoke this afternoon that Senator Taylor was not talking about vertical integration at all; that that was on a completely different subject and bore no relationship whatever—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has said that I knew what Senator Taylor was speaking about. I was not at the meeting; I have not a clue as to what Senator Taylor was—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I was quoting what the Brantford Expositor quoted Senator Taylor as saying and that is the only basis upon which I could make my observation.

Mr. Oliver: Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say this: if that was his authority for saying that Senator Taylor was talking about International Nickel, then I defy my hon. friend to tell me how International Nickel had anything to do with vertical integration.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has stated that the Brantford Expositor declaimed that Senator Taylor was talking about International Nickel. He is in error.

Mr. Oliver: He was talking about International Nickel.

Mr. MacDonald: The Brantford Expositor makes no mention of Senator Taylor talking about International Nickel. Now, let us deal with the facts of the situation.

Mr. Oliver: Yes. Well, the facts are he was talking about International Nickel.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with the investigations into agricultural conditions, and this has to do with my hon. friend's committee to investigate vertical integration.

I said in the House the other day, speaking before the orders of the day, that my hon. friend is just waving a small banner in respect to his desire to cope with the problem of vertical integration. In the first place he appoints the committee and he says to that committee: "You are my committee. You are a ministerial committee. You report to me, you will not report to the House."

Mr. MacDonald: I said that yesterday.

Mr. Oliver: Well, the hon. member said a lot of things today that I said six months ago.

"You are not to report to the House, you are to report to me." Now, I suggest to the hon. Minister that is not a frontal attack on the problem of vertical integration. That is a miniature, a hesitant, approach to this great problem of vertical integration.

Then he also says to the committee: "Do not bother about examining the whole field, just take fruits and vegetables". Well now, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: To start with!

Mr. Oliver: To start with! But those are the ones he says, fruits and vegetables, to start with.

There is a lot more involved in this problem, as the hon. Minister knows, than fruits and vegetables. That indicates to me that the hon. Minister is just playing with this problem, just as the Tories have done for decades. They appoint committees to get themselves over holes in the road. That is just what he is doing in this case.

I have not any faith in the hon. Minister's committee nor what will emanate from it. I have not any faith in the Tory party, actually, to do a job in respect to this problem, so I guess it is natural that I would not have any faith in the committee.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There are some pretty good men on that committee.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member is casting aspersions on men of integrity.

Mr. Oliver: I do not know whether he is defending or condemning. That is beyond me.

Mr. MacDonald: There is a lot that the hon. member does not know.

Mr. Oliver: Well, there is nothing that the hon. member thinks he does not know.

I want to point out that there is one more thing, and I think it falls under the head of investigations into agricultural organizations. That has to do with the vertical integration as we see it practised in this province.

Now, it not only affects fruits and vegetables, it affects livestock, as my hon. friend quite well knows. With cattle, for instance, Canada Packers and the other big packaging concerns will put out thousands of cattle into the country. They bring those cattle back after they have been fattened—on their own land or on leased land—they bring these cattle to the Toronto stockyards in competition with cattle raised by individual farmers. Now that, to my mind, is vertical integration.

As I said before, and I say this again, we still have time to save the farm for the farmer. But unless we move with dispatch, as surely as we sit in this House this afternoon, if we allow the ordinary processes that are presently in operation to reach the ultimate goal, we will have the farmers in this province not as individual self-reliant farmers, but as peasants and as slaves.

Nobody wants that condition! Yet we are racing towards it, as fast as ever we can. We are racing towards it, and I am sure in my own mind that this can be controlled. I think the basic essential in the whole thing is this: to recognize that processors are processors. They are not growers of the product, they are processors of the product. Let them stay in their own field, and in so far as they have gone out of their field, bring them back. That is the problem that the Liberal Party will undertake to solve and to correct in this province.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, it is always a joy to me to listen to the oratorical eloquence of my hon. friend, the member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver). I have appreciated this as long as I have sat in this House, and even before. I would like to point out to my hon. friend, and to those he represents on his side of the House, that we believe that when we have designated vegetables as the project that must receive the most immediate and closest attention of this committee that we have appointed, that from their deliberations we might conclude that what they would find would be a solution applicable to other sources of vertical integration. The principle of vertical integration is really the same, as my hon. friend has so well pointed out, regardless of whether it applies to vegetables or to fruit, or whether it applies to other sources of agricultural commodities.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it hurts me no little to have the hon. member for Grey South suggest that he has no faith in the men, whom we feel are outstanding men in their field in the province of Ontario, that have been appointed to this committee.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Might I ask the hon. Minister a question relative to this matter? Would he advise the House of the estimated cost to this government as a result of the setting up of this vertical integration committee. How much does he anticipate it will cost?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I think we are all, as farm people—and those of us who may not be farm people but are interested in matters pertaining to agriculture because we know it affects the entire economy of the province—we can hardly say what the cost would be or even give an estimate. We feel that if we are as genuinely interested in this problem of vertical integration as this government has indicated that it is in appointing this committee, that we will spend money to find out the answer. I am sure that our hon. friends opposite would not criticize us for doing it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that answer very much on the part of the hon. Minister, because I think we feel the same way about it on this side of the House. The reason I raised the question was on a matter of principle. We are dealing today with estimates, and this is the expenditure of the taxpayers' money. I am not an agricultural man, but I am concerned with the principle when an hon. Minister comes to the House and advises us that this money will be spent, the taxpayers' funds, to provide the hon. Minister alone with information.

I suggest to the hon. Minister that this might be made available to all hon. members of the House so that all hon. members would be in a position to determine whether or not the subsequent policies of the government are in the best interests of the farmers of Ontario. Mr. Chairman, this is becoming a habit on that side of the House. If the hon. Minister is as interested as he claims to be in protecting the farmers of Ontario, one would think he would make this information available to the elected hon. members of this assembly to determine whether or not such is the case.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I might say that I appreciate what the hon. Minister said in his remarks this afternoon in regard to the study group that went to England and on the results. I also appreciate hearing of the setting up of a committee to study vertical integration. For today in the province of Ontario, I think there is one very important point that we should not overlook and that is losing our markets right here at home—our domestic markets.

Now as an illustration, I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister that our breweries in this province are using rice. A number of years ago, we were able to sell barley, rye, corn, in large quantities. But today, our breweries are using rice as a substitute to some of these grains. That is some of the market that we are losing, and I think the hon. Minister of Agriculture should give that careful study too, along with vertical integration. I think we can develop a lot of good information if more study was made on these domestic markets that we have right at home being lost.

Vote 101 agreed to.

On vote 102:

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I may say that in my capacity, I cannot really say whether or not rice would be a satisfactory product in the brewing industry. This is a question that I recognize the hon. member is serious about and that it does not concern him. I can assure him that we are concerned about any product coming into this country that supplants any product that is grown in Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: On vote 102, I would like to ask the hon. Minister about The Community Centres Act, for which $315,000 has been set aside. Does this mean that the aid is given to communities which wish to build halls and also introduce, let us say, sports programmes; or is it just for the building?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the grant is based on the capital cost of the building. Up to 25 per cent of the capital cost, with a maximum of $5,000.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I quote from the famous Brantford Expositor of February 10, 1962:

In a letter to Oliver Smith, principal of No. 8 School on the Six Nations Indian Reserve, G. R. Begg, assistant director of the branch, said "Grants are only available to organized municipalities or school boards."

Now, in this connection, the Indians were applying for some help in the building of a community hall at Sour Springs, I guess it was a renovation. The stated reason the grant was not given was that it was because this is in the Six Nations Indian Reserve. Perhaps that is all right as far as vote 102, item No. 10 is concerned.

I notice over the page on vote 104, item No. 5, that $200,000 is set aside for unorganized districts which, I suppose, applies to the northern parts of the province. But the fact remains that no government money was found to aid the Sour Springs community hall.

This is an attempt by the Indians in that area to improve their community facilities. They are well-known athletes, in this connection as well, and they were given no thought that any government money would be found to aid them in their community efforts. I feel the whole policy of the government is outdated as far as aid to the Indians is concerned. If the hon. Minister is going to go all the way and say: "They do not pay taxes, therefore, they do not get anything back," he should state that policy, or if he is going to give them the aid that any Canadian citizen or citizen of Ontario might expect from the government, this should be forthcoming, because I believe they do get a grant for the Indian Fair. I certainly know that The Department of Highways is building them a road. I will be asking the department later whether or not they intend to help with the upkeep of this road.

But they do not get money from this particular vote. They do not get money for the restocking of the area with fish and game. The bookmobile, which I mentioned earlier in the session, from The Department of Education is not available. But in this particular connection, I want to know why they did not get a grant for the Sour Springs community hall.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, may I thank the hon. member for bringing this matter to our attention. As a matter of fact, I did not know they had not been given a grant or if they had ever made application. But this is something in which I expect the assistant director of the branch is simply going by the terms of the Act as it was set out. I do not think we can be critical of his interpretation of it. This is a matter, as far as Indian reserves are concerned, which would, I believe, be dealt with federally under Indian Affairs.

However, this is a matter which I feel we should take under consideration and give some thought. I think the hon. member has raised a very good point and we shall give it some consideration.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the hon. Minister, since we are on this subject of committees, I believe there was a committee set up in 1959, the Ontario agricultural inquiry committee, and they brought in their report June last. I might say I would like to ask the hon. Minister what was the cost of that report.

I do not know whether he is going to use any of the information that was brought down in that report. It is somewhat confusing to some of us in agriculture. I might say that it certainly paints not a very bright picture for agriculture in certain places in the direction that we are going.

I would like to hear a few words from the hon. Minister on his views of that report.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the first part of the question is that the report cost, I believe, $112,000. As yet there has been no decision reached on the printing of it, but it will be given consideration.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, referring to item No. 10, grants under The Community Centres Act, we all know that the ethnic people throughout the province of Ontario have been very active so far as community centres are concerned, and primarily their own type of community centres. Would these people be entitled to a grant under this Act?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, my understanding of the Act—and I hope you appreciate the fact that I am not acquainted with all of the Acts—but my interpretation would be this: that The Community Centres Act would apply to any group of people who establish a community centre providing that community centre was really in the ownership of the municipality or district in which it was located. That is the basis upon which the grants are made.

So that, in effect, if a group of people, with the best of intentions today, decided to build or establish a community centre and they passed out of the picture, for one reason or another, as the years passed by, there would be really no ownership or basis of management to carry it on. But when it is established under The Community Centres Act, it becomes part and parcel of the municipality in which it is located.

Mr. MacDonald: If I may return to the second last question of the hon. member with regard to the agriculture committee of inquiry. One member of that committee of inquiry was reported as stating there had been a commitment from the hon. Minister's predecessor for the publishing of the report and that copies were not now available in quantity because of the great interest in the report. Can the hon. Minister state whether it is his view that there was a commitment made, because I was rather intrigued by his comment that he has not yet made up his mind whether he is going to print it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned I have no knowledge that any commitment was made by anyone for anything. The report has been published, it has been mimeographed, it has been put together and compiled and it certainly is public knowledge. It is widespread across the country. I do not know to what the hon. member is referring.

Mr. MacDonald: I just do not have the clipping here, but I think the hon. Minister knows that one member of the committee made this statement publicly. I am sure the Deputy does if he—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am sorry, I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. L. Quilty (Renfrew South): Under vote 102, section No. 10, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture if there is a definite date for the payment of grants under The Community Centres Act, and, if not, are these grants always paid in the period January 1 to January 18 as they were in Renfrew South during the by-election campaign?

I would also like to add that these grants are very necessary in Renfrew South and we appreciate them very much.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to ask the hon. member for Renfrew South—on whose election I congratulate him—if he is against the fact of receiving grants for Renfrew South? That having been determined, let me say this: the grants are paid at any date of the year as far as I know, whenever they qualify for the date.

Mr. MacDonald: Particularly before an election.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, I cannot think of a better time to pay a grant if it is necessary to pay it but, notwithstanding that, may I suggest this: that we have paid grants across this province in areas, and by signed cheques that went out the same day in the same mail, to areas of the province of Ontario—besides to Renfrew South—where there was no election whatever.

Vote 102 agreed to.

On vote 103:

Mr. Quilty: In answer to the question from the hon. Minister I would like to say that my closing remarks were that we very much appreciate these grants in Renfrew South and they were very necessary. If he had followed my remarks, he would not have had to ask the question.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Under vote 103 I would like to ask the hon. Minister: how many dairy instructors have we in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, our dairy instruction staff here apparently is 44 all told. Is this what the hon. member is asking for—dairy instruction?

Mr. Manley: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am not sure whether that includes the inspectors as well as the instructors. I am advised that includes the instructors as well as the inspectors working under the dairy instructors, the dairy branch, a total of 44 all told.

Mr. Manley: Well, Mr. Chairman, when can we get a distinction between the work of the inspectors and the instructors?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, as far as I can determine, there has been no distinction made; they are all field men and they operate under our office in that regard. I do not think there is any distinction made. They are all called field men.

Mr. Manley: Well, why in the estimates of the hon. Minister here, are there instructors and inspectors?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, I think we could best describe that as saying that that is wording that should be brought up to date because they are one and the same person. And I see no difference. I appreciate the concern of the hon. member about it and I can see his point. As far as I understand, it is all one and the same person.

Mr. Manley: Might the hon. Minister permit another question? Does he think that 44, Mr. Chairman, is sufficient staff to look after the inspection work and the field work that is being done by the inspectors in the province at the present time? For the good of the industry?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, I would say matters of opinion such as that are relative to the individual's opinion on the subject under consideration. The hon. member might feel it was not enough, we might feel that it was, and on the other hand he might feel there were far too many and we might feel there were insufficient. I think it is a matter of relative considerations.

Mr. Manley: I do not think it answers my question, Mr. Chairman. I was asking the hon. Minister what he felt; if he felt that there were sufficient inspectors? It was not my opinion; I will give my opinion after I get the answer.

An hon. member: He is still waiting.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. Minister going to answer me?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did answer the hon. member.

Mr. Manley: No. I asked the question: does the hon. Minister think there are sufficient inspectors to look after the work in the province?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: And I answered the hon. member's question, Mr. Chairman. As I say it is a matter of relative importance. I have always felt in this House that, regardless of what decision the government made, they would decide that some other decision was the one that should have been made.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: And if we were to say there were enough inspectors, obviously he would say there were not enough temporarily. I would be interested in knowing what the hon. member has to say; this is what we are doing.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, a year ago I believe, the hon. Minister in this House, and we were dealing with the estimates of the hon. Minister at that time, did say that the department was going all out to try to improve the quality of milk across this province, and I think that the department has done quite a lot along those lines.

I remember, and I want to refer to the cheese industry particularly in this province, that we had some difficulty in regard to grade of the cheese. I think the cheese producers themselves have made it quite clear to the department and to this government that they were ready for farm inspection and for a general betterment of conditions as far as producing milk was concerned in this province. The cheese industry just got under way last spring, when the instructors were taken out of the cheese factories and were sent into other plants in this province and thereby neglected the cheese industry.

I say, if there are enough inspectors, then there should be inspectors who could cope with the other branches as well as with the cheese industry. I might say that we are proud, in Ontario, of the type of cheese we are producing, but we have to be on the alert at all times and produce as good a quality as we possibly can if we are going to hold the market which we are endeavouring to gain and maintain at the present time.

I wanted to say to the hon. Minister that this, I think, was something that certainly was due to the neglect of the department—when they had to take the instructors from the cheese factories and put them into the condensaries and other branches of the industry. I would like the hon. Minister to comment on that particular aspect of his department, since I was of the opinion that that particular move on the part of the department was not correct in that instance.

I want to say, as I said earlier, that we are very proud of our cheese industry; I want to say that the county which I come from produces about 8 per cent of the cheese that is manufactured in the province of Ontario and we are very proud of the quality of cheese that is produced in Stormont.

It is known that the makers in that particular county have won many prizes locally; they have won prizes abroad. And we thought the department was doing them a disservice whenever the instructors were pulled out of the cheese plants in that part of the province and put into other fields last spring.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Chairman, my comment would be that we in The Department of Agriculture appreciate the quality of the programme as far as the dairy industry is concerned, and its necessity, as much as anyone. The department reorganized the inspection districts to try to make it as easily handled by the instructors and inspectors that were available as could possibly be done. And I would like also to point out to the hon. member that at the session last fall and the beginning of this session now, amendments were passed to Bill No. 48, amendments to The Milk Industry Act, which now enable the making of regulations providing for the collecting of fees payable for the weighing, grading, sampling and testing of milk and cream on an industry basis.

This may make it—if the industry feels that is what we need—possible to have more inspectors, more instructors, then I would feel that we could go along with this method. This is already a method which is operating in the vegetable marketing picture—we have tomato inspection going on and paid for on that type of industry basis, with the producer and processor each contributing an equal amount towards the inspection service. This makes it applicable in the dairy industry.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister has just brought up a very important point here. I did not know that I would have the opportunity to discuss it under this particular vote but he did mention about testing of milk.

Now that is one of the biggest bones of contention, I think, in the milk industry today; and we see it in all different phases of the industry and particularly in the cheese-making industry in this province. We know that there is great competition among plant owners and, I think, the biggest complaint among the producers today in the province—and this goes right across the board, I think—is the testing of milk. The herd improvement, the ROP testing—and records are kept of both of those—never compare favourably with the test at the plants.

I think that why we get so many farmers switching from plant to plant in the province at the present time is the fact that they are not satisfied with the tests they are getting at their particular plant. Farmers do have a tendency to move around when their test gets low and, in 9 cases out of 10, when they go to another plant, their milk goes up in test 3 or 4 points. I am not accusing any operator of not giving a fair test; maybe the test would have gone up anyhow but still it is the complaint that I hear all over my part of the province—that something should be done about the testing of milk.

Possibly it is something that the department should look at, rather than have the owner of a plant or the man engaged in the company to do the testing of the milk coming into that particular plant. I think that the farmers, possibly, would go so far as to pay something towards the testing of milk if we could get someone, some department, to do the testing in the various plants. It would take away the suspicion that is in the minds of the producer; it will make for better relationship between plants, and I think that it would be making a worthy contribution to the producers of this province to know that an independent person, or a representative of the department, would be doing the testing in those plants across the province.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the hon. member for his comments on this. I think he has struck on a point which has been a problem as long as milk has been sold. Every farmer has heard the things that he has said many times over; we have all been concerned about it. I am particularly interested to notice that the hon. member suggests a participating plan for the independent testing of milk; perhaps this is the real answer and this amendment to The Milk Industry Act will probably be the nearest solution to it that we have ever had.

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, as you know, in the amendment to The Milk Industry Act the milk board had the opportunity to change the differential in the province and make it province-wide. Would the hon. Minister like to comment as to whether the board has recommended a change in the fat differential throughout the province? And if they have, what is that differential?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have seen or heard no public announcement by the milk industry board relative to the problem the hon. member raised.

Mr. Innes: Could the hon. Minister give me the names of the people on the milk industry board at the moment, the names of the personnel?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes. It is composed of His Honour, Judge Currey, Mr. Gordon Greer and Mr. George McKague.

Mr. Innes: Could the hon. Minister tell me if that Mr. Gordon Greer is the same gentleman who was chairman of the Conservative policy committee on agriculture at the convention?

Mr. MacDonald: Also on the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member is interested in the personal history of Mr. Greer, I suggest he get in touch with him.

Mr. Innes: I just wanted to know if he is the same man, and if he could tell me if he is on any other government board.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: He is a former president of the federation of agriculture in the province of Ontario, he has been an outstanding dairyman in the province of Ontario and I believe he was president of his own local milk producers organization and he is a member of the farm products marketing board.

Mr. MacDonald: And a defeated Tory candidate in Carleton!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, he was not; he never ran.

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, there is something else I should like to ask the hon. Minister and that is what steps have currently been made by his research department in determining the method of measuring solids, not fat, in milk. As he knows, great strides have been made in several of the States of the union and they are currently selling a solids, not fat, milk which goes by the common name of 2-10 formula. I would like to know if definite strides and if some real conclusions have been made by their department. I had thought the former hon. Minister two years ago and again last year said they were still working on it. I just wonder if they are still working on it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member's question, the interim report on the investigation or study or survey, whatever he wants to call it, has just reached my desk and as a matter of fact I have not had a chance to look at it yet.

Mr. Belanger: Under vote 103, item No. 4, I see that The Oleomargarine Act comes under that. I was just wondering whether the hon. Minister contemplates any changes to the Act during this session.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I fail to see how this has anything to do with the estimates, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister at what stage of negotiation his department and the 4 different milk groups are at on an overall milk marketing plan for the province of Ontario. What stage they are currently at, and I would like some comment by him on it, if he could. This is most important to the whole dairy industry of the province of Ontario and not one word has been mentioned about it today.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, this is a subject that we could discuss at very great length.

Mr. Innes: Let us have a word about it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This is an important problem, there is no question or doubt about this. We have asked the four dairy groups, as the hon. member suggested, to come together and discuss the matter of a milk marketing plan for the province of Ontario. This has been done. They have met with the farm products marketing board, and the farm products marketing board, after meeting with them and helping them to appreciate the regulations under which they could establish the marketing plan and the terms of the marketing Act, withdrew from their deliberations. They have set up, as I understand it, a provisional committee to carry on and try to work out a marketing plan that could be presented for a vote.

As I had hoped to point out to the hon. member, we have no knowledge what status it is at today. This is something that the milk groups are working out among themselves. We initiated the initial meeting, bringing them together, but we feel this is something that they must work out among themselves.

Mr. Innes: Did the hon. Minister not intimate in one of his early speeches in the Royal York to the milk groups that the vote would be held this year?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did not. I do not want the hon. member to leave that impression.

Mr. Innes: That is why I asked the hon. Minister. I did not say he did, I asked if he did.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member was there and he heard what was said; we asked the groups to come together and try to work out some sort of a plan that they could present to the dairy groups of the province of Ontario and we suggested that it would be well to have it in 1962 because certainly I know there is no one in this assembly who is more aware of the dairy situation than is my hon. friend. I feel that it is something we should deal with as soon as possible.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I asked a question a little while ago and the hon. Minister said it did not come under these estimates. It comes under his department and I would just like to know when I should ask that question.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, might I point out that the hon. member will be guided in what action we take by the bills that are introduced into the Legislature for discussion.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, I see an item in public accounts here: automobile insurance, accounts transferred to The Department of Highways, $18,471. Is that insurance on cars owned by the department, or what is that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Whereabouts is the hon. member getting that? What vote is that in?

Mr. Manley: In the public accounts, The Department of Agriculture public accounts.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am told by the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), that this is paid by The Department of Highways, on insurance on The Department of Agriculture's cars and vehicles.

Mr. Manley: It is on cars owned by the department?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Mr. Manley: Could the hon. Minister tell us who insures those cars, or how many companies? Or the agents' names?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have no idea who has the insurance. It is done through The Department of Highways, but I cannot tell the hon. member who has the insurance.

Mr. Manley: Well, Mr. Chairman, it is in the public accounts here: $18,471 has been paid by The Department of Agriculture, and surely we should know how many cars are involved and what companies are getting the insurance or what the names of the agents are. I think that we should be able to obtain that information through the public accounts.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I will be very, very glad to. I can tell the hon. member this: the total number of motor vehicles in The Department of Agriculture are 241, with 25 trailers making 266 total vehicles. We can find out who carries the insurance. It is carried, as I say through The Department of Highways. We simply pay the account that is submitted by The Department of Highways to us. They carry all the insurance, as I understand it, on all of the vehicles owned by all the various departments of the government. That is something that can be determined. My friend, the chief accountant of the department, feels that it is Dominion General Insurance.

Mr. Manley: Can we have some assurance here that we can get this when The Department of Highways estimates are up?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If it belongs in the estimates of The Department of Highways—

Mr. Manley: Well, it is an item that has appeared in the estimates and that is why I raised it here. But can we get the information then when The Department of Highways estimates are up?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: One question I should like to ask. What limits of insurance do we carry on these vehicles?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, there is not much point in going from one vote to another if we are going to go back to all of these votes. Now this basically is covered under the ordinary expenditures, main office, vote 101. As the hon. member now realizes, this is a question he could have asked under that and we have passed to vote 103. However, the matter is available to him under the estimates of The Department of Highways. Perhaps if he would wait until that time, he would have his answer.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question in regard to the milk industry board. How many hearings were there last year and how many convictions, if there were any?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: If the hon. member would table that question, we will be happy to provide the answer for him.

Vote 103 agreed to.

On vote 104:

Mr. W. E. Johnston (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, for some time I have felt that the department does not get nearly enough credit for the work that is done. Because that is true, Mr. Chairman, I would like to put on record here some of the work that is done in my own riding.

I would like to first of all start off with that of the junior department. An extensive and well planned programme of 4-H work for both boys and girls has been carried on for many years. In 1961 there were 22 4-H agriculture clubs with 275 individual members, operated under the direction of the assistant agricultural representative, Mr. Roger A. Thompson; and 20 4-H homemaking clubs with 207 girls under the direction of a Miss Ruth Shaver, county home economist.

Many of the leading farmers in the county are former junior club members. Carleton has taken a lead in the organizing of voluntary help through local leaders and was the first in Canada to come up with a county club leaders' association.

Work with junior farmers is also carried on. Good co-operation and assistance is given junior work by agricultural societies, other agricultural organizations and by the Kiwanis club.

Now in the senior field, the county is well served by agricultural societies. We have three Class B fairs as well as one Class A, the Central Canada Exhibition Association and the Ottawa Winter Fair. The county is also well served by livestock clubs for breed groups and by the Eastern Ontario Cattle Breeding Association for artificial breeding units, by the county soil and crop improvement association and by the Ottawa Valley Seed Growers Association.

There are 28 women's institutes in the county, four rural horticultural societies. The county federation of agriculture is active and the Ottawa Milk Producers Association serves the whole of the milk shippers, of whom we have 400. Other agricultural commodity groups also exist. Extensive work is carried on to a greater or lesser extent through all of these groups.

If a special project is being undertaken co-operation can always be counted on by the organization closest to the picture.

In soil and crop improvement work, the local association is active and the Ottawa Valley Seed Growers Association has been an important factor, for many years encouraging farmers to be up to date in varieties and in methods.

I come now to one that I feel is of great importance, and perhaps one that is not carried on too extensively throughout other parts of the province. Some hon. members here may remember that in 1945 or 1946 the late Thomas Kennedy, then the Minister of Agriculture, organized what is known as county agricultural committees. Many of these committees, I believe, functioned for a while and many ceased to function. Ours, by the way, continued to function. It later became involved in drainage and land improvement work.

This programme has carried on for some 12 years and may I say, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. members, that we were only able to carry on this programme because of the assistance given by this Department of Agriculture. We went to our county agricultural committee of county council and received a grant of $2,000 from them for this work. This grant was matched by the province.

Now I want hon. members to note what we have been able to do. In 1960 the total work accomplished on 119 farms was as follows, all with only $4,000: 22 miles of open ditching, the average of 60 rods per farm; 8 miles of fence row removed; average of 20 rods per farm; 175 acres of land cleared, squaring off fields and bringing new land under cultivation; 17 water holes dug; 100,000 tile installed at 27 farms; and 500 rods of laneways improved.

A similar programme, fully as extensive, is planned for next year and is now under way; 11 demonstrations are planned.

Some years ago—and this again under the same programme—rural home and farm improvement was a project of importance in the county. There is evidence in nearly every concession in the county of its results. Interest created in improved appearance of farm homes and buildings and approaches and grounds cannot fail to influence, for the good, the morale of the family farm.

This, by the way, was undertaken in the year 1952 when the international plowing match was held in our county. We believe that in the next five years junior work may take a slight change, some minor changes, but on the whole it is well received and organized. 4-H club work has a wide, popular appeal. The accomplishment of greater growth and results will depend largely on development of more and better local leaders.

More work with the older age group is more difficult to organize and carry through. The field and challenge is there, however, and continued thought and experiment is indicated.

Present agriculture organizations are in the main doing good work. Three Class B fairs in the county are vying with each other and always appear open for suggestions for improvement and are ready to co-operate. The Central Canada Exhibition and the Ottawa Winter Fair are both making worthwhile contributions to agriculture, and to junior agriculture in particular. It is doubtful if any fair organization in Canada is doing more for agriculture than is the Ottawa Winter Fair. We must continue to work closely with them.

Livestock breeding organizations are active and doing good work.

The extension worker can always find active support for worthwhile special activities. Service clubs, Kiwanis especially, are generous and co-operative in helping along projects designed to help young people improve urban-rural relations.

While drainage and land conservation has been a major project in this county for many years and to some, for that reason, might appear to have run its course and be not greatly needed any more, this does not seem the case. There is a continued keen interest and, after all, it is basic to more economical production on most farms.

We are of the opinion that a province-wide farm improvement project would be an excellent agricultural extension activity. It could be designed to include many kinds of farm improvement including crops, drainage, fence row removal, farm layout, buildings and home improvements, landscaping and general beautification. It would have its economic value as well as its aesthetic side. It is time agricultural Ontario brushed up a little.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this to you to prove what can be done when the people themselves take interest enough to work closely with The Department of Agriculture in this work expansion. We are most pleased that we have accomplished so much in the past few years, simply because we have had full co-operation from this department.

I would just like to say that in the organization of this land-use policy, we have these different groups represented on our executive. We have the Ottawa Valley Milk Producers Association; Carleton Cheese Producers Association; Carleton Vegetable Growers; Carleton Hog, Beef and Sheep Producers; the Dairy Groups, namely, Holstein, Ayrshire and Jersey Breeders; Crop Improvement; Seed Growers; Farmers' Association; Agricultural Society; Women's Institute; Beekeepers' Association; Junior Farmers and 4-H leaders; and also two representatives from the county council.

Now, of course, we could not be successful in this work if it were not for the money that was poured in here by the department and I note here that in grants and prize money last year our county received from The Department of Agriculture the sum of $2,474. In addition to that, the department paid to our three Class B fairs the sum of $1,500 each. To the Central Canada Exhibition the sum of $2,500, and to the Ottawa Winter Fair, the sum of $15,000.

In addition to that, some few years ago, a building was built at the Central Canada Exhibition, as a tribute to the late Herb McIlroy. The building was built at a cost of $300,000. A grant of $100,000 was paid by this government, and I might add that the last payment of $29,427 was paid on November 26, 1957.

I just want to point out to you what this government is doing, and what this department in particular is doing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will have more to say on agriculture at a later date. I would first like to add that if our present hon. Minister continues to follow on the heels of his able predecessor, and give Ontario the leadership that he has shown so far since taking office, I have no fear for the future of agriculture in Ontario.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, maybe I could revert to 103, since there has been a rambling all around here. I notice in the public accounts there is an item paid to Lovell and Christmas—and that is in 103—for $11,539. Now I wonder if the hon. Minister could explain what that was for.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: What vote does the hon. member—

Mr. Manley: On 103. I tried to get your eye, Mr. Chairman, but you—

Mr. Chairman: That has been passed.

Mr. MacDonald: Be as liberal as you were with the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. W. E. Johnston).

Mr. Manley: Lovell and Christmas.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I understand, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member's question, this was part of an amount of money that was paid on behalf of the Cheese Producers Association to cover loss of cheese that was sent to Great Britain and spoiled, I understand, over there. To keep the market in a healthy state, we provided reimbursement for the loss that was sustained on the cheese that went wrong after it went overseas.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, was this the property of Lovell and Christmas, their purchasing firm, with head office in Montreal, outside of the province? And did this cheese belong to them? Had they purchased it from the cheese producers?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes. This cheese was purchased from the Cheese Producers Organization, by that importing firm, and it went wrong over there. And simply to make good the loss that they sustained, we reimbursed them. And I think hon. members will agree that that was the proper thing to do, to maintain the market.

Mr. Manley: Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot agree with the hon. Minister. After all, this is a big company. They have been in the importing business, and have been buyers of cheese, for a long time. Longer than I can remember. I dealt with them myself whenever I was dealing with the cheese factory, and I do not know how one can justify a payment of this kind to take care of the loss of a company that has been in business for all this time, dealing in cheese. The same thing could apply with farm machinery and everything else. How far can one go with this?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, I would ask the hon. member, and I know he is a good businessman himself, if he had bought any product, and it went wrong, would he go back and buy the product again, when he had bought it in good faith, if the same person was offering it for sale? We recognize in The Department of Agriculture, and I am sure the government and I know that the hon. member would agree, that when one sells a product in good faith, you expect that product to live up to the reputation under which it is sold.

We learned that the product had gone wrong, even though we had taken every precaution that we felt was necessary at the time in inspection and provision of quality, and all the rest of it—I understand that some of the cheese came from the eastern Ontario area of the hon. member. When this cheese went wrong, we felt that it was only good business to reimburse the people who had suffered a financial loss, so that they would come back and buy from our producers' organization again.

I point out to him the fact that today our cheese market in Great Britain enjoys preference over any cheese in the world. It is the highest selling cheese on the British market today, and I think this is something that we in Canada should be proud of, that we in Ontario should try to maintain, and that we should stand behind the product that we sell.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, I am quite in agreement with a lot of the remarks of the hon. Minister. But it comes back to the question that I brought up when I got on my feet first this afternoon, in asking the hon. Minister if he thought, in his opinion, that we had enough inspectors, or field men, working in the industry in the province today. Now I think there is a duty, not only on the inspectors, but on the operators of the cold storages, and the buyers of the cheese themselves, to see to it that cheese that does not meet the requirements does not go out of the country.

Therefore, I say that we have been neglecting the cheese industry in this province. We have not paid enough attention to the grade of cheese that was going outside of the province and outside of the country. It just brings back what I said a moment ago. If we want to command that market, and we want to hold it, then we have to, and I agree with the hon. Minister, we have to give them the product. It is one of the best products that can be produced anywhere in the world.

I will go a little further and say, Mr. Chairman, that the cheese industry today is the best place in which to take care of surplus milk. It is a place where the quality, if it is properly looked after and if we have the proper storage facilities, of the product will improve with age, where it cannot with butter and with some of the other types of dairy products and therefore I say that we should by all means protect the cheese industry of this province. I do not think the likes of this should have been permitted to take place, because cheese that goes out of the country should be as it is properly represented to be; and therefore I say that I do not think that we should be in a position where we have to go and compensate companies that have been in the business all this time.

We do not know whether this cheese was stored in Lovel and Christmas-owned storages; warehouses, and brought up to maturity point when they were allowed to export them to Great Britain. I think there is definitely a responsibility here as far as The Department of Agriculture is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We agree that there is responsibility as far as The Department of Agriculture is concerned and that is to maintain the good name of Ontario cheese. And I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it is very difficult to know what the policy of the Opposition really is in regard to inspectors. There have been times when we have been accused of putting on too many inspectors, we have been accused of saying that the inspectors are inspecting the inspectors, and now today we have a complete about-face and hear that we should have more inspectors.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if they want inspection to the limit that the hon. member suggests, then we would have to put an inspector in every factory every day of the week. That is the only way we can do it, if this is the way it must be done. One must use reasonable common sense in inspection, and I am sure he would agree that when we provide inspection and instruction to our cheese makers as to how a product is to be handled, then we expect that is the way it will be handled. I think my hon. friend knows very well the circumstances that went into this disqualification of this cheese, perhaps better than any other member of this House, because it came from his own district in large quantities.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that to infer that it is something that we should have done better in The Department of Agriculture, that we accept the blame for this incident, is not presenting the true facts of the case. I suggest we did what we felt was in the best interests of the cheese producers of this province; and, first and last, the cheese producers and the farmers of this province will be our consideration.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. Minister, I do not want to labour this point any further—

An hon. member: Sit down!

Mr. Manley: Well, I will sit down whenever I get ready. But I just wanted to say, what I pointed up a while ago, that the cheese industry is very important and we must keep the quality of the cheese up there if we want to continue to hold this market. But where the policy of the department fell down was when they took the instructors out of the cheese factories in eastern Ontario. If it was so important to keep the grade up and look after the furtherance of the cheese industry, why did they take the instructors out of the cheese plant and put them into other plants in Ontario?

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, does this full $31,000 in this estimate comprise the amount that was paid for this cheese? There are several other companies in this particular estimate on the public accounts—like Rowan and Company, Wilson, Armstrong and Company—$8,000, and so on; it comes to a total of $31,000. Do they all apply to cheese, or do they apply to other things? Of course, I do not want to give the hon. Minister an opportunity of making another policy speech on this item; that would be politically unsound.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Does the hon. member want the information or not?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that the vote that is referred to by the hon. member under public accounts is dealt with under Education, Extension, Marketing and Research Work in any branch of the dairy industry, to provide for grants, expenses and services and such other payments for the encouragement of the dairy industry as directed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council; and this is part of that $31,000 award, here, as far as I know.

Mr. Chapple: This is all “miscellaneous”.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This is the first time I have seen this, I have to confess. If the hon. member wants to use the public account system, why, he can certainly confuse the Minister—if he wants to use it. If he wants to belabour the point I will get the information to the hon. member—if he wishes to have it. If he is just trying to embarrass the Minister, this is a different thing; if he wants the information we will get it for him.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Surely one does not embarrass the hon. Minister by asking him to explain something in the public accounts.

Mr. Chapple: Mr. Chairman, surely it is important to the House to know how the money is spent? If he wants to give it away, fine!

It being 6 of the clock, the House took recess.

Estimates, Department of Agriculture, Mr. Stewart, continued	791
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Macaulay, agreed to	828

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 5, 1962

The House resumed at 8.00 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): I would like to ask the hon. Minister just one question concerning the salaries on the home economics service: $338,000 seems to be a lot for salaries, and I was wondering how the salaries were disbursed or used, in what areas, types of services and so on.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): They are used for the staff of the home economics branch. This is what the salaries in the home economics service are used for. There is a special branch under The Department of Agriculture dealing with the home economics service and that is what the salaries are for.

Mr. Chapple: Are these in all the different colleges, the home economics departments in all the different colleges?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, no! As I understand it, this is the home economics branch of The Ontario Department of Agriculture. It is located at 20 Spadina Road, the headquarters of the particular branch of our department. They provide something the same as the agricultural representative service. They provide home economists in the counties and in the other districts of the province on the same basis as the agricultural representatives, only they do not have as many of them.

It is under their organization and administration that the 4-H homemaking clubs that I talked about this afternoon, having nearly 15,000 girls in rural Ontario, are organized. These are under the direction of the home economics branch of The Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Chapple: Yes, but this is $338,000. The hon. Minister must have a pretty large staff.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, there are 57 on the staff, all told.

Mr. Chapple: Well, it might be cut a little, maybe!

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, on vote 104. Looking over the public accounts for 1960-1961, I notice an item under promotion of junior farm work to the T. Eaton Company of $33,000. Would the hon. Minister please explain the purpose of the $33,000?

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The public accounts and the estimates of a department should not be confused. We are here this evening and this afternoon to vote the estimates of The Department of Agriculture in relation to its future operations. The proper place to relate the expenditure shown in the public accounts for 1960 and 1961 is before the public accounts committee. The proper place to relate the estimates of the hon. Minister which are now before the House is here.

Now, where an hon. member would like to make reference to this year's estimates and point out that last year there was a smaller amount and wonder why there is a difference, I think this is quite legitimate. But as far as relating to the public accounts and asking questions in connection with an item which was in the public accounts on a previous occasion and not in the estimates this year, then the point that the hon. member is making, Mr. Chairman, is out of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Surely he cannot say that the only place we can ask questions in regard to The Department of Agriculture is in the public accounts committee. I want to point out to the hon. Minister that he is going a long way in saying that we cannot ask questions as to what has appeared in the public accounts in regard to The Department of Agriculture. I think the hon. Minister is wrong and I would object very strenuously to an answer of that kind.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of a restrictive attitude in relation to this. This is something that has prevailed from at least 1926, that I know about. While my father was the financial critic of the Opposition in the House, this was a rule which prevailed all during Mr. Hepburn's time. Now, there is a procedure in this House for questioning the public accounts and that is before the public accounts committee.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): There is no such procedure. We have never been held to that.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, the public accounts committee is there for this purpose and it will be called for this purpose.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. Minister changing the procedure? I want to say that the estimates are only estimates of what is going to be spent and the public accounts are accounts that have actually been spent, dollars and cents that are involved in this department. I think it is going a long way if we cannot question the hon. Minister on what has been spent last year, comparing them with what the estimates are for this year.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is exactly the point I am making.

Mr. Manley: After all, is the hon. Minister going to bar hon. members from asking an hon. Minister what those specific items are, money that has been spent out of the public treasury during the past year?

After all, he is going a long way if he objects to hon. members on the agricultural committee asking questions of the hon. Minister of monies that have been expended from a public fund and saying that we cannot deal with those expenditures that took place last year, we have to just deal with the estimates figures that are in the estimates of this year. After all, he is curtailing the debates of this House.

I think the hon. Minister is taking from hon. members the privilege of finding out just how government is spending money. If he takes that attitude, we are going to fight it right to the very last ditch.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, if they are going to fight it, we will be with them. Just to show how completely fallacious is the argument advanced by our little obstructionist across the way, who is seeking to impose his conception of the rules in the House, if what he says is correct, for years the public accounts committee was not called, because the then hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) said the purpose of the public accounts committee was not to do what he has just indicated, it was only to be a scandal committee, so-called.

Now that we have some prospects of the public accounts committee operating in the normal fashion, it has not yet been called in this session. We went for three or four weeks in the fall, we are in our second or third week now, so obviously it is not an operating committee. The net effect of the so-called rule that the hon. Minister is now proposing is that the Opposition will be denied the right to raise questions on the public accounts; and that is what he wants.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, if I may put in my two cents' worth; I was not here in 1926—and somebody says neither was the hon. Minister—but I would like to come back, sir, to a little bit before 1926 and back to the time of the Stuarts.

The historic right of Parliament, sir, one of the historic and touchstone rights of Parliament, is that before this Legislature is required to vote one cent to the Crown that the members hereof are bound in duty and conscience, and armoured with privileges of questioning and criticizing and suggesting and cajoling and antagonizing and opposing and doing everything else that they may do within the rules of the House, sir, in bringing to the attention on behalf of the people they represent matters which pertain to the expenditure of money by this department. I, sir, will be one in the opposition to the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) and everything else, who will not sit here silent and let him impose an extremely technical, and I might say perverse, interpretation of the rules. I ask you, sir, upon our behalf over here, do not let any such narrow and constrictive interpretation of the rules persist in order to in any way inhibit us from bringing these matters to the floor of the Legislature. Now that is the attitude I take.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I will rephrase my question to the hon. Minister and ask: in the estimates for 1962-1963, has the hon. Minister an item or an amount set aside for the T. Eaton Company Limited under promotion of junior farm work; and if so, how much is that estimate?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, I fancy there is. It would come under item No. 12 of vote 104. I think this is where it comes, and I can tell the hon. member exactly what the account for $33,000-odd has to do with—I did not hear the question in the first place—it has to do with prizes that are bought from the T. Eaton Company and are provided for the 4-H homemaking club girls who are declared winners in their various clubs after they have completed 4-H homemaking club projects. They are presented with an award purchased from the T. Eaton Company and this is the amount of the purchase. It is included, I believe, in vote 104, item No. 4, promotion of junior farmer work. It is $137,000.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the hon. Minister. Had the previous Minister of Agriculture not interfered, we would have had this answer long ago and everything would have been to the satisfaction of the House.

Now I would like to ask a question concerning a rural youth centre. Would the hon. Minister explain what is meant by that? Is that also promotion of junior farm work? Where is this youth centre and what is its purpose?

Hon. M. Stewart: Where does the hon. member see this?

Mr. Newman: Under the—this will be found, actually, in the public accounts. It is under promotion of junior farm work. There is $137,000 involved in that, and on page A-15 of the public accounts 1960-1961, right at the bottom of the page, rural youth centre, $8,607.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This is in connection with the rural youth centre at Cayuga, Ontario. It is for the junior farmers, the 4-H clubs, the youths of Ontario, who centralize their activities there. It is sort of a promotional programme for the whole youth programme of The Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Newman: In other words, everything is centred at Cayuga, is that it? Concerning the promotion of junior farm work?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would not say everything, but special activities and projects are sent out from there. We can get the hon. member a full report on it if he wishes.

Mr. Newman: Are there funds then expended for the promotion of a rural youth centre in other areas of the province?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, not to my knowledge.

Mr. Newman: Then this is the sole place where funds are expended.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not know what the hon. member is driving at.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): It is obvious what he is driving at.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): The hon. member for York Centre does not know himself.

Mr. Singer: This gets a little ridiculous. We get the big noise from the north here, noise for no reason at all. Obviously what my hon. colleague was driving at was this: there is one item in the public accounts that indicates exactly what my colleague said and he asked the question of the hon. Minister, which is a reasonable question and a fair question. "In what other places in the province of Ontario are monies expended?" Surely the hon. Minister should answer.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The Minister did answer, there are none. I answered the question and the hon. member kept insisting on something else.

Mr. Singer: Surely the hon. Minister should answer other than giving us evasive—

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, that is the only question I had and the hon. Minister supplied the answer and I thank him for it.

Vote 104 agreed to.

Vote 105 agreed to.

On vote 106:

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on this weed control aspect of field crops, what obligation is there for railways to look after the weeds on their rights-of-way that run through agricultural areas?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am told, Mr. Chairman, the railways are subject to the same conditions as anyone else as far as weed control is concerned.

Mr. MacDonald: What are the penalties in the weed control—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I cannot tell the hon. member offhand, but I can get that information for him. I have not got the Act here.

Mr. MacDonald: Has there ever been a prosecution of the railways for failure to control weeds on their rights-of-way?

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways): I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that down in my home county it is the county weed inspector's greatest delight to get after the railways because he considers them a big interest. They really clean up in Northumberland county, whether the farmers do or not.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a very distinct recollection last summer of being in Lanark county and happened to find a farmer back in his fields. He was pulling out a rather rare weed that was spreading in this area; since it had rained, he could not get at his crops. He said: "My whole problem is in that right-of-way." He said: "They are growing like weeds there, and they are continually getting into my property."

So I asked a question about what should be done, or what can be done, and his statement was that nothing had been done for years.

An hon. member: What railway was that?

Mr. MacDonald: I do not know which one it was. It was near Carleton Place.

Vote 106 agreed to.

Vote 107 agreed to.

On vote 108:

Mr. Sopha: With reference to vote 108, Mr. Chairman, you will note, reading the whole thing in item No. 4:

Educational demonstration work in any branch of livestock, judges, lecturers, valuers and other assistants, expenses and equipment, livestock exhibits and transportation charges, travelling expenses, fieldmen; purchase, maintenance and distribution of livestock; to pay such grants for the encouragement of livestock as may be approved by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

Now that phrase is unique in that throughout the whole of the estimates it is, I believe, the first mention of approval being required by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. I do remember that my esteemed colleague from Grey South (Mr. Oliver) was supported I think somewhat by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) at the committee on the organization of government—we had discussion there, I believe it was the last meeting but one—where certain consideration and study was given to this matter of amounts voted in the estimates to be spent in a discretionary fashion by the hon. Minister. I do recall the hon. member for Grey South—but perhaps he is better able to speak for himself than I. Paraphrasing what he said, referring to this vote back in 104 in connection with clearing land in northern Ontario, he identified it as being a very handy vote that had been used over the years—he has been here a good many years—especially in relation to by-elections in northern Ontario or general elections.

I do not recall that during the Kenora by-election, though there was quite a bit of clearing along the roadways being done, there was great activity, but I do recall in the dead of winter and the depths of January when my hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) and myself and others were peregrinating that riding east to west and west to east, being followed in our footsteps by the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope)—though I must say that he on that occasion ought to have stood in bed, to coin a phrase.

The hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson) says it is the first time he has been up there in years, first time he has been up there since he used to freight cargo on Lac Seul, that is about 30 years ago.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Sopha: Well, sir, to return to the ranch, my query was this: why in vote 108?

I suppose it is idle to complain. I complained last year. I recall that I had the temerity, with great fear and trepidation, to complain the first year I was in the House, also, about these vast sums of money and these estimates that are left to be spent at the discretion of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). A study of the estimates of all departments reveals, I think, that he is unique in his position in that he is given very large amounts of money to spend in his discretion. That characteristic does not obtain with respect to any other department; but it does in almost every vote in these estimates, almost in every one right from 101 through to the end of them.

An hon. member: How many are there?

Mr. Sopha: There are 123. Since the hon. member cannot read, I will be glad to read them for him.

He is unique in that he is given these vast amounts of money to be spent at his discretion. We of the Opposition would not be accused of perverse suspicion, I do not think, if we suggested that there might be a temptation on his part, I am not saying there is, but speaking hypothetically, there might be a temptation, to spend some of these in political context.

As the wise old judge said, "More important than justice be done, is that justice seem to be done." So in the expenditure of public revenue, it is equally important that the suspicion is not there that he might use some of these for the cultivation of political objects. But complain as we might, these estimates come out each year with these large amounts of money. Now, I am not one of those that is for a moment fooled by the printing that is on this book that is published and handed to us, because I took the trouble, for example to calculate, by looking through all of them.

I am referring here to item two, in vote 108. Hon. members will see there the moderate sum of travelling expenses, $69,300. Now—what is the word—sort of mixing the seasoning in with the salads, sort of interlaced throughout the rest of the estimates, hon. members see references to travelling expenses. I took the trouble to total up the whole amount that we are being asked to vote in the estimates in The Department of Agriculture for travelling expenses and it comes to about $300,000. But I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, and you would believe me—whereas there may be some here that would not believe me, but you would believe me—that this is the most itinerant, carpetbagging and peregrinating department of the whole government. When we are asked to vote—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is his Liberal addition.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Sopha: If the hon. Minister would just wait a moment, I will get up to northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I just want to correct the hon. member. I think if he added up the travelling expenses in agriculture, instead of $300,000, it might be $3 million. I think he is being too modest.

Mr. Sopha: No! No, I was referring to the amount that we are asked to vote. I calculate that we are asked to vote, under the heading of travelling expenses, about $300,000. Now, of course there is much more than that. The hon. Minister anticipates what I was going to say. Of course there is more than that. There is about four times that. Something over a million dollars.

I say it is the most itinerant and peregrinating department of the whole government. It makes one wonder—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: I appreciate the former hon. Minister of Agriculture's endeavour to assist his colleague and I thank him for his assistance to me.

Now really, I do not suppose I really care whether the department spends $1.2 million or $3 million, provided it is justifiable. What I do object to, however—trying to assume that I am of adult mind—what I do object to is that instead of putting in the amount they are asking for travelling expenses, they limit it to a mere $300,000 and then go and spend something over a million. Now if the hon. Minister wants a million dollars for travel expenses, I think that he would show us a sense of responsibility and maturity by putting it in the estimates and asking for a million dollars if he wants that. But do not ask for $300,000 and go and spend a million.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order!

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, you and I have lots of time. What I was going to say was that I do not believe in this hiding of amounts, as apparently they are doing here.

Now to return to the point where I started, Mr. Chairman, I ask why is item No. 4 unique in that, in respect of the livestock branch, before they may spend that tidy sum—more money than I will ever have in this lifetime—$195,000—why is it that they have to get the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council? In all the other estimates the sums—and they are not insignificant—over in 104 there is $2,000; there is a mere $83,500 in 106—

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): One hundred and fifty-six in 107.

Mr. Sopha: Yes. My hon. friend from Grey South says $156,000 in 107. There is $50,000 in 101, all adding up to quite comfortable amounts.

Now perhaps the hon. Minister will tell us, in relation to 108—and this is a very simple question, and I see the word is being filtered down from the acting Prime Minister, down the line there, so I may expect a really comprehensive answer on this—my question, Mr. Anthony, is fairly simple. Why does it require the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council for this very important vote? I would be very grateful to anticipate a courteous answer.

An hon. member: That is the longest question in the history of the Legislature.

Mr. Sopha: If my hon. friend would keep quiet, we will get this through.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend anticipates as long an answer as his speech in preparing and delivering the question, we will be here for some time. I would point out to him, since reference has been made to the public accounts, that if he would look on page A-23, he will discover, I believe—

An hon. member: Is this permissible?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This is what the hon. member has been doing.

Mr. Singer: Is the hon. Minister over-ruling the hon. Minister of all the departments?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It has been spelled out as to what accounts really had to do with this. I believe this is on A-23, I saw it here a moment ago. But whatever it may be, I can explain this to the hon. member as having to do with education and demonstration work. I say on page A-23. Two years ago the figure was $184,180.15 and it sets out therein how this money was spent.

Mr. Sopha: Is that accounts ending March 31, 1961? Page A-23? That figure?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: $184,180.15.

Mr. Sopha: Where does the hon. Minister see that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It is about two-thirds of the way down the page. The actual amount spent was $139,120.97. This has to do with the expenses in connection with the livestock branch, with the dairy improvement-association work, and we have something like 60 field men doing that—travelling most of the time. We have livestock people from our livestock branch here travelling all over the province in connection with livestock work. It is spelled out in the various services that are provided by the livestock branch. These are simply travelling expenses that are in connection with their work as they travel about the province. It is a very big department and doing a very big job in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: But my question was, and I thought it was the ultimate in simplicity, why does it require the approval of the Cabinet? In the others the hon. Minister does not need the approval of the Cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, as far as I know this has been the way this has been set up for the last 14 or 15 years at least. I do not know whether there is anything wrong with this way of doing it or not. Does the hon. member think this is the wrong way to do it? Is there something objectionable about the way this is worded or is he just taking exception to the wording of it?

Mr. Sopha: Not only do I think it is wrong, but I believe all the members of the committee on the organization of government thought it was wrong. They think it is wrong for a Minister to have amounts to spend at his discretion, because he ought to be under the control—under some form of control—statutory or otherwise, and not be able to spend money at his discretion. The hon. Minister is accountable to the Legislature certainly after he has spent it but there ought to be some curbs on him before he spends it and I am curious about this.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Why?

Mr. Sopha: In order to ensure that it is not spent for improper purposes and that is a fundamental democratic control. It is nothing more than that and surely you must agree with me on that score.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Supposing an emergency occurs, do you call the Legislature?

Mr. Sopha: If the hon. Minister seriously wants an answer to that, I will give it to him, though I am not responsible for his education. The answer is that the Legislature is represented by the Executive Council of which the hon. Minister is a member and they can meet very speedily and get a Lieutenant-Governor's warrant or a Treasury Board order and spend money and do not need to account to anyone until after it is spent. Surely the hon. Minister knows that. Now he will go away tonight better informed than when he came.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, now that we have pursued the topic this far, what is the difference between an expenditure which is directed by the hon. Minister in most of these particular votes and one which says that it must have the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, I imagine it is the way the Act reads, the way it is drawn up. I do not think there is any real particular difference, just the way the Act is drawn up.

Mr. MacDonald: There is no particular Act in this instance. This is the livestock branch, there is no Act being administered, this is just a branch of the department. I think it is about time there was a little housecleaning done.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on this vote I am rather intrigued by the figure of $195,000 under item 108-4 and the comparison of that with the public accounts on page A-23. The thing that particularly catches my eye in this matter is a grant to the Rainy River Cattle-men's Association in the fiscal year ending 1962 in the amount of $4,564.41.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would be the last one in this House to cast any aspersions on the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Noden). He is a fine gentleman and represents his riding ably, but there are 97 other hon. members in this House, not one of whom is represented in this peculiar set of grants. I have had a quick query with some of my colleagues here, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes), the hon. member for Kent East (Mr. Spence) and the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Gibson). They tell me—and I accept their word because they too are honourable gentlemen—that they do have cattlemen in their riding. They have cattlemen who meet together and have associations, and they are completely at a loss to understand why in Kenora a cattlemen's association receives no grant, why in Oxford a cattlemen's association receives no grant and why in Kent East the cattlemen's association receives no grant.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we could go on through many other ridings, perhaps the other 97, perhaps eliminating my own because there is not a cattlemen's association in York Centre, not even in Riverdale. But Mr. Chairman, I think this is most important: I think the government owes a duty to the people of the province of Ontario to explain why throughout the pattern of these public accounts there are grants to ridings represented only by Conservative members, only for Conservative associations, and why they ignore completely ridings represented by other people. I would ask the hon. Minister to explain that.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Chairman, the Minister will explain that. And I have never heard a member from an urban riding so absolutely ignorant of the question as the one he has mentioned.

Mr. MacDonald: Deal with the issue.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will deal with the issue. The hon. member said we were dealing with Tory ridings only and hon. members in Tory ridings. Let me suggest to you that if the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) were in his seat tonight he would be telling you that the same thing was done for the Wiarton Cattle Breeders' Association many years ago.

Mr. Singer: Well, show us in the public accounts.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Sure, it was done years ago. If you go back several years you will find it. If the hon. member would just go back a few years to the time when that money was spent at Wiarton for the Bruce Cattle Breeders' Association, he will find it. And this money was spent on the same basis, with the same percentage of grants as the Rainy River area, to establish a livestock auction there for the farmers of Rainy River district.

This is one of the greatest things that has ever happened to the farm people of Rainy River district, of the Manitoulin Island district, of the Wiarton district and the Thessalon district. These are the livestock auction sales for feeder cattle that I was talking about this afternoon. If the hon. member knew anything about The Department of Agriculture and its activities to promote the sale of feeder cattle and the interests of the farmers of that area he would not ask such a question.

Mr. Singer: If the hon. Minister is as reasonable in the administration of his department as he appears to be in this explanation, surely the hon. Minister would find it only politic to expend a portion of this $195,000 in ridings other than those represented by members of his own party.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There was only one riding.

Mr. Singer: Yes, there is only one and that is the whole point and the hon. Minister knows it.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, in the acquittal of our responsibilities as I see them, you will forgive me if I am a bit persistent—I want to insist upon an answer to the question I addressed in relation to 108 as to why the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council is required in relation to that vote.

May I preface what I wish to say with these remarks? There is a new game started around here. And the new game is called "Why is so-and-so not in his seat". The hon. Minister of Agriculture just picked up the cue from the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, who started that game about a week ago. In addition to the responsibilities he has, which are manifold and multifold and onerous, he takes upon himself the responsibility to ascertain why hon. members are not here. He is a truant officer, my friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver) says. But he got his come-uppance a week ago Wednesday, when we went to the energy committee meeting and there was one Conservative member there.

That is all I am going to say about that. This is prefatory. Now I want to say that I counted the number of members of the executive council who advise the Lieutenant-Governor who were present. Of the active ones, and not counting the junior people who are coming along, there are eight in their seats. And of the eight members of the executive council that are here, I think I am correct in saying that there are two members of the Treasury Board, which was expanded to six members when we got the new regime around here.

Now one would think—

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I moved out of my seat to accommodate the hon. Minister of Agriculture. Now the hon. member wants to make a big to-do about it.

Mr. Sopha: All right. There are three members of the Treasury Board. Will you note in your book that the hon. Minister of Labour is here. I forgot for a moment that he is a member of the Treasury Board, but if I am correct in saying, there is the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, the hon. Minister of Highways and the hon. Minister of Labour, and that is all from the Treasury Board.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. Sopha: The connotation in which I speak, of course, is that these members of the Treasury Board might come to the support of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and explain to this House once and for all why this approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council is required on vote 108 and no similar approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council is required in relation to any of the other discretionary amounts that may be spent by the hon. Minister of this department. But I demand an answer.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, we can look this matter up if it is a technicality determining whether it is worth making a fuss over with our hon. friend from Sudbury. I would suggest that the only reason I can say that it is different—and frankly I have never noticed the wording before—is that it has to do with the acceptance of this by Order-in-Council. But we will make sure about it. We will provide him with the answer to this.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. Minister will hold over this estimate until an explanation is forthcoming. If he will not do that then I will move that the passing of this estimate be delayed until an explanation is forthcoming. And I so move, sir.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, if I might speak to this motion that our hon. friend has made, or proposes to make here. If he wants to hold up the whole dairy-herd improvement programme for the province of Ontario, we can call our field men off the road and tell them that they are through and what has happened.

Hon. members: Oh no.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, this is what the hon. member is suggesting.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I will take complete responsibility for the act that has been asked by the hon. member for Sudbury. I think it is the democratic way to proceed. And if the hon. Minister of Agriculture does not understand the significance and purpose of the Opposition then I suggest that he realize now that this is the normally accepted way to proceed in objecting to a particular item. It may be that there is a perfectly logical explanation, and if there be, remember that we offered to get the explanation.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, if there is a perfectly logical explanation, let us have it.

Mr. Singer: Adjourn the vote.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We will not adjourn the vote.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order. You have heard the amendment—

Mr. Sopha: I just wonder—this is a rather ticklish thing with me, Mr. Chairman, I just wonder, on a point of privilege—just what that insulting innuendo was.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): It was no innuendo. I am rather amazed when I walked in here, to find that the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) has all of a sudden become an expert on agriculture.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on a point of personal privilege, the hon. Minister from St. Andrew has exhibited his usual boorishness. If he had listened to what I had said—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am entitled to rise on a point of personal privilege and I am going to. The hon. Minister from St. Andrew has exhibited his usual boorishness. If he had listened to what I said, he would have recognized, if he had the intelligence to do so, that I made a legitimate point on a legitimate thing which had nothing to do with the intricacies of agriculture. It was a query about the mechanics and the method of reporting in these accounts and the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, on the point of privilege, I apologize. I am sorry. If I said the member was an expert on agriculture, I apologize. I know now he is not.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. Minister from St. Andrew should have the courage to put on the record what he actually did say. I say again, sir, that I am rather sensitive about that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is on the record. Do not worry about it.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order! You have heard the question. All in favour say "aye".

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Are you calling vote 108?

Mr. Chairman: No. The amendment to vote 108. All those in favour of the amendment say "aye".

All opposed say "nay".

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Vote 109?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, we are not through with vote 108 yet. I asked particularly if you were calling vote 108, because there are a couple of points I would like to ask about.

Question 1: The Dairy Herd Improvement Association has been referred to twice in the hon. Minister's answers since dinner, and I would like to ask him what the cost of this service is, because I realize that it must far exceed the income from those benefiting from it, which happens to be $46,295.25, according to the book here. And I would like to know what the cost of this service is in excess of the amount that the farmers pay.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The Dairy Herd Improvement Association costs the province of Ontario $86,591.

Mr. Nixon: Secondly, I would like to know under No. 8 "expenses re brucellosis control". The hon. Minister referred to this by another name. There is another one yet to go, of course, but I was wondering if there was any thought in The Department of Agriculture whether the disease we are reading about in the papers in the last month or two, leptospirosis, is becoming important enough to warrant some organized Department of Agriculture control, or perhaps reimbursement for the farmers concerned.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, to answer the hon. member's first question, Mr. Chairman, the cost of the brucellosis control programme in 1959-1960 was $548,300. In 1960-1961, it was $461,200. As to the matter that he raised in connection with the disease he mentions—this uncommon disease that now appears to be, in some areas, causing concern, I would say that this is a matter for the federal government to deal with completely, and it is under their jurisdiction under the federal Health of Animals Act.

Mr. Nixon: In that connection, sir, why would that be federal, and brucellosis provincial?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, that expenditure under the brucellosis control programme was for the vaccination of heifer calves in the province of Ontario. The actual blood testing and compensation paid for reaction to the blood test is paid under the federal government, The Health of Animals Act.

Mr. Chapple: As far as this brucellosis control programme is concerned, I believe that it is getting under control very fast, and I do not think that there should necessarily be any reason why this programme should be expanded as far as actual dollar expenditure is concerned.

There is another one. The warble fly control programme is still $78,000, and I understood that that was pretty well taken care of as far as having this control is concerned. The amount expended for that seems to be rather high as well. And $20,000 for rabies indemnity payments; I wonder if the hon. Minister figures we are going to have any rabies this year.

On item No. 5 of vote 108—The Stallions Act. Apparently there is still $9,800 under this particular Act which is high, I think, as far as horses are concerned, particularly farm horses, which I imagine this was originally set up for, unless, of course, we are going into the breeding of race horses. I know once you are in the business of farming it is pretty hard to get out of that and into something else. I think, quite probably, if the hon. Minister of Agriculture were to see that these particular estimates were gone into a little more carefully, a reduction could be in order.

These particular ones that I know of seem to be quite high and I think in conjunction with other estimates through the whole of the department a very close look seems to be in order.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I should like to ask a question, as a matter of information, and I think this is where I might ask it. Could the hon. Minister tell me why grants are being administered through this department for matters such as have just been brought up, and yet the matter of grants to the Standard Bred Horse Society and the Canadian Thoroughbred Horse Society do not come through his department? Does The Department of Agriculture not have an interest in these? Why is this not conducted through The Department of Agriculture?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, that is a question that I must say is a bit hard to answer. First of all, I would say that the policies of the department are directed towards the matter of providing grants for the—is the hon. member referring to The Stallions Enrolment Act, or what is he referring to?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I would tell the hon. Minister that I am referring to an estimate which will be voted on by this House, in the sum of some $85,000.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Under where?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Under The Treasury Department. And I am asking the hon. Minister why a matter like this would not be the concern of The Department of Agriculture. It would seem to me that these types of horses are livestock. I am wondering why The Department of Agriculture would not be concerned with this, rather than The Treasury Department.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, it is a simple answer. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that that grant is provided through The Treasury Department because of the racehorse business, and has nothing to do with the agriculture of the province as far as I am concerned.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): There is a difference in the horses, you know.

Mr. Newman: To carry that one further then, Mr. Chairman, why is not the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals under The Department of Agriculture? It is under Treasury.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Under item 9 of 108—am I in order if I speak about the inspection of meat? It is in 108, veterinary services.

Mr. Manley: Well, Mr. Chairman, under No. 9 of 108—veterinary services, community sales—I want to put a question to the hon. Minister. I know it is very important that we have inspection of livestock in those sales, but I think what the hon. member for Brantford was getting at was the problem that has arisen just recently in the province with regard to the sale of tainted meat. I think it has a direct bearing here, Mr. Chairman, and we know there are a number of cases before the courts at the present time.

What I wanted to ask the hon. Minister was: are all the animals which go into community sales inspected as to health in regard to human consumption, or just how does the veterinary service apply to the various animals that do come into community auctions?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Did the hon. member ask two questions or is there only one?

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, I thought I made myself plain. I was referring to the community auctions. I asked if all the animals that came in for auction from the various farms or dealers, whatever the case might be, were fully inspected as to health; and if there was any sort of a certificate given to show that, if bought for human consumption, they would be fit for human consumption.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, the livestock that come to a community sale can be inspected by a veterinarian who is employed by the sales themselves to do this inspection.

Mr. Manley: Did the hon. Minister say they can be?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They are inspected. An inspector is there who will do the inspection work at the sale. I do not think any certificates are issued, that I know of. I think they are approved and that is all. If an animal comes in and the veterinarian who is in charge of inspection on the day of the sale feels that there is something wrong with the animal, he can tell the farmer to take it home or dispose of it in some other way.

Mr. Manley: In other words, it is not earmarked that it would not be fit for human consumption, even if the veterinarian thought that it was not? Is that what I took from the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, the veterinarians who inspect all livestock at auction or at the community sales are paid by The Department of Agriculture; and we in turn, in the department, are reimbursed by the returns from licences which we issue to the community sale operators across the province. All livestock is inspected by the veterinary who is employed by The Department of Agriculture, in all the community sales in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Manley: Well, that does not quite answer the question, Mr. Chairman. If, in the veterinarian's opinion—and I have seen it myself, where possibly a dairyman would bring a cow in, put it up for auction, and then feel it was not going for a high enough price, he would bring it back and then put it in for beef. Is there any assurance that that cow or that animal does pass the inspection that says it is fit for human consumption? That is what I am trying to get at. The question that I asked was: is there any certificate issued, or is the general public assured that any of those animals bought by the beef purchaser are fit for human consumption? In other words, are they permitted to buy animals that are not fit for consumption? Can they bring it to their plants, have it killed, and let it find its way into the meat markets of the province?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The veterinary is held responsible for his inspection of all animals—

Mr. Manley: Would the hon. Minister speak a little louder?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The veterinary is held responsible, from a disease or a health standpoint, for all animals which come to these community sales to be auctioned. If a cow was not selling for a high enough price as a milk cow, there would be no harm in it being sold for beef because the hon. member and I have slaughtered plenty of cows that were not what they should be for milk but which were still edible.

Mr. Manley: I agree with the hon. Minister, but he has not got the point yet. Is the purchaser assured that that meat is fit for human consumption? That is what I am trying to get at.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, this inspection should assure that it is fit for human consumption; if it is passed by the veterinary.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, I think I would like to say that if any animal inspected at these sales, by our veterinarian, is in his opinion not healthy, is filled with disease, or appears to be diseased, then he just prohibits that animal from being offered for auction—for whatever purpose it might be described. It is prohibited, and the farmer takes it away and gets it out of there.

Mr. Manley: That is the information I wanted, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Chairman, just along that line, does the hon. Minister mean to tell me that there is no way of marking the animals that are rejected from a particular sale, and that the owner could take it to another sale and go through the same procedure? Are they marked? That is what I want to know.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned—I have sold animals through sales and never had one rejected—to my knowledge there is no mark put on those animals. They are simply not allowed to be sold in that sale. Then, as the hon. member suggests, if the farmer takes it to another sale, it is reasonable to suppose that the veterinarian would turn it down at that sale.

Mr. Innes: Not to be critical in any way, but I think there is merit in having them marked in some fashion, whether or not it be a tattoo, so that they would be recognized. As you know, and as I know, there are dealers who continue to go from one sale to the other. They have their so-called route, and they will go from one to the other until they are accepted. This is a known fact, and I think it has some bearing into which the hon. Minister should look.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) has brought up a very good point. I am sure that if a veterinary at a sale condemned an animal as unfit to be offered at public auction, then it would be marked and the farmer would have to destroy the animal.

Mr. Innes: Well, I appreciate that; I hope that would be the situation.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I do not think the former livestock commissioner is here tonight or he would have the answer for the hon. member. I am sure that would be the case.

Mr. Innes: I would hope so.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: He would not allow the animal to be offered for sale the second time.

Mr. Innes: Yes. There is just one more question in regard to the Dairy Herd Improvement Plan. For some years there was quite a list of herds waiting to get on the dairy herd improvement list. Would the hon. Minister mind telling me if the department at the moment is up to date, and if all applications that are being received are accepted? Or is there still a waiting list?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There is still a waiting list.

Mr. Innes: Would the hon. Minister mind telling me how long they should anticipate waiting before they could be accepted?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, it is such a popular policy, and there are so many farmers wanting to get on the programme, that I do not know how to determine how many there actually are. There have been some waiting a while. There are those who drop out because they have qualified for ROP service; and then another farmer is taken on. We are trying to extend it as fast as we can but there are limitations to what we can afford.

Mr. Innes: Has the hon. Minister given any consideration to possibly asking a small remuneration fee from these owners, in order to possibly put more people, more men, on the staff? This actually is a wonderful way of boosting efficiency in our farm operations. This has been indicated by several people and I think it is a real step forward. It seems to me that, if a farmer applies, he should have reasonable assurance that he would be accepted in, say, one year, two years; how long would he have to wait right about now?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Frankly, I could not tell the hon. member how long one would have to wait right now.

Mr. Innes: Six months? A year?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It could be.

Mr. Innes: What is the average?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think there is a lot of merit in what the hon. member says as far as the matter—he is talking about such as a participating plan?

Mr. Innes: That is quite true.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It would sound like a reasonable idea, and it might very well be that if the farmers who are interested in getting their herds on the DHI programme would signify their intentions for a participating plan, I think it would go a long way in helping us extend the service. I think that is a very good idea.

Mr. Innes: Thank you.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, on No. 10 of 108—rabies. We thought a year or so ago that we had rabies pretty well under control, but apparently there has been a new outbreak, especially in the eastern part of the province. I am just wondering, when I see this vote of $20,000, if that is really going to take care of it.

I do not know of course what the department paid last year, but I understand that now it is purely between the provincial and the federal Departments of Agriculture. Mr. Chairman, we know that the greatest carriers of this disease are foxes and coons, and one or two other of the animals that go about different counties, and I was wondering if his department and The Department of Lands and Forests thought a bit about giving an extra bounty in order to destroy the animals that spread this disease.

It can, I think, run into an awful lot of money when it comes to payment for livestock today, especially if you get into the purebred cattle and the increased prices of dairy cattle in the province and I was wondering—I see the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) laughing over there—but it is a serious problem, a very serious problem among the cattle breeders in this province.

I am wondering if it would not possibly save the two governments a considerable amount of money if we considered paying a pretty good bounty for foxes, coons, and other animals that are carriers of this disease. Possibly it would be better to go along with a plan of this kind, because our hunters today, at the price of pelts, are not too much interested in going out and hunting down those animals that are distributors of the disease. Possibly, if we could pay a larger bounty, we would give them the initiative to go out and destroy those animals.

I would like to hear the comment of the hon. Minister with regard to this. I think it would be money well spent on the one hand, and save the money of the departments on the other. That is an idea I have, and perhaps the hon. Minister could elaborate a bit on it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Manley) has raised a question that is of great concern to us. I think it is of concern to all people associated with the livestock industry because we know that this is a problem. As for the amount of money set aside here in the estimate—I notice it is $20,000—the hon. member felt that would not be enough; is that it?

Mr. Manley: No; I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not think anyone knows but I will say that as far as we are concerned, if more is required we will go back to the Treasury Board and ask for more. We have obligated ourselves to this agreement on a 40-60 per cent basis with the federal government—we paying 60, the federal government paying 40. And this is the programme that will be carried out. If this is not enough, we will have to get more.

Regarding the matter of the animals, the wildlife the hon. member suggests, this is a point I have heard argued many times. There are the people who belong to naturalists' clubs, those people who are interested in wildlife and the preservation of wildlife and that sort of thing—these people oppose this very violently. They say it is the destroying of many harmless creatures that really have nothing to do with this at all.

I have heard it argued that, by paying a bounty—and this was suggested, I recall very well, in western Ontario when the epidemic came through before—that the bounties be increased substantially, it lent itself to arguments both ways in relation to whether it was a very effective programme or not. I think there may be merit in a practical way in what the hon. member says, and it is something we can give consideration to. It certainly affects the hon. Minister of another department of government, but I would not attempt to speak for him.

Mr. Manley: In other words, Mr. Chairman, I asked if the hon. Minister had spoken to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner), but apparently he has not

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if it has been brought to his attention that, in the settling of these rabies claims, I believe the veterinary who looks after the farmer's needs is brought in and then the federal veterinarian is brought in and they claim it is a rabies case. After they have claimed that, it is sent on to Ottawa for further examination and in some cases refused. This farmer in question was put to a lot of expense, burying the animal and cleaning his barn up, and then finds out he does not receive any payment. Are there many of those cases brought to the attention of the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I appreciate the hon. member raising that question, and I agree that that is a bone of contention with some farm people. I have one in my own particular area to whom, I think, this very thing that the hon. member suggests, happened. Frankly, there was not anything we could do.

The animal in question gave every indication that it was suffering from rabies. It was destroyed, and the farmer was required to dispose of it in the proper manner, and this very thing happened. I feel this is something perhaps we should take a look at.

Vote 108 agreed to.

On vote 109:

Hon. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, on vote 109, I would like to make a few comments to the House for a few minutes this evening—not speaking as a member of the Cabinet particularly, as much as speaking as one of the few fluid milk producers in this House. In so doing, I will be taking the position that the milk producers of this province should give serious consideration to the milk marketing plan as developed by milk producer leaders.

For some time now, many of the dairy farmers have felt that there was a need for a new approach to the marketing of dairy products and milk. This the government has also recognized, and I firmly believe that our present hon. Minister (Mr. Stewart) and the former hon. Minister of Agriculture have offered every assistance in getting the four milk groups together in order to bring an overall marketing plan into being in this province.

The government has realized for a number of years that the problem is no longer a matter of production, but has switched to the problem of finding suitable markets. I believe that the farm people in Ontario are fortunate that we now have, as Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Everett Biggs, who is considered by most people as one of the best authorities on farm marketing in this province, particularly having to do with dairy products.

Present conditions in the dairy industry, having regard to the surpluses of dairy products and the decrease in per capita consumption of some of the dairy products, warrant immediate action. Butter surplus is at an all-time high. As wheat is the balance wheel of general farming, butter has always been considered the balance wheel of the dairy industry.

Forty-two per cent of the milk produced in Canada is processed into butter. The fluid or whole milk shipper is considered to be in a very advantageous position as far as dairy products are concerned, being paid a price of something over $5 per cw.; whereas the other three sections of the industry are receiving roughly $2.60 per cw. This, in itself, looks like a very great differential in the two prices. However, the difference is not as great as it appears.

The fluid milk shipper must, of necessity, ship considerably over his quota. Most fluid milk shippers are paid about 80 per cent of their quota at full price, and 15 to 20 per cent at the surplus price which is usually around $2.60 per cw. One must always accept about 15 or 20 per cent surplus. This has the immediate reaction of bringing the $5 per cw. milk down to about $4.25.

The fluid milk producer must always keep his quota up the year round. This, quite often, costs the farmer considerable money in replacement of fresh cows at a time of the year when milk is in short supply. The fluid milk shipper must also produce milk with a very low bacteria count and, to do this, one of the prime requirements is good refrigeration equipment.

On the other hand, other sections of the dairy industry are being subsidized to some extent which helps decrease that difference between fluid milk and the other three branches of the industry. There is, however, a certain percentage of the producers who are only receiving $2.60 per cw. for their milk, and have the ability to produce Grade "A" milk for the fluid market. Under the present system they may never get the opportunity to ship to the whole milk market.

If this milk marketing plan is to work, it must be accepted wholeheartedly by the four groups, and in order to assure the complete success of any milk marketing plan, there must be co-operation between the producers—the distributors and the processors in this province.

I would like to outline briefly, as follows, some of the changes that could take place under such a plan.

At the present time Ontario is unable to supply the orders received from the United Kingdom for Ontario raw cheddar cheese. More milk would be channelled to this segment of the industry and away from the manufacture of butter and powder, which is now in surplus supply. This is also most important since, as in the manufacture of cheese, the whole milk is used, including the butterfat.

More effective advertising and promotion could be undertaken, as each milk producer in the province would contribute to a fund for this purpose. We are, at the present time, being out-promoted by competitive beverages, and substitutes such as margarine.

Under a marketing plan, licence fees would be collected to create a fund which would be used to administer the plan and also cover the cost of advertising and promotion.

A stabilization fund, collected as a levy, could help greatly to export our surplus dairy products.

Quotas could be established to level off production, so that it would be more in line with the amount required for milk and dairy products.

Eventually, an elected provincial board of milk producers would be marketing the milk of this province. This would replace the existing four boards, and tend to give more efficient service, eliminating duplication. In initiating a plan, it is essential that there should be as little change as possible in existing conditions.

Considerable savings to the farmer could be effected by less duplication in transportation.

It is hoped that a marketing plan coming into effect in Ontario would encourage other provinces to do the same, as the same surplus problems exist outside of Ontario.

The price of milk to producers supplying fluid milk must remain at present levels as set out by formulae pricing. These producers must ship top quality milk and maintain a continuity of supply at all times.

The producers of some segments of the industry are not enjoying a reasonable standard of living. They are working long hours and have a large investment; and under a marketing plan there would be an opportunity to strengthen the now lagging price structure in the manufactured section through a unified industry approach.

More interest should be created in the school milk programme. Children would consume more milk if given the opportunity.

More research should be undertaken to keep pace with competitive products, some of which are being imported into Ontario and Canada, such as powdered cream and also grades of cheese not processed here, with a view not to have them restricted but to be manufactured here in Ontario.

I believe the Ontario government deserves a great deal of credit for the passing of legislation last fall, to have the butterfat differential made uniform over the province. This should help prevent differences of opinion regarding the various breeds and provide a uniform buying base with no price advantage to anyone.

A strengthening of milk marketing is necessary in Ontario. The government, through The Department of Agriculture, has provided ways for the dairy groups to get together.

The needed changes are recognized. I can say this as a milk producer. It is apparent that industry is closer to agreement than ever before. The government can only co-operate and help. The final decision will be up to the dairy farmers of this province.

My knowledge of the proposed common market of European countries is very limited; however, if Britain is included in this common market it could have quite a detrimental effect on many of our farm products, particularly the dairy products. I believe if we had a milk marketing plan as presented, we would be in a much stronger position to continue our exports as we have in the past. Great Britain needs these products and anything which we can do to improve our quality and our marketing, would assure a continuance of this market.

In conclusion, I am sure that I am speaking for the people of my riding when I say they are most pleased with the positive approach that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) is making to this milk marketing plan; and although a great majority of producers in Wentworth country ship to fluid milk markets of either Hamilton or Toronto, I am sure they are going to endorse this new milk marketing plan.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) has brought this question up. I know that we in my part of the province are very anxious that there be a milk marketing plan set up in the province of Ontario, because the majority of the people in my county are in the production of milk for cheese.

A number of things that the hon. Minister has mentioned are certainly true. I have before me a report of the dairy farmers of Canada and it is quite interesting to note the prices that are being paid at the present time to fluid milk shippers and those that are engaged in other parts of the milk producing industry. I notice that back in 1951, and I have the figures before me for 1951 to 1960, that the fluid milk price was $4.27, where the other milk was $2.94. In 1960 the fluid milk price was $5.16—that is the average price I believe across the province—where the other milk was $2.61.

Now that is almost double for fluid milk as compared to other milk. I suppose that this price has been established on a 3 to 5 per cent basis.

What I wanted to point out to the House—and I think it is of importance—this was the price in 1957, whenever John Diefenbaker took over at Ottawa. He did say: "Follow me and the farmers of this country will be looked after"; but I might say that we in the cheese-producing areas of the province were getting at that time $2.80 as compared to $2.61 at the present time.

Over the 10-year period, when the economy of this province was going forward in leaps and bounds, the producers of milk for cheese and butter found that we have taken a decrease over the 10-year period of 33 cents a hundred.

Now I just wonder where the justification is when a segment of the industry takes a decrease while others are taking an increase. I think it has been pointed out that the net income of the farmers today in the province of Ontario is lower than it ever was since records have been kept. I just wanted to point up a few of those things.

The costs are mounting all the time and as has been suggested by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) it is about time, in my opinion, that we should have a milk marketing plan to take care of the marketing of milk in this province at this time.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question in regard to marketing boards. Not too long ago we had a vote on the corn plan in the province and as the hon. Minister knows, it was defeated. Of course, I would like to say that there was a great deal of resentment in regard to a different number on each of the ballots that were sent out to the growers. I would like to know, when the last vote on a marketing plan was taken by mail, who decided to put a number on each ballot, which was resented by quite a number of growers in southwestern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Frankly, I will have to get that information for the hon. member, but I shall find it and furnish it to him.

Mr. Gordon: May I ask the hon. Minister a question, a very simple one? What is a six-quart basket of peaches? It is a very simple question, Mr. Chairman, what is a six-quart basket of peaches?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: What is a six-quart basket of peaches? Well, I would suppose it would be a six-quart basket of peaches.

Mr. Gordon: I have in my hand here an ad. that appeared in one of the metropolitan newspapers, in fact most of the papers across the province. It has a picture of trucks as far as you can see down the road, and these trucks are loaded with peaches. I will not mention the supermarket they belong to. At any rate, they say that this is part of the cavalcade of trucks and trains that are carrying four million baskets of peaches to all parts of eastern Ontario.

"This order is the largest individual order placed with growers. Peaches picked yesterday will be on sale tomorrow" and so on.

Now, sir, those peaches I have here were sold at 75 cents for a six-quart basket, 73 cents for a six-quart basket. At that price for those peaches, they were just fooling the people, they were deceiving the people. The people were getting a very small basket of peaches, although it is called a six-quart basket of peaches. Those peaches have only two layers and on top of the first layer is a piece of cardboard and the top layer are placed in nice little cups. It is a very small basket of peaches, but it is called a six-quart basket of peaches.

Many of us in the business sold peaches, a six-quart basket of peaches, one-third more peaches, for 89 cents. Because it was a three-layer basket of peaches with a collar around the top. I think that the department should define what a six-quart basket of peaches is and not let the people be fooled by this; because they certainly were.

Another question in connection with the inspection branch of the hon. Minister's department. In connection with the marketing of tomatoes from the Leamington area in the early spring, the merchants are really taken for a ride on that. You pay $4.50 to $5 for a 15-pound basket of tomatoes, you take the lid off and there is not one of them that you can sell; they are half green, they are miserable looking things. No. 1 they call them and it takes two weeks to have them ready to sell and by that time they are not worth $2.50.

Now whoever inspects those tomatoes and puts this stamp on them, they should be changed to another job because they do not know what they are doing when they put a stamp on green tomatoes to be sold as ripe tomatoes. They are just fooling the people again, but the merchant takes the licking in this case.

Those are two questions. I might say I know of one inspector who—I do not know how he came to be an inspector because he never grew a tomato in his life—and maybe that is what is wrong with the department.

Those are just some remarks in connection with our inspection branch and with the matter of fooling the people with small baskets of peaches. Mr. Chairman, surely we can have an answer on that now. What is the hon. Minister going to do about it? Is he going to allow them to get fooled again next year? What is a six-quart basket of peaches now?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: If the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, is referring to the fact that there is misleading advertising going on—is this it? Is he saying that there is misleading advertising—

Mr. Gordon: I have just brought to the hon. Minister's attention—and here is the advertisement, here is the picture of the peaches and there are only two layers in a basket. On the other hand, other merchants have 6-quart baskets of peaches. We advertise 6-quart baskets of peaches. When the housewife sees 73 cents, she thinks she is going to get a bargain. When she sees 89 cents she thinks she is paying too much.

But in this case, when she pays 73 cents or 75 cents, she is paying too much. She is getting a real bargain and good value on the 89 cent basket. I think that what the hon. Minister should do is define what is a 6-quart basket of peaches—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Misleading advertising is handled by The Food and Drug Act of the federal government.

Mr. Gordon: —so they get good value for their money?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I want to come back briefly to the question of the—Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I gave him the answer.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I looked at the hon. Minister and he said he had given the answer, so I was accepting his word for a moment. Now I am proceeding.

When I commented this afternoon on the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board, I prefaced my comments by stating that I was not going to deal in personalities either past or present. I wanted to deal with some of the basic principles involved in the board. That is the reason I was a little surprised, and suggested the hon. Minister was rather unfair in his outburst, when he was presumably replying to my observations.

The question I was raising was the conflict involved in fixing the same board with judicial and administrative responsibilities. It would be just as unfair for the hon. Minister to attack Mr. Justice Wells, for his observation with regard to the members of the milk control board some 15 years ago, as impugning their integrity, as it was for the hon. Minister to say what he did in his comments this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, if I may just draw a brief analogy, I want to come back to this question with the hon. Minister. If he takes the labour relations board, which is roughly a comparable body, fulfilling something of the same functions on the labour side as compared to the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board—overseeing the collective bargaining rights of labour as compared with farmers. If, for example, in the dispute that has gone on now for some months, between the steel workers and mine mill in Sudbury, the Ontario Labour Relations Board had been involved almost as a participant in that dispute, on the scene, intervening in the day-to-day administration of the union, engaging in propaganda effort and going out and trying to argue the case with one side or the other, I think one could have legitimately come to the conclusion that that board then would have destroyed its capacities for acting impartially in its judicial function. So I come back to the point that I asked the hon. Minister this afternoon, a point that is underlined by the observation by Mr. Justice Wells in a comparable board some 15 years ago. I ask the hon. Minister, does he not feel that a board which has been given these conflicting functions—quasi-judicial and administrative functions—is faced with an impossible task of doing both jobs well?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member's point is very well taken. It is one to which we will give consideration.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I deeply appreciate what the hon. Minister says tonight. I wish he would go back and look at the tirade, the diatribe, he poured at me this afternoon when I said essentially the same thing as I did now.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The hon. member said a lot more things—

Mr. MacDonald: No, I did not say anything more than this.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, yes he did.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not at all.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on looking over the public accounts and examining some of the names and not expounding on agriculture. Just analysing some of the public accounts for the benefit of my hon. friend from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), there is a man shown here by the name of G. F. Perkin who was paid in the year 1960-1961, $11,999.98, I presume as a salary. Then the same gentleman, apparently, under the markets branch, is given an allowance of $2,788.80 for travelling expenses and the same gentleman further on is given a further travelling allowance of $2,299.50. Now I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us why Mr. Perkin, who seems to be the best paid gentleman in the markets branch, draws two travelling allowances and why they are listed under two separate items.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Probably a district Liberal organizer.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that my hon. friend has raised the name of the respected gentleman, Mr. Perkin. I know no man in the province of Ontario who has devoted more, as a civil servant, to the interests of marketing than has my friend, Mr. Perkin. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this man, whose salary is quoted here and who is listed by my hon. friend as having three travelling expense accounts here—

Mr. Singer: Two!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Two, was it? If there were two I suggest this, that Mr. Perkin went overseas at least twice that I know of in the last year. He has been responsible for getting Ontario products into more markets and exhibitions and shows than any other man that I know. I would say that he is a man of modest habits and—I can assure the hon. members of this House, Mr. Chairman, that if this is the expense account which he rendered, it is exact to the cent as to how much was spent in his travelling expenses. Now, my hon. friend is suggesting—and I wonder if this is what it is—that he is getting too much in travelling expenses. Is this what he is going after?

Mr. Singer: No! No! It just seems to me more than passing strange, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Perkin—and I am advised by many of my hon. colleagues here that he is an excellent gentleman, as fine a man as the hon. Minister described him—that his expenses would not be listed in one account. It seems to me that there must be something more than meets the eye, when the account has to be broken up into two parts.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think if my hon. friend will note in the public accounts, the marketing branch and the markets branch are included in one item. Under the estimates we have the farm products marketing board, the farm products inspection service, the marketing development branch and the co-operators' branch. All of these, I believe, are under the public accounts, if I am not mistaken, as they are listed here. Now they were broken up this year in order that we could better assess objectives and purpose, the activities of each of these specific projects. I would think that the hon. member could easily find why Mr. Perkin's expense accounts are in more than one of them, because he operates in more than one field. As his expense account was a certain figure for a certain project, it might very well be listed as a certain amount for another project.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can drive my point home a little more clearly with this example: there is another gentleman by the name of Mr. B. P. Teasdale, who gets a salary of $9,499.92 and he is shown as drawing a salary under the farm markets board and co-operative loans board. Now, under travelling expenses, Mr. Teasdale draws $1,602.11, under that branch. If we go over to page A-25 under the administration and enforcement of plant diseases in The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act, the same gentleman, apparently, because it is the same name and the same initials, draws the additional sum of $1,602.11, which by coincidence is exactly the same sum. Now it would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that the coincidence needs a wee bit of explanation. It would seem to be that someone has taken a total sum and divided it by two and put one in each half.

Mr. Teasdale has a job, I would presume, either in the one branch or in the other and I would like to hear the explanation of the hon. Minister for it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think the reasonable explanation that could be given here is that the travelling expenses were split in two figures and listed here because I want to say that the gentleman under question was a member of the farm products marketing board, he is chairman of the co-operative loans branch and also is an administrator of The Grain Elevator Storage Act.

All of these things require a considerable amount of travelling expense, all of them. I do not think it is unreasonable to suppose that the total travelling expenses of the gentleman involved was so divided as listed here in the public accounts, showing so much for one. If they had all been put under one, it would be wondered why he did not have any expenses if there were none shown for him. I do not think there is anything out of order at all in the matter whatever.

Vote 109 agreed to.

On vote 110:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, all things come to those who wait. You will recall that a number of hours ago, some time this afternoon, I was on the verge of discussing the question of meat inspection under vote 101, I believe it was. It was pointed out to me I had the wrong vote and I should wait until 110, which I have managed to do.

I was pointing out, Mr. Chairman, that this whole issue was brought to the attention of the public very dramatically early this year when it was disclosed that a substantial quantity of meat which was not fit for human consumption had been put on the market in Toronto; and that apparently such a thing has been going on quite regularly. Admittedly the quantity of meat involved is only a small portion of the total quantity of meat sold, but the fact that any meat that is unfit for human consumption should go on the market at all is, I think, a matter of real concern to the citizens of this province and particularly to the citizens of the large urban areas where I believe the meat is most likely to be disposed of.

The reaction of the government when this disclosure was first made was quite typically to pretend that the whole problem was not there. For example, in the Toronto Daily Star of January 6, 1962, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) of the province was quoted as follows, and I will read this short item—I will read it all into the record. The headline incidentally is: "Meat Case a Detail—Robarts" and the text of the story is:

When Premier John Robarts was told last night of New Democratic candidate Stanley Bullock's charges that poor enforcement of The Dead Animals Disposal Act was responsible for the bad meat case he replied:

—and this is attributed to him as a direct quote—

"An administrative detail. This has to do with the mechanics of the enforcement of the Act and I don't know anything about it."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would submit to you that there is an example of complacency enthroned. A serious situation is brought to the attention of the public and the hon. Prime Minister of the province says: this is a matter of administrative detail. Of course, the government could not very long maintain that sort of a position. The public outcry was so great that it was inevitable that something better, if possible, should come from the government.

So, the next contribution we have from the government was the fatuous suggestion that their Act, entitled The Dead Animals Disposal Act, had assisted in bringing this situation to light—I will deal with that in a little more detail in a moment, Mr. Chairman. The plain fact of the matter was that the situation was brought to light through co-operative action by the Canadian Association of Consumers, the Food and Drug Directorate and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I suspect it came to the provincial authorities as big a surprise as it did to everybody else.

I will indicate in a moment that I really do not think that their Act helped the situation very much. I will make one concession since the substitute Prime Minister seems to be getting a little concerned about my assertion. It may have assisted when we came to the actual point of prosecution but it was of no use at all, and in fact possibly even harmful, as far as the development of the overall situation was concerned.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? When did the Canadian Consumers Association first raise this point, at what date?

Mr. Bryden: What point? What point is the hon. Minister referring to?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This matter that the hon. member just referred to.

Mr. Bryden: Well, the whole question of the dangers arising from the lack of adequate inspection of meat has been a matter of public concern off and on for a good many years. Two or three years ago a deputation from the Toronto city council for example—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Is the hon. member going to answer the question the hon. Minister asked?

Mr. Bryden: Well, he asked when was this matter raised? I am talking about when the matter was raised; it has been raised off and on for years.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: May I make myself, I trust, more clearly understood by the hon. member? He referred to the Canadian Consumers Association raising the matter of inspection under The Dead Animals Disposal Act, and the matter of the tainted meat issue, and said that it was as much of a surprise to the provincial authorities as it was to anyone else. Now I ask the hon. member: what date was that?

Mr. Bryden: What date was what—when the provincial authorities became surprised? I have been under the impression that they are in almost a perpetual state of surprise.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, no. I want the answer to this one, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister can give his own answers whenever he likes.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: In other words, the hon. member does not know?

Mr. Bryden: I do not know what? I know, Mr. Chairman, and I have already stated that the matter came to light through the activities of three agencies which I have already mentioned; and I suggested that it may very well have been as big a surprise to the provincial authorities as it was to the public at large.

If it was not, then the hon. Minister can advise us that he was not surprised when it came out, that he knew about it in advance. But certainly the sort of reaction and statements we got from representatives of the government indicated a state of surprise even to the point of total confusion—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I insist on this question being answered. Now the hon. member has made an insinuation that we did not know anything about—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: On what basis—I do not have to concede the floor to—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I want the answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I think if an hon. member of this House refers to something that has been written by someone else, especially if it is referred to in a public periodical, he is required by the rules of the House when requested to give the authority and date and the source from where it comes. Has the hon. member got the date?

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I have heard some fat-headed points of order in my day, but I have referred to date, to one publication only and that was the Toronto Daily Star; I read the entire extract into the record. If I forgot to give the date, the date was January 6, 1962, an item in the Toronto Daily Star quoting the hon. Prime Minister of the province (Mr. Robarts). Whether he was correctly quoted or not I cannot say, but that is what the Toronto Daily Star said.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I asked a question and I would like an answer.

Mr. Bryden: I do not have to give an answer any more than the hon. Minister does; but as far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I answered any question I was asked.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: If the hon. member does not know, then why is he making that statement? What is he so sensitive about?

Mr. Bryden: It would take the wisdom of Solomon to decide what the hon. Minister's question was; but as far as I could understand it I have answered it already, and if I have not he can answer it himself. I suspect it was, in any case, a rhetorical question. He will have his opportunity to make his speech as soon as I am through, and if he would just leave the matter alone I will be through all the more quickly.

Now, after the first reactions of the government to the matter, we suddenly found the very energetic hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) injecting himself into the situation; and he made a substantial variety of statements which I will not attempt to quote in total, but they varied all the way from saying that the situation is terrible, there is no inspection at all, to saying that, of course, nothing has been proved yet, and then to saying that we must go ahead and establish some sort of provincial inspection system if the federal government will not establish an inspection system.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I think that in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman has asserted that the hon. Minister who is absent has made certain statements, that it would be well befitting the hon. gentleman if he would now make the statement that the hon. Minister is said to have made and give his source so that we, at least, have it on the record.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I will be quite happy to do that. I may say I do not take any responsibility for the absence of the hon. Minister of Health. I have no doubt that he is away on perfectly legitimate grounds, but I will not refrain from making comments about him merely because he is absent.

I had hoped I could abbreviate what I was going to say by not bothering to quote these things, but I will quote some of the hon. Minister's statements.

Mr. Lawrence: Quote them all.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am not sure that I have them all because he made a great many.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, let us have the four the hon. member referred to.

Mr. Bryden: Well, the one that I had in mind, in particular, was in the Toronto Daily Star of January 25, 1962.

Provincial Health Minister Dr. Matthew Dymond said last night that if the federal government's meat inspection system cannot cover all meat in Toronto then we will have to go ahead provincially. Dr. Dymond told the Progressive Conservatives at East York: "Our aim is to have all the meat in the province intended for human consumption inspected. If it cannot be done federally we will have to go ahead provincially." He said the recent bad meat cases—and let us remember nothing has been proven yet, these cases are still before the courts:

—the recent bad meat cases indicate nothing wrong with the inspection system as far as it goes. "These men were not supposed to be producing meat for human consumption," he said. "If they did they broke the law and all the inspection in the world would not have caught them. Policing would, and if what we are told is true, it did."

And then he went on to discuss other matters.

Then in the Toronto Daily Star of January 11—this is a little earlier, I had these out of order.

Ontario is hoping the federal government will assume responsibility for inspecting all meat sold in the province, Health Minister Matthew Dymond indicated today.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): What date was that?

Mr. Bryden: January 11, 1962, it is a couple of weeks earlier than the other one I read. I had these mixed up as far as the order was concerned, but the substance is the same.

At the conclusion of the Cabinet meeting at which the sale of meat unfit for human consumption was discussed, Dr. Dymond announced he has accepted federal Health Minister Waldo Monteith's invitation to meet him and other Health Ministers for a discussion. If Ottawa does not agree to accept responsibility for inspecting all meat sold in Canada, said Dr. Dymond, then we will come back and discuss what might be done at the provincial level. . . . He said, however, that no date for a meeting had been set.

This is very common, I have found, in dealing with Conservative Cabinet Ministers. They are always going to have a meeting to discuss an urgent problem but the date of the meeting hardly ever seems to get set.

Then on February 23, 1962, and the hon. Minister in charge of the Liquor Commission (Mr. Grossman) will be glad to know that this one was in the Telegram.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Much better source.

Mr. Bryden: I quote:

Health Minister Dymond, declaring meat inspection has never been under provincial authority, last night defended his conduct in regard to the alleged sale in the province of tainted meat for human consumption. He told a reorganization meeting of the Whitby Progressive Conservative Association that responsibility for meat inspection was exclusively with the federal government. "As Health Minister I have no power to inspect nor has the Health Department any such authority," he said. He added that the Health Department does not enforce The Public Health Act which was laid down for the guidance of municipal authorities. Local medical officers of health under the Act might close any slaughterhouse not measuring up to health standards.

So I have indicated that there seems to be a certain amount of inconsistency and confusion as far as the statements of the hon. Minister of Health were concerned, but I suspect that the inconsistency and confusion basically went back to the Cabinet itself. It was not really the responsibility of the hon. Minister. It would appear that the impulse of the hon. Minister was what I would consider to be the correct one. It was to ensure that all meat that is sold for human consumption in this province is inspected to make certain it is fit for human consumption. This is the issue that the government has persistently refused to face up to, certainly for as long as I can remember.

I think it was at least two years ago and possibly more that representatives of the city council of the city of Toronto came to the government expressing concern with regard to the problem of tainted meat and the possibility that it could get on to the market, and asking that the provincial government should take some responsibility for inspection of all animals that are slaughtered and all meat that is sold for human consumption. The answer the government came up with was The Dead Animals Disposal Act, which ostensibly provided for certain controls respecting the disposal of animals that died or were fallen or in other ways had to be disposed of and were not fit for human consumption.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): Might not have been.

Mr. Bryden: Might not have been—I do not quite get the significance of the distinction but I will accept the hon. Minister's suggestion.

The Act provides for a licensing system, but as far as I have been able to determine from any inquiries I have made there is no machinery to ensure that the terms under which the licences are granted are complied with. There is a provision in the Act for the appointment of inspectors, but certainly as of six weeks ago no inspectors had in fact been appointed under this Act. The formal requirements of the Act have been met in that the provincial veterinarian, I believe, and the assistant veterinarian have been designated as inspectors under the Act.

But surely, Mr. Chairman, that does not meet the situation at all. I am certain that those men already had at least full time responsibilities before they were given this very important additional responsibility. I repeat my contention that in fact, whatever the formality of the situation may be, there is no inspection under the Act at all. There are no steps taken on anything but the most sporadic basis to ensure that licence holders actually comply with the terms of their licences, and that is the reason we are in the mess we are in now.

The government has claimed that its Act has been useful in controlling the situation. Well, I conceded to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), who is acting as House Leader tonight, that it may have been helpful in the actual prosecutions; but as far as the control of the total problem is concerned, I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that this Act has served as a shield behind which unscrupulous operators can carry on their nefarious activities. When a person gets a licence, he is given an aura of respectability; he now becomes a licensed dealer holding a licence from the province of Ontario. To almost any person, that would make it appear that he is a reputable and reliable dealer. But no steps are taken to ensure that he is, in fact, carrying on business in accordance with the requirements of his licence. As a matter of fact, the people prosecuted with respect to this tainted meat case, in most instances, were licensed dealers under the Act.

This provision for licensing, as it has been administered, has done more harm than good, and it has been a factor in permitting the sort of situation to develop that has actually developed. My contention is, and I believe that the hon. Minister of Health was right in the first instance, that somebody should take responsibility for seeing that all meat that is put on the market for human consumption should be inspected. My own point of view is that the best procedure would be to enact whatever legislation is necessary to make the federal government inspection applicable throughout the province.

I am not at all familiar with the constitutional niceties of the situation but, as I understand it, the federal government can require inspection only in plants whose meat is going into interprovincial or international trade. It can provide its inspection services on a voluntary basis to other plants, but it cannot require them to submit to inspection.

If I am wrong in that, I will no doubt be corrected, but if it takes action by the federal government to bring all the plants under federal inspection, then I certainly think we should press for that action. Certainly the action should be taken. This is according to any authorities whose opinions I have read. This is a very serious matter of public health.

I must say that I cannot entirely accept the proposition that was put forward in this House a few days ago by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) who stated, and I will quote from his remarks as reported on pages 602 and 603 of Hansard for February 26, 1962:

I would like to draw to your attention that, in order to come up to the levels required by the federal meat inspection policy, it is necessary for very expensive and far-reaching improvements to be made to the many small slaughter-houses in operation in Brant county, as well as the other counties throughout the province. I believe that to come up to the standards of the federal inspection, is financially out of the question for these small abattoirs.

—and then a little further on he says—

I personally feel, and certainly I am speaking for the people concerned in our county, that the consumer must be protected, certainly, by a very careful meat-inspection process, I would say, under the auspices of the provincial government, with levels of inspection which can be attained by these smaller abattoirs.

Now, I have—

Mr. Nixon: The two ideas are not mutually exclusive, are they?

Mr. Bryden: No, they are not mutually exclusive, but—

Mr. Nixon: Then something in between this can be achieved by this government.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have all the sympathy in the world for a small operator, in this as in any other field, but I do think that when we are dealing with public health, the protection of the public must be paramount. As I understand it, federal inspection services are provided free of charge. However, the federal government does insist, in providing its services, that there be certain standards of plant operation. It is my understanding that the federal government imposes those requirements because it considers them to be essential in carrying out the inspection function and in protecting the public.

I am no authority on these matters, but I would submit, sir, that the federal government, perhaps, is an authority on it, or it has people who are authorities. If these standards are truly the standards required to ensure complete public safety, and complete public protection, then they ought to be complied with. If they are unnecessarily restrictive, then I think that the federal government should be asked to take another look at them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Well, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) knows a lot more about backing dead horses than I do, but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that considerations of the financial resources of a particular operator should not be allowed to induce us to ask for less stringent inspection than is required. As I say, I am not prepared to state whether it is absolutely essential to comply with the federal standards.

My impression, as a layman, would certainly be that it is; or otherwise the federal government would have not imposed those standards. I feel that we have an excellent inspection service at the federal level and we should make that available within the province of Ontario by passing such enabling legislation as may be necessary to permit federal inspectors, who are well qualified, to inspect plants that are not now under the federal jurisdiction.

It has been a matter of very great regret to me, Mr. Chairman, that we have had no policy statements from the government at all on this matter. Yet it came to the attention of the public in a dramatic way—and I would judge, from what the hon. Minister is saying, to the attention of the government even sooner—several weeks ago, in fact, about two months ago. It is surely a matter of urgent public concern, so why has there been no apparent action, no policy statements from the government, in fact practically no statements at all—except excuses on the one hand and rather confusing statements from the hon. Minister of Health?

This is a matter which I think the hon. Minister ought to explain more fully, and I would hope that he might be in a position at this time, during his estimates, to make a statement of government policy with regard to this very important question of the protection of the public against the sale of tainted meat, particularly in restaurants and institutions where it is not easy for the public to determine the nature of the meat they are getting.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Now, Mr. Chairman, our friend the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) has made some rather sweeping charges and sweeping statements in what he has said here. He led off with something that really causes me concern, saying that this is a very serious matter of public health. I ask him if he can give me one single example of illness that has been traced in any way, shape or form to the sale or use of this so-called tainted meat to which he has referred?

Mr. MacDonald: That is like the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) who said there were no accidents with gas, and the next week five people were killed.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, nobody has been killed in this.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that—

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister of Health has stated that it was a serious problem in the public health field. There is no question of a doubt about this.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am not arguing the point of what the hon. member said. I am saying that he is magnifying the problem. I would suggest, far beyond reason. I would like to point out a few things in answer to the charges that have been made. My hon. friend—and I did my best, Mr. Chairman, but could not get the answer from him as to when it was that the Canadian Consumers' Association and the RCMP were supposed to have reported this to the public as a great matter of public concern, and not once did the hon. member suggest when that date was.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, when then?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will tell him when. As far as we were concerned, we knew about it. And I want to go back to the beginning of this Act, because this Act came into force on July 1, 1960.

I would like to say it was first necessary to contact in person all individuals engaged or purported to be engaged in the businesses of collecting or processing dead and fallen animals. Inspections revealed in the majority of cases structural and sanitary improvements were required before issuance of licence could be recommended. It was felt that the first requisite was to have plants and collection vehicles meet the required standards.

As the activities of these men had not been regulated previously, it was decided to allow a period of time to make the necessary improvements and I think that is quite understandable. In many instances this meant the installation of sewage disposal systems, and in some instances the construction of a new plant. In all cases collecting vehicles had to be altered.

This was brought about by the fact that there had been complaints coming to the department about some of these collecting places for dead animals and fallen animals around the country from an unsanitary standpoint. It was felt that from that standpoint and from the problem of the spread of disease, these trucks that might go from one farm to another could spread disease, if proper precautions were not taken. And this was the basis of bringing in this Act.

The majority of the licences that were issued under this Act were issued between the period of late October, 1960, and the end of December. As a result of the problems encountered during some of the inspections, it was decided that an inspector should not be alone when performing his duties. In the course of our inspection—and this is written by the chief inspector, Dr. Harold Worton—observations were made and information received which led us to suspect that the activities of certain licensees and others were questionable. This information was supplied to the livestock commissioner with a request that the matter be referred to the Ontario Provincial Police.

The hon. member would not give us an answer when he referred to the fact that it was the consumers association and others in the province—and I am not sure whether he included himself and his people or not—that they knew about it before we did, and our inspection service was not indeed effective in carrying out the regulations of the Act. The first contact with the Ontario Provincial Police was made in February, 1961, a little more than a month after the inspection service was instituted after the issuance of the licences. That is how quickly we got into action.

Mr. Bryden: Well, is the hon. Minister suggesting then that all this unfit meat came on the market after this? And if he was so much on his toes, why did he not stop it coming on the market?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Let us conclude that in this country a man is not guilty until he is proven guilty and one has to produce the evidence.

Mr. Bryden: Under your kind of legislation, but inspection would stop it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Inspection did stop it. It would not matter if you had 100 per cent inspection going on, you would have to put an inspector on the job 24 hours a day with every one of the licensees if you are going to do the kind of thing the hon. member is suggesting. That is what it would mean.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask the hon. Minister a question? He refers to inspectors that were on the job. Now my information up until now was that no inspector had ever been appointed.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, yes. There were two inspectors appointed under the Act.

Mr. MacDonald: The chief veterinarian is the man formerly responsible, and his assistant. Is the hon. Minister saying that these were the men that were going around inspecting? The chief veterinarian of the province?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The chief veterinarian and his associate were designated the inspectors under the Act.

Mr. MacDonald: They were the people who did the inspecting?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, these were the people who did the inspecting.

Now then, as more information of this nature was accumulated, arrangements were made through the OPP to contact all district inspectors in southern Ontario for the purpose of enlisting their aid in enforcing the Act. This was done, and as the result of the co-operation of the OPP, three persons have been charged with violations under The Dead Animals Disposal Act.

In enforcing The Dead Animals Disposal Act, we have co-operated with and received co-operation from the food and drug division, Department of National Health and Welfare; the health units and health departments of the Ontario Water Resources Commission; and also provided the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with any available information they have requested. It is our understanding that the RCMP investigations were initiated in June of 1961. However, no charges were laid prior to January, 1962.

I want to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it is not easy to get the kind of evidence that will offer proof in a case of this kind. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that in all Acts which are brought in—it would not matter what the Act was—it is the duty of the police when they have been notified that there is some discrepancy under the Act, to deal with it. And this is what was done.

Evidence revealed in court cases to date shows that charges were laid on the basis of information obtained by RCMP officers working as undercover men posing as meat buyers.

In one case the court evidence disclosed that an informer accompanied the undercover man in making his initial contact.

Now, I would think, Mr. Chairman, that if you are going to suggest we have inspectors to the degree that the hon. member suggests we should have had, then I think we are going to have to provide an inspector or a police constable, if you will, for every motorist in the province of Ontario. The same kind of thing applies. It cannot be done any other way.

One of the traffic directors of a police department of a municipality in the province of Ontario the other day made the comment that he realized there were accidents and there were violations of The Traffic Act within his municipality. But he said "I wish the public would realize that the municipality cannot possibly put a police officer in the back seat of every car on the road today." And this is the only way, to my mind, one can determine that people are going to observe the letter of the law.

This is our interpretation of how the Act should be administered and we feel that it was administered in accordance with the intent with which it was drawn up.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman—and I am saying this in careful measured terms—the hon. Minister of Agriculture has wittingly or otherwise misled this House, and I challenge this government to have an investigation and bring the authorities from the federal department down here and we will find out what happened.

What the hon. Minister has said is, in effect, that the passing of that Act, and action by the provincial police, resulted in charges. He said along the way—and I would have to see the detail of his statement before I could recall it—that the RCMP got into the picture somewhere in June of 1961. Mr. Chairman, this is utter and complete nonsense, and if the hon. Minister does not know it he has been asleep at the switch and the people who have been advising him have been asleep at the switch too. Because the RCMP through the food and drug division have been investigating this situation for years. And when the people from the Toronto city council came to the government two years ago they came because they had been informed by individuals in the trade that tainted meat was being sold. This government in its wisdom, now proven to be lack of wisdom, refused to negotiate with the federal government to get extended inspection of meat. What they did was to pass The Dead Animals Disposal Act.

And the interesting thing is this, Mr. Chairman: They passed it in the session of 1960. It was proclaimed on April 14, 1960. The hon. Minister now tells us that it came into effect on July 1, 1960, and the inspectors got on the job about January 1, 1961, because he said the first charge—or the first details—they found were in February. In other words, this government took a full year to get into operation and to get out and do any inspecting under their own Act.

However, the crux of the issue, Mr. Chairman, is this—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, on a point of personal privilege, that is not the case and that is not what I said.

Mr. MacDonald: What did the hon. Minister say then?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I said simply this, that the Act did come into effect on July 1, 1960, but that a period from then until the end of the year was required to allow the people concerned—those who would be making application for licence—to get their premises and their equipment in shape to come up to the standards laid down under The Dead Animals Disposal Act. Now that is what I said right here in this letter—

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —and when the licences were issued, then inspection took place of the licensees quarters and that took place following the issuance of the licence.

Mr. MacDonald: They could not go out and inspect the man before he was licenced?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We referred our first charge to the OPP on February 8, 1961 or thereabouts.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether we will ever get the details of this because the details can be gotten only if we have an investigation. But I will ask the hon. Minister to do this: will he table in the House the reports of the inspectors in his department?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is a question I will take under advisement.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay, let him take it under advisement and we will come back to it.

An hon. member: What does he mean, take it under advisement?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Does the hon. member think he can dictate the terms?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the fact of the matter still is this, and let me repeat it. That responsible officials of the Toronto city council came here and told the hon. Minister, or his predecessor, and the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) that they had information that tainted meat was being sold for human consumption—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Where?

Mr. MacDonald: Here, in the city of Toronto.

Mr. Bryden: Why did they not stop it?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, will you please ask that noise up there to be quiet?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: On a point of privilege.

Mr. MacDonald: All right!

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: All the city of Toronto has to do is pass a by-law that only inspected meat can be sold and they can correct the situation in the city of Toronto.

Mr. MacDonald: All right. This is the interesting thing, Mr. Chairman, we have an almost endless series of interjections and excuses to try to get the government off the hook, but the fact of the matter is that the government is on the hook—and this is the point—they are squealing because they are on the hook.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, no!

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister had this information given to him. Did he say to the people of the city of Toronto, all you have to do is go back and pass that Act? He did not.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, again on a point of privilege. No member of the Toronto city council or no member of this Legislature can say that any tainted meat has been sold in the city of Toronto, nobody knows that. I do not know; the hon. member does not know—

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute now, there is a quibble of the first order. Just let me go back and review this, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The courts will decide.

Mr. MacDonald: No, I am not trying the case. I am dealing with the responsibility of this government and this is the serious point.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: We fulfilled our responsibility.

Mr. MacDonald: Responsible officials of the Toronto city council came, and on the basis of information which they had reason to believe was reliable from people in the trade, they informed the hon. Minister of it. They suggested the answer to the question is what the hon. Minister of Health has subsequently now said is the answer—full inspection—although he has waffled on it. I do not know whether the Cabinet has rapped his fingers or what.

An hon. member: No! No!

Mr. MacDonald: We passed the bill in 1960, it was proclaimed on April 14, it came into effect on July 1, and now the hon. Minister tells us it took six months—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: To license and inspect!

Mr. MacDonald:—six months to license and get these things inspected. How many are there? How many people are licensed under it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the number of rendering plants licensed in 1961 was six; in 1962 is six to date. The receiving plants in 1961 were 47, and up to date in 1962 were 39. The collectors in 1961 were licensed to the extent of 79, and in 1962 there were 61. I would suggest that 35 per cent of the receiving plant operators licensed under The Dead Animals Disposal Act are bona-fide mink ranchers.

Now the point that the hon. member is trying to make here, I would say, is that tainted meat has come into the city of Toronto. I know of no proof in any court that that has ever been done.

Mr. Bryden: It is an insult to the intelligence of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: I have asked the question and the hon. Minister has answered the question, let him not take over on the speech.

Now, if I have added this up correctly, there were 88 institutions of various kinds over a two-year period and only 12 or so of them were in the first year. In other words, Mr. Chairman, without going into the detail, the fact of the matter is that the number of institutions for inspection—if this government had gotten on its horse and moved in face of this issue—could have been inspected in four weeks.

An hon. member: Oh, nonsense!

Mr. MacDonald: No “nonsense” about it at all!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he feel it was fair, would he feel it was just, to bring in an Act and immediately the Act was declared and came into effect to say to the people who were expected to be licensed—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Give them four weeks! That is the way they would do it, smashing and crashing right and left.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is not the way we do business.

Mr. MacDonald: What the hon. Minister did, out of the fullness of his heart, his pity and compassion for these people, he permitted a situation to continue in which tainted meat was being sold.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Nonsense!

Mr. MacDonald: However, Mr. Chairman, this is the real crux of the issue! The real crux of the issue is that the people who caught these were not this government through its inspection branch, were not the OPP. The people who caught these, because this government had failed, was the RCMP acting under The Food and Drug Act, Ottawa.

Now, the hon. Minister cannot deny that. That is the cold, hard fact. In face of that fact, the hon. Minister can talk from now until doomsday about what he did; because what he did was nothing in terms of catching the culprits who were in the game. The people who caught them were the people from Ottawa.

Mr. Bryden: He gave them licences.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly. He gave them licences behind which they were able to carry on their business with the aura of respectability.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. MacDonald: Sure!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There are two I would like him to answer.

First of all, I would like him to define “tainted meat” as compared with improperly killed or improperly marked meat. Then I would like to ask him furthermore if, in fact, as he suggests that if the RCMP knew about all of this that he refers to going on, and frankly I do not know anything about it, then why did the RCMP—the wonderful police organization that they are—not lay charges? If this in fact was going on as he suggests.

He says that this is a fact and everybody knew it was a fact and that the RCMP knew about it. Then I ask, Mr. Chairman, why did not the RCMP lay charges before they got the information from our department?

Mr. MacDonald: Okay, now, Mr. Chairman.

Point one, I am not going to get into a discussion as to what is “tainted meat.” This is completely irrelevant to the point we are discussing. We can get experts to do that and the hon. Minister does not need to come in and ask a layman member of this House what is tainted meat. This is a red herring!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is what the hon. member is talking about now.

Mr. MacDonald: As to the RCMP! The RCMP laid the charges and, Mr. Chairman, the RCMP did not lay the charges on the basis of information they got from the hon. Minister’s inspectors and he should not mislead this House that they did!

The RCMP laid their charges on the basis of information that they dug up. They dug it up themselves without any assistance from the hon. Minister, without any relationship at all to The Disposal of Dead Animals Act. The hon. Minister is misleading the House if he contends this because this is what this government has been peddling for eight weeks in trying to get itself off the hook.

This government did nothing to solve this situation. They were asleep for a year in terms of getting the machinery implemented and they did not catch the people—the RCMP caught them under The Food and Drug Act.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is the most unfair statement the hon. member has made tonight. The hon. Minister told the House why, what was done and when it was done, and the hon. member has repeated it the third time.

Mr. MacDonald: That is fine; and I am going to repeat it once again for the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is dishonest!

Mr. MacDonald: It is not dishonest, it is the fact.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is not the fact!

Mr. MacDonald: I defy this government to have an investigation or deny—

An hon. member: Another investigation!

Mr. MacDonald: —or to deny that the charges were laid by the RCMP and that they got the evidence and it was not with the hon. Minister's assistance at all. The hon. Minister was sitting idly on the sidelines not fulfilling his responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The hon. member has not answered the question I asked.

Mr. MacDonald: What is that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I asked him: why, if the RCMP knew all of these things long ago—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —now, just a moment until I ask the question.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have had to ask it three times. If the RCMP knew that this was going on, then why did they not lay the charge? My hon. friend has never answered.

Mr. MacDonald: I will answer it right now. If this is the question presumably the hon. Minister asked. The RCMP laid the charges as soon as they had the evidence to get the convictions.

But that is not the point I am arguing. The point I am arguing is: it is now time for this government to cease misleading the people of this province that these convictions were done by any action of this government, because they were not.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is the hon. member's opinion.

Mr. MacDonald: That is not my opinion, that is the fact.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I happen to be quite conversant with this. I think it was in January of 1961 that the livestock commissioner who is responsible for the administration of this Act came into my office and laid before me certain information in connection with suspicions that the chief inspector and assistant had and wanted to know what I thought he should do, if he should get in touch with the OPP and the RCMP.

I said by all means go all out and solicit the support of the Ontario Provincial Police and the RCMP to get to the bottom of this so-called illicit dealing in meat. So that, Mr. Chairman, is the situation. I knew about it and at that point the livestock commissioner brought it to the attention of the Ontario Provincial Police.

Mr. MacDonald: I reiterate it and I submit to the hon. Minister—let him get out the evidence and bring the necessary people to prove that I am wrong—that he is once again misleading the House. The chief livestock inspector or commissioner may have come in and told him something, and he may have talked with him, he may have said to him, go out and do your best, but the charges were laid on the basis of information by the RCMP as a result of the efforts of the food and drug division in Ottawa and not because of any effort on the part of this government.

However, Mr. Chairman, if I am wrong let us have the proof, and no more assertions back and forward across the House, because there is something that is even more important, and that is that we get this situation corrected. I find it extremely disturbing the kind of proposition that has been introduced by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon). As my colleague from Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) has said, if the standards that are now laid down and enforced by the federal inspectors are too high—and therefore they are unnecessarily rigid in imposing standards as far as the operators of small abattoirs are concerned—I find it puzzling, because it would seem to me that no government would set unnecessarily high standards to have an unnecessary burden upon any abattoir, big or small.

However, if they are, my question to the hon. Minister is this. Since it now appears obvious, in spite of the observations of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), that first we must have inspection done provincially if the federal government will not do it, it now appears that the government is backtracking on this.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister of Health backtracked 100 per cent.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, the hon. Minister of Health, in his latest statement, in effect suggests that this is not a provincial responsibility.

Many times in the papers it has been indicated that the provincial authorities are going to sit down with the federal authorities and talk over this and work out some sort of an arrangement. My question to the hon.

Minister is this. In his talking over with the federal authorities, what has been the view with regard to this question as to whether or not the standards are unnecessarily high, and whether it is possible to have another grade of standards that would apply to small abattoirs; and if so, then it would seem to me that all this government has to do is to pass an Act stating that all institutions that are slaughtering meat for human consumption must submit to federal inspection, and the federal inspection becomes operative and, if my information is correct, such inspection is free.

It seems to me to be a very simple thing, and the question my colleague asks is the one that puzzles me. Why all this floundering around for two months on an issue that the hon. Minister of Health conceded to be important, and certainly captured the headlines? What are we floundering for in the first week in March when we had information on this two months ago?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: What is the answer the hon. member wants?

Mr. MacDonald: What is the result of the hon. Minister's discussions with Ottawa, and what is his reply to this question about the standards being unnecessarily high for the smaller abattoirs?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Chairman, in the first place I would like, for the information of the hon. member, to suggest that federal inspection of meat applies for inter-provincial or export trade.

Some hon. members: We know that.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It is good to know that the hon. members know that.

Mr. Bryden: I think it was pretty obvious for the last hour that we knew that.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. members know the answers to the questions they ask we will leave them with their answers.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister is not going to sit down on some petty excuse.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. Minister did his best to answer the question. If the hon. members have not the courtesy to hear him out, let them sit down.

Mr. MacDonald: My question to the hon. Minister is: what discussions have they had with the federal government and what has been the conclusion or the line of thinking in those discussions with regard to the necessary levels and standards for smaller abattoirs? Why is it not possible for this government to pass a law stating that all these abattoirs must come under federal inspection and inspection would become operative immediately?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member did not ask that question before.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Minister gets the Hansard out he will find it. That is the question.

Just a minute now, Mr. Chairman. Is the hon. Minister not going to answer that question?

An hon. member: They had a man up there on the floor. Let him speak; he wants to say something.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, this is not the question. I have asked the hon. Minister a question; is he deliberately refusing to answer it? Mr. Chairman, is the hon. Minister deliberately refusing to answer this question?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do not like to stand up when there is one man standing, but when there are two men standing I think it is a discourtesy to ask a man to stand up and start to talk.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald)—now if the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) is through talking maybe we can get a chance to say something.

My hon. friend from York South (Mr. MacDonald) has suggested that there are negotiations going on with Ottawa regarding meat inspection in the province of Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) said so.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister of Health said so I will let the hon. Minister of Health speak for himself, but he is not here. I have not met with a single hon. Minister of any department in the federal government, to discuss meat inspection with them at all.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask the hon. Minister this question? Is the provincial government then considering the extension of inspections for all meat consumed in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, this is a matter that can be taken under consideration. There has been no announcement made about it. We can take this matter under consideration and I thank the hon. member for bringing it to our attention.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, no, Mr. Chairman. This happened two months ago and we have had endless statements about this. There is going to be provincial inspection or federal inspection. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to persist any further but it is obvious that this government is, in a calculated and deliberate fashion, refusing to accept its responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is not the case at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, what are they doing then?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I said to the hon. member that his case would be taken under consideration. What more can I say?

Mr. MacDonald: It is not my case—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, it is a problem that he is bringing to—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr Chairman, how fatuous that the hon Minister should say this is my case. There have been editorial writers, and the whole of the public of the province of Ontario, waiting for the government to make up its mind for two months, and for the hon. Minister to say he is going to take my case—

Hon. Mr Stewart: My apologies to the hon. member if I described it as his case. May I say the problem that he has brought to the attention of the House will be taken under consideration.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the hon. member that I am advised that the matter is now under consideration between the federal and provincial people through the hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, this is very, very interesting. This is an issue which is at least partially the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) and he does not know anything about it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did not say that I did not know it.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I can see that it is all but impossible to get into what appears to be a private war between the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) and the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). However, may I say, sir, by way of parenthesis, if you will permit me, that this evangelical fervour demonstrated by my hon. friend from York South is typical of the way they approach everything that smacks of a little bit of scandal, and that is why they remain so ineffective on the hustings. He goes after something like a rat after a piece of cheese, a starving rat after a piece of cheese, and he holds his hand out as if he is shaking the hon. Minister of Agriculture in his hands. And I wish we could approach things in this House in a reasoned and moderate fashion.

An hon. member: The hon. member is a laughing stock.

Another hon. member: Self-righteous—

Mr. Sopha: Ah nay, ah nay, sir, I am not like the hon. member, I am a man of sin, I am not the self-righteous puritan that he is, who has never done anything wrong.

An hon. member: The hon. member does not need to make a parade of himself.

Mr. Sopha: Oh no, oh no, that is precisely why people listen to what we say. We got 45 per cent of the votes and you got 17 per cent. All right, I am not fighting the by-elections again.

But so far as the remarks about when this matter became a matter of public attention, and when it came to the notice of the government: When these two last speakers were trading their dialogues of diatribe, they were both wrong. And I just want to put on record, as my hon. leader has invited me to do, remarks made as long ago as March 23, 1955, by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Gordon) who has departed for his home at this hour of the night. I am going to read these and let them be inscribed in the record for all to see and all to heed as to when these matters that suddenly assume the character of emergency and excite such passions in the breast of my hon. friend to the left here.

Now I will do better and everybody will do better if the hon. member just maintains a little silence.

Mr. Bryden: Well, the hon. member is not doing very well.

Mr. Sopha: It was not I who was the laughing stock in Kenora, it was the hon. member.

This is very brief but I want it to be inscribed in the current record of Hansard. I beg leave to use my voice for that of the hon. member for Brantford whom I say has left for his home.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, I do not think this comes under any vote at all but I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he received a statement or brief from the Canadian Association of Consumers in connection with the inspection of meat. I have a brief here which speaks of meat wrapped in cellophane wrappers which has never been inspected and it was stated that of the 70 per cent of meat sold to the provincial slaughter houses one-third is unfit for human consumption.

Mr. Oliver: They should certainly do something about that.

Mr. Gordon: When someone buys boneless beef and has it ground he does not know where on earth it came from. There was a family in Brantford which bought some beef which tasted rather peculiar and they took it to their doctor. He sent it to the veterinarian, who said it apparently was from an animal which had been sick and had been given some medicine and the medicine was flavouring it.

Hon. Dana Porter: It was not the dog, was it?

Mr. Gordon: No, the dog is still in good health.

Hon. Mr. Porter: Is it still driving around?

Mr. Gordon: I discussed this matter with our medical health officer and he would like to know the authority for this statement that one-third of the meat sold is unfit for consumption. He is not convinced it is practicable nor realistic to apply that statement to all the meat slaughtered in the 12 abattoirs in Brant county. May I ask the hon. Minister what can be done?

You see, he was of a querying mind that night also.

What can be done? If 30 per cent of the meat which was being consumed by the people of Ontario is not being inspected, I think that is a situation which should not exist. Every pound of meat we export from Canada has to be inspected.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member who made that statement?

Mr. Gordon: It appears in a brief by the Canadian Association of Consumers.

Hon. Mr. Frost: —

I can hardly credit his query. He says: Who are they?

Mr. Oliver: Everybody belongs to it.

Hon. Mr. Porter: Does the hon. leader of the Opposition belong to it?

Mr. Oliver: We all do.

Hon. Mr. Porter: Well, I do not know, you cannot belong unless you apply for membership.

Mr. Gordon: I have an extra copy of the brief here if the hon. Minister wants it.

Hon. Mr. Porter: I do not think the hon. member for Brantford knows who they are.

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, their names are all here. It is a very large organization, the Canadian Association of Consumers.

Hon. Mr. Porter: Is the hon. member for Brantford a member?

Mr. Gordon: No, I am not a member.

Hon. Mr. Porter: May I ask if any hon. member in this House is a member?

Mr. Gordon: They police us in a sense.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Would the hon. member for Brantford let me see that brief?

Mr. Gordon: It is quite a brief.

Hon. Mr. Porter: It must be.

Mr. Gordon: Has the hon. Attorney-General never heard of the Canadian Association of Consumers?

Mr. Thomas (Ontario): It is a very strong organization, Mr. Chairman, composed of housewives banded together. He sort of made it sound like an earlier day fang and claw society.

Hon. Mr. Porter: I have heard of the organization but I have never heard of this brief.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very, very important subject.

That is seven years ago, seven years ago two weeks hence. But it happens that in Ontario we have as federal inspectors veterinary surgeons who are trained in meat inspection in all of our larger abattoirs and they are doing an excellent job. Where the trouble lies is in the tiny abattoirs in the country. If we can change human nature and make these folks, shall we say, destroy meat that is not good, and not sell it, then we will have no trouble. However, Mr. Chairman—

An hon. member: I guess they gave up.

Mr. Sopha: Well, the hon. Minister of Health's predecessor and former Provincial Secretary was a man known to have remarkable perspicacity. However, Mr. Chairman, I think 30 per cent is very, very high. I know that there is meat selling on the market which is not good, but we have those two types of inspections, the federal man who takes care of most of it, and then at the municipal level the local boards of health to look after the smaller abattoirs, and that is where most of the contaminated meat comes from.

To continue the quote from Hansard:

Mr. Gordon: Speaking with respect to the board of health of the city of Brantford, it is absolutely impossible for one veterinarian to inspect all the meat which is slaughtered in 10 abattoirs.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Apparently that is not where the trouble is, Mr. Chairman. This says, "It has been stated that 70 per cent of meat sold to our provincial slaughterhouses is inspected and 30 per cent is sold by farmers to the butcher, and one-third of the latter is unfit for consumption."

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I think that is probably true.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is the meat sold by the farmers to the butcher. They allege one-third of that is bad.

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, but 30 per cent is not inspected and a third of that 30 per cent is not fit for human consumption.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: No, what it says is that 70 per cent is inspected by the federal authorities, 30 per cent is killed in small abattoirs and of that one-third or 10 per cent is unfit.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Not abattoirs, it might be killed by a farmer and sold to a butcher.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I think that figure is very high. I do not think we have that much going on to the market. Not nearly that much.

Now here is where it ends.

Mr. John Root (Wellington North): Mr. Chairman, I have raised and trucked livestock for over 20 years and I cannot conceive there is any foundation for saying that one-third of the meat sold by farmers is not inspected. What happens is when an animal takes sick they ask us to take it to an abattoir but it is sold to the abattoir subject to inspection. I have never heard of farmers taking a sick animal and selling it to a local butcher, at least it does not happen in Wellington-Dufferin and I do not think elsewhere either.

It is quite a remarkable coincidence, is it not, Mr. Chairman, that it should have been the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Gordon) who raised that, because when this matter became a matter of public urgency and public concern, was it not in Brantford that some of the earliest charges were laid? And almost with a sense of prescience, crystal-ball-sense, if you like, seven years ago, two weeks hence, the hon. member for Brantford in this House made acquainted this government—which had not long grown quite so tired as it has by this time seven years earlier—made them acquainted with the problem.

I should like to address remarks, in what I described earlier as a moderate, reasoned analytic fashion, to two aspects of this problem. One is this business of inspection. I have always believed that it is the ultimate of folly, the ultimate of almost stupidity, that we have so much divided jurisdiction in the field of inspection.

I have never been able to understand, in this great land of ours, populated by intelligent, progressive, energetic people, why we have to have two sets of inspectors—one federal and the other provincial, to perform the same tasks? And, to our eternal shame, that apparently the basis for the inspection—well, not apparently, but it is a fact—the basis is who picked up the apple grown in the Niagara Peninsula, and looked at it, is whether that inoffensive apple was going to be consumed by a citizen of Ontario, resident in Toronto, Sarnia, Owen Sound, Duntroon, Sudbury, or whether the apple was marked for export.

If it was marked for export, then a federal inspector had to come in and have a look at the apple to see if it had a worm in it. And so it goes with hogs, and so it goes with cattle, and every other agricultural product—that the criterion has been where the product is eventually going. Now, thank the Lord, the Supreme Court of Canada, in the last case that got into print apparently has started to do something to reverse the trend of that nonsense.

Now, in relation to wheat, I do not pretend to know the details of the case but they are getting away from the idea that the federal government only has responsibility if the product is ticketed or marked for export or for interprovincial trade. I am enough of a centralist, I have said it in this House before, and I will say it again if I have the good fortune to be elected back here, that I think there are some spheres of responsibility that the provincial government should get out of—and one of them is the marketing and inspection of agricultural products—and let the whole of the responsibility for that go to the federal government. In a nation which lives on trade—it lives on trade internationally, it lives on trade within its borders—surely the sensible way to approach marketing and inspection would be to give the federal government the total responsibility for it?

It is in a uniquely favourable position to perform the tasks such as no single province can perform them. No single province has the legislative power and legislative responsibility, within the confines of Section 92 of the Act, to do it. When we speak of inspecting livestock, we are speaking of more than fallen animals, animals that have taken sick, animals that apparently have been injected with drugs and medicines which have tainted the meat; we are speaking of that same problem that we faced—was it a decade ago—six, seven years ago—when all the fuss was raised in this country about the foot-and-mouth disease, and everybody got into a great fervour about it?

Cattle are being shipped all the time into Ontario. I walk on my way to the courthouse in Sudbury, and because the CPR runs through Sudbury, I have to stop and wait for 70 box-cars to go through and almost every one of the 70 is loaded with western cattle, coming from Brandon, coming from Winnipeg.

My hon. friend from Lambton East (Mr. Janes) imports them himself, and we have talked about them coming from Regina and points west into Ontario.

Therefore I say that in the realm of livestock, as well as all other agricultural products, it is time that this government, which is always pleading penury and lack of money, got out of some of these spheres of responsibility and let them be performed by the central government, which has the machinery, which has the legislative power, which has the ability to do them as they should be done—and that is on a nation-wide scale—in order to give complete protection.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member for Brant disagrees with the hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: I do not care who disagrees with me. I learned these ideas at the feet of C. A. Wright and Bora Lascin, that is where those ideas were inculcated in me. But if this country is going to become great, then we have to begin to think in terms of centralism, give some of these powers to the federal government and get out of those fields ourselves, and let us perform well and efficiently those things that are peculiarly of a local and provincial nature, those things that are peculiar to the interests of the citizens of this province as residents of this province. Those are my beliefs.

The second thing I wanted to say is in respect to the inspection of meat. I can safely say that, so far as ability to inspect meat is concerned, in the district of Sudbury there is not a central place for slaughtering. We have no abattoir; we have had two or three futile attempts to build one, but apparently it is a business that is attended with grave economic risk; it is not too profitable a thing; you have to go into all sorts of ancillary side-lines, in order to make it profitable, and therefore it does not attract people into it.

I would not swear—I know we have not got one in the district of Sudbury—I would not swear to it but I strongly suspect that there is not one in the district of Timiskaming; I strongly suspect that there is not one in the district of Nipissing. I am almost certain that there is not one in the district of Algoma, and I will bet that in Cochrane North there is not one either. In fact, in the whole of northeastern Ontario, I daresay there is not a single abattoir.

The result is that we import most of our meat from southern Ontario. In fact, the fraction of consumers' products that we produce in northeastern Ontario for our own consumption is about 15 per cent. That includes meat and vegetables and all the other articles of produce that find themselves on the consumers' table.

Well, maybe there is some economic advantage. My friend, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) who thinks it is all right for people from Sarnia to come into Sudbury and invest money, would not agree with me; but there might be some advantage in promoting some agricultural secondary industry in northeastern Ontario with a view to producing more of our consumers' goods there, instead of importing them and paying the high cost of freight and express trucking that we have to pay to bring them in. This makes it a more costly proposition to live in northeastern Ontario than to live in the heart of Metropolitan Toronto. But that is a matter for another speech.

I merely say that, so far as this business of inspection is concerned, we can never feel safe in buying local meat; and I had better be careful about what I say here. We cannot have the sureness that the local meat meets the required standard and avoids the risk of fallen or tainted animals reaching the consumer until we have abattoirs in that part of Ontario.

Now, my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Gordon) in his speech, I notice, seven years ago in the county of Brant, is talking about 12 abattoirs. Well, I say that it is an incredible thing. They have 12 abattoirs in the county of Brant, but in the whole of northeastern Ontario, we have not got one abattoir of which I know.

My hon. friend from Fort William (Mr. Chapple), that is far to the west of us, tells us that they have one, so that would put one in the whole of Northern Ontario. Then let me sum up and finish in this way: that for a problem that was brought to the government's attention—not in the words of my babbling friend, with his evangelical fervour, to the left here, and of the Left, in July or April of 1961—but, now the record is clear, was brought to the attention of the government on March 23, 1955, in all these seven years, nothing has been done. I say, within the area of the responsibility of the provincial government, and within The Department of Agriculture, let us, instead of all these travelling expenses to which I referred earlier, have a little subsidy, a little encouragement for the establishment of some abattoirs in northeastern Ontario. I invite their assistance to establish one in my own constituency, in that area which is the most populated part of northeastern Ontario. Then farmers, of their own volition, would take their animals to the abattoir to be slaughtered, or if such an institution were established, the government could bring in legislation to compel them to take their animals to the abattoir to be slaughtered under the supervision of an appropriate inspector. And that, Mr. Chairman, ends the few remarks that I wanted to address to this problem.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I think it well that we get away from the hilarious approach and return to the wellbeing and health of the meat consumers in this province and deal seriously with the question of inspection of meat.

I am going to be brief, Mr. Chairman, but I thought I should add my support to the need for stringent inspection in slaughter houses in the different ridings across the province. I know of only two in my riding.

One of them I visited on a complaint and it has been a terrible mess for some three years. The complaint was looked into by the medical officer of health, of course, and his jurisdiction only covered those things that would be considered a detriment to the health of the people in the surrounding area, or what might be considered a nuisance to the people in the surrounding area. But certainly, as far as my riding is concerned, I would be in favour of the most stringent restrictions and inspection to ensure the people that are buying the meat from this small slaughter house the best possible protection.

This particular place was not very much bigger than a double car garage and they retailed the meat out in front. There was a lean-to on the side of the building where they kept the cattle overnight or maybe longer than overnight, ready for slaughtering them. What caused the discomfort to the neighbourhood was the stench, the blood running down ditches for a complete concession on all sides, the guts of the animals being stored behind the building in barrels for days, and rats as big as cats running around the neighbourhood.

This comes under the jurisdiction of the medical officer of health and he does not inspect the meat. But after seeing the conditions that existed there I cannot take any other view than that the meat was not fit for human consumption. So I certainly endorse inspection, either by federal or by provincial inspectors, I do not care which. But somebody should take some action to clear up some of these problems. If there were any of this type of slaughter house in Brant County, I think the hon. member for Brant should take the same approach. I would not consider the cost in the type of building would have anything to do with producing good meat and certainly it should not be a criterion for giving the public the kind of food they are entitled to have.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. Knowing the hon. Minister is interested in all aspects of agriculture, could he state if this Associated Livestock Growers of Ontario was granted a charter to operate here in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Might I ask the hon. member to refer that question to the hon. Provincial Secretary. It is under his department.

Mr. Spence: Well, was this operation or this association's operations inspected by the hon. Minister's department?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, as far as I know, Mr. Chairman, our inspectors had nothing to do with it, nor any of our departmental people, to my knowledge.

Mr. Spence: I understand, Mr. Chairman, there are a lot of dead animals out around this operation and I was wondering if the hon. Minister had checked into this. I understand by the paper there is supposed to be 6,000 hogs on three farms, so we would like to know if there was any contact with his department over this operation.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am not sure what the hon. member wanted me to answer this time.

Mr. Spence: Well, sir, I would like to enlighten the hon. Minister. On Friday, March 2, 1962: "Armchair farmers lose over $1 million. Pig scheme becomes hogwash. Trouble in Piggyland. Dream world of ham winds up in a jam." I understand there were 700 people who invested $1,800,000 out there.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What is the hon. member's question?

Mr. Spence: I wondered if there was a charter granted for this livestock growers association in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, our department does not grant charters of any type to such an organization. This comes under The Provincial Secretary's Department as I suggested to the hon. member in the first place.

Mr. Spence: Then the hon. Minister's department did not check this large operation out here at Sunderland outside Toronto, despite the dead animals?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: To my knowledge there is no legal reason why we should inspect it that I know of. For what reason would we inspect it?

Mr. Spence: I understood there were a lot of dead animals there. Ten thousand hogs are supposed to be on these places, these three farms. Did the department take any interest in the claims of this enterprise?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Pardon?

Mr. Spence: Did the department take any interest in the claims of this enterprise?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would say that this is entirely a matter which is beyond the concern of The Department of Agriculture, as far as the investment of people are concerned in any corporation. This is something that could be looked into by the Securities Commission; it is perhaps the right place to direct his inquiry, or through the corporations branch.

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to get on my feet for the last 20 minutes. Surely there are some rights on this side of the House.

I wanted to say to the House that I have a great deal of respect for what the hon. member for Brant stated in this House, that we are making a lot of noise about something that does not amount to too much. I do not suppose the dead meat amounted to one tenth of one per cent of the meat consumed in Ontario, but we hear a lot of noise about it. If we take the actions suggested by our dictator friends over here we will put hundreds of people out of business. We have butchers all over Ontario who are good honest people, who are doing a good job, who have never sold bad meat to anybody, and they are all going to be out of business.

Mr. MacDonald: Now I can see why the Cabinet is back-tracking.

Mr. Janes: Hold it for a minute. I have got the floor right now. I have been working with some groups in my area that have poultry-killing plants. There are three in a group together. One has been inspected for years, the other two have not; and as soon as they found out the situation they started to try to get inspection and they are still working on it.

They are not too large plants. It is going to cost them from $25,000 to $50,000 to comply with the regulations. They have to go through our health department, the water resources department, the department at Ottawa; and they all take time, and these men are working hard. They were in here on Friday afternoon and I was working with them. They are coming back next week. They are trying to get into an inspected plant and they can hardly do it.

Our smaller butchers cannot get into an inspected plant over night, and maybe not at all. Do not forget that Old Man Consumer is going to pay for all these costs and all these problems. Do not forget, also, that probably not more than a tenth of one per cent of the meat consumed in Ontario has been dead meat. And do not forget that in only a very odd case would that meat do anybody any harm. My first surprise when this came up was when I was talking to a medical health officer in one of the cities near where I live and he said: "This is all in people's heads. We do not approve of this dead meat being sold, but if it is well cooked it will not hurt anybody." So let us face it, Mr. Chairman. Do not rush into something we cannot complete, and do not put all these people out of business overnight, and do not put extra costs on the consumers of this province.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are two brief problems.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, I am going back to the former question, by my hon. colleague—

Mr. MacDonald: I wanted to follow this, if I might.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I am interested still in this pig scheme. And I am interested frankly because of the many people who lost all their life savings because of this. I know personally that it has caused a great deal of hardship for many of these people. And I was wondering if the hon. Minister of Agriculture could tell us if someone had informed his department of the kind of operation that was taking place on this pig farm—that there were thousands of pigs dying and being buried on the farms? If someone had informed his department of that, would his department have taken action?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Are you saying that this did happen?

Mr. Thompson: I am saying, sir, that I would like first of all the hon. Minister's answer.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, but are you saying this did happen?

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, sir, I directed a question to the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the question as my hon. friend has said is purely hypothetical. You have said "if" such a thing happened, "would you do such-and-such?" Now, I think until you get down to cases, we will be unable to answer the question. We have heard no such complaints as the rumours that he is suggesting and, as far as I know, they are only rumours. I never heard these things until he brought them to our attention tonight and I still do not know if it is a fact. Is it just a rumour he is repeating?

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, sir. It is not a rumour. The papers have been full of this. There are people who have lost a great deal, they have lost their savings on it—

Mr. Simonett: What has that got to do with this?

Mr. Thompson: It has a great deal to do with this. There is concern on the part of a number of people that they have lost their money, and they are wondering why something such as this Association of Livestock Growers of Ontario can be advertised across this province. I might even say that this particular outfit was advertised in Germany—was causing concern to people in—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: On a point of order, sir, this is a matter which properly belongs under some other department—not under The Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, I would suggest that the growing of pigs has something to do with agriculture.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is not his point at all. His point is that they have lost their investment; that is—

Mr. Thompson: No. My point is that someone from this operation did come to the department and inform the department of the kind of development that was taking place.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, I asked, are you asking on a point of order or out of order?

Mr. Thompson: I am talking, sir. What I am interested in knowing is if there is fraudulent operation—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, there is a point of order before the committee. I would ask you, if you would rule, whether in your opinion this matter is in order or not?

Mr. Chairman: It is out of order.

Mr. Thompson: I have another question for the hon. Minister. If the hon. Minister's department had seen an advertisement suggesting that people could buy 100 sows and within one year that they could make $8,540—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Chairman, this is exactly the same point.

Mr. Thompson: This is the problem that I am asking, sir, and what I am concerned about. There are people who are in the city—

Mr. Chairman: It is out of order. Order.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Let us get on with the estimates. He can raise this question under the Attorney-General, the Provincial-Secretary, any number of places.

Mr. Thompson: I feel that if there are large numbers—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I raise another question?

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Thompson: You have not heard my question. I do not know why the hon. Minister of Energy Resources is objecting when he has not heard my question yet.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The other two were out of order.

Mr. Thompson: Sir, I would hope that you would not anticipate my question. I think I should direct my remarks through the chairman.

An hon. member: If all those pigs had a vote.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Thompson: No, but a lot of people who invested certainly would like to vote. I would like to suggest, sir, in connection with an operation where you have had the deaths of thousands of pigs [laughter] it is a very serious question. Surely The Department of Agriculture does some inspection of carcasses that are buried wholesale in fields just about 60 miles from Toronto. What is your responsibility in connection with loads of dead carcasses—

Mr. Cowling: We have been talking about this for hours.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Thompson: I want to see what you did; if you have a responsibility in connection with a large number of dead pigs outside Toronto, what did you do about it?

(Laughter.)

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Thompson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am really quite serious about this. I know a number of people who have invested in this operation—

Mr. Chairman: If the hon. member would sit down, maybe he will get an answer.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, thank you.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member's question, I would say that this is completely a matter which is beyond the jurisdiction of The Department of Agriculture. In the first place the hon. member refers to hypothetical suppositions, and he has referred to nothing factual that has come to our department. If a request comes to our department for a specific purpose, we give an answer, or at least we try to give an answer. But when a supposition comes to our department we will wait until the actual question comes, and then we will try to do something about it, if it falls within our jurisdiction.

Mr. Thompson: What I am asking is if you had had an enquiry at your department. I have asked if you have had an enquiry and you say you do not know. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, if my hon. friend would be satisfied with this. If an enquiry came, would it satisfy him if we said, if an enquiry came, we would have a look at it.

Mr. Thompson: You would have had a look at it if an enquiry had come?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We would have a look at the enquiry, not at the suppositions.

Mr. Thompson: Then may I say, sir, that I hope to show you that an enquiry did come and you did not have a look at it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are two brief points that I want to make. I want to come back to the point that was made by the hon. member for Lambton East (Mr. Janes) and I want to suggest that this is a completely intolerable kind of approach to this problem.

Nobody is suggesting that these people should unreasonably be put out of business. What we are suggesting is that the health of the people of the province of Ontario shall be protected. If the standards are too high, I submit it is a responsibility of this government to negotiate with the federal government for standards that are tolerable. The protection of the health of the people, not the solvency of these small companies, should be the first consideration. And, if, after having decided on the standard that would be permissible, there are some of them who still cannot come up to that standard, I submit that they should be out of business, and I say that without any equivocation.

Mr. Nixon: So would we all.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that is all I have asked for. The second point I wanted to raise is that I was very interested in the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) relating the account of the hon. member for Brantford away back in 1955, drawing attention and presumably supporting representations of the Canadian Consumers Association to the effect that 30 per cent of the meat being sold was not inspected. It is interesting that seven years later in the city of Brantford there are hospitals in which the meat supply is uninspected.

Vote 110 agreed to.

On vote 111:

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the House leader that it is now 11.20 p.m. and we are reaching 111, the marketing development branch and several other very important branches—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Have we finished vote 110?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, if we have finished 110 then, Mr. Chairman, I would move that the committee of supply rise and report it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof that it do stand adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, it is with regret that I inform the hon. members of the House that a very courageous and beautiful young lady died tonight—the wife of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis). I understand her funeral will be on Thursday afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:25 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 6, 1962

The House met at 2:00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests pupils from the following schools: in the east gallery R. L. Hyslop Public School, Stoney Creek; and in the west gallery Terra View Heights Public School, Scarborough; Fonthill Public School and the A. K. Wigg Public School, Fonthill; and under the Speaker's gallery a group from Sudbury University.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Clerk had received from the chief election officer and laid upon the table the following certificate of a by-election held since the adjournment of the House:

Electoral district of Eglinton: Leonard McKenzie Reilly.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

THIS IS TO CERTIFY that, in view of a writ of election dated the twenty-first day of November, 1961, issued by the Honourable Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario, and addressed to Charles William Robinson, Esquire, returning officer for the electoral district of Eglinton, for the election of a member to represent the said electoral district of Eglinton in the legislative assembly of this province, in the room of William James Dunlop, Esquire, who, since his election as representative of the said electoral district of Eglinton, hath departed this life, Leonard McKenzie Reilly, Esquire, has been returned as duly elected as appears by the return of the said writ of election, dated the twenty-eighth day of February, 1962, which is now lodged of record in my office.

(Signed)

RODERICK LEWIS,
Chief Election Officer

Toronto, March 6, 1962.

Leonard McKenzie Reilly, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Eglinton, having taken the oaths and subscribed the roll, took his seat.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say a word of welcome to the new hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly) and wish for him, as I have wished for the other hon. new members who have come into the House as a result of the by-elections held in January, a rewarding and fulfilling life here; and a life of service to constituents of that great riding of Eglinton.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark), from the standing committee on private bills, presented the committee's fourth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. Pr10, An Act respecting Metropolitan United Church of Toronto.

Bill No. Pr26, An Act respecting the Town of Richmond Hill.

Bill No. Pr27, An Act respecting the Township of Wicksteed.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill No. Pr14, An Act respecting the City of Toronto.

Your committee would recommend that the fees less the penalties and the actual cost of printing be remitted on Bill No. Pr10, An Act respecting Metropolitan United Church of Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

PENSION FUNDS PORTABILITY

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth) moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to Provide for the Extension, Improvement and Solvency of Pension Funds and the Portability of Pension Benefits.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE LOCAL IMPROVEMENT ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Local Improvement Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE JAILS ACT

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Reform Institutions) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Jails Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Would the hon. Minister tell us what the bill is about, please?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, this amendment provides for the payment to a municipality, that is a county or city, maintaining a jail of a grant of 10 per cent of the annual cost of operating the jail.

THE MUNICIPAL UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Municipal Unconditional Grants Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): This provides for the continuance this year of the unconditional grants in respect of hospital treatment of indigent patients.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the bill presented by the hon. Minister was an Act to amend The Assessment Act—The Local Improvement Act. I wonder if he would give a brief explanation of that one, please.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Most certainly, Mr. Speaker. There are two amendments, both of which are procedural. One is to provide that objections to a work to be carried on are to be given to the clerk of the municipality, and secondly to provide that in the case of an appeal under The Local Improvement Act to the county judge the notice is to be given to the clerk in lieu of the assessment commissioner.

THE HIGHWAYS IMPROVEMENT ACT

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Highways Improvement Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, this amendment to The Highways Improvement Act is to make it possible to contribute up to 90 per cent of the cost of bridges and culverts in towns and villages with a population of over 2,500 where the bridge or culvert is on a street that is designated as a connecting link between part of the King's highway. The present subsidy is 80 per cent. We are raising it to 90 per cent.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I rise, and I am sure that I am correct this time, to extend felicitations to the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) on having attained today his 58th birthday. He has now become, sir, as a result of the lamentable death of the former member for Brant, the dean of this Legislature in service. His nearest contender is, I think, some 10 or 11 years less in service and he has the respect of all of us.

However, he might permit me just to say that in his 36 years, I believe, of service he had some 15 of those with the UFO and some 21 or thereabouts with the Liberal Party. I am sure he will not mind me saying that when he first crossed, or moved sideways, into the Liberal Party he did not find the company just as happy as he has since. I notice that the record shows that after a year and a half on the treasury benches he was independent enough to resign.

However, in the last 20 years he has taken that seat with a solidity that has made him quite a mark. He has been leader of the Opposition, the official leader of the Opposition in this House on several occasions and he holds a record, sir, if I may say so, of sitting in this House on his birthday. March 6 and March 17 are dates on which we frequently find ourselves sitting here. He holds a record of having sat in that seat in Opposition for a longer period than any living hon. member of any Legislature in Canada.

I am sure, sir, that hon. members on this side will join with me in extending him many more years, as long as he remains in the same position.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) has taken this occasion to bring felicitations to our good friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver).

Mr. Speaker, I would point out that what the hon. Attorney-General said is substantially true. There are one or two corrections, of course, that he will understand that I would immediately make. I think that he joined the Liberal Party enthusiastically rather than in any side motion. I assure hon. members that only recently he told me that he is happier in his political career now than he has ever been and looks forward to changing his position, but not his party, in the not too distant future.

Mr. Speaker; the second observation that I would make is this, that the hon. member has completed 35 years in the House. I believe he begins now his 36th year and there are only two men in the history of Ontario who have accomplished that feat, the late Tom Kennedy and the late Harry Nixon.

I would suppose, Mr. Speaker, that I would not be out of order if I would remind the hon. members opposite that the hospitality fund has been used on occasions for less important functions than to honour this extraordinary attainment, that is the occasion when a member completes 35 years of continuous service to this province in this Legislature. This is an accomplishment of no mean feat, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly rise with pleasure to join in the tribute that has been paid to the hon. member for Grey South by the hon. Attorney-General.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, after all the assertions and corrections that have been made, there is nothing more left for me to say than to congratulate the hon. gentleman on his birthday and on his tenure of office here in this Legislature.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, one is reluctant to take particular notice of such days as this because as the years roll along they seem to come with increasing rapidity and as one gets older one attempts in every way that he can to check the onward rush of time. In our way of life we have accomplished many things, but we have not been able to stem the moving tide of time.

So I guess all one can do as he gathers in maturity is to try to live his life the best he can whatever years remain to him. I want to just say now I am happy that my hon. leader and the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) and the leader of the NDP have said these nice things on this occasion. I just would say thanks to all hon. members and I hope to be with them and expect to be with them for many years yet.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship) begs leave to present to the House the following:

Report of the Minister of Education for the calendar year 1961.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I bring attention to the fact that the report of the motor vehicle noise research committee has been printed and has been distributed to the hon. members of the Legislature today with a view to providing an opportunity of study of that report in order that it may be discussed and debated at an appropriate time.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I should like to make a brief announcement regarding the jails in Ontario.

There are 37 municipal jails, 35 of these are county jails and two city jails. The government proposes certain important changes in the administration of these municipal jails.

Firstly, the government plans to transfer to the municipality operating a county or city jail the authority to appoint the jail staff and to set the wages. This will be done by way of an amendment to The Municipal Act, Section 358, that will be duly introduced by my colleague, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Cass). This will solve those problems that have flowed from the existing division of authority as between the municipality and The Department of Reform Institutions, including the status of the jail guards, who do have a right of appeal, but yet have lacked full recognition as either civil servants or municipal employees.

The appointment of the jail governor will require the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council and the province will continue to make the inspections of the jails as provided under The Penal and Reform Institutions Inspection Act, thus assuring the maintenance of standards that are required in the operation of the jails.

The government plans also to make jail assistance grants as set forth in the bill that I introduced this afternoon under which the municipalities maintaining jails will receive grants of 10 per cent of the annual cost of operating the jails.

Furthermore, sir, The Department of Reform Institutions is embarking on or is extending its progressive programme of transferring as many as possible of the short-term prisoners from the jails to its open institutions. This will contribute to the reform work we are able to do and marks a real advance in the treatment of the offenders. It should aid too in preventing any crowding in the older jails, facilitating the proper segregation of prisoners, and allowing better maintenance of the jail.

Though the programme could afford a substantial saving to the municipalities operating jails, it is designed primarily to get as many as possible of these short-term prisoners serving 30- to 90-day terms out of the close debilitating confinement of maximum security jail cells and into our open institutions in the country—from that place where they have nothing to do but sit in idleness all day, day after day, and into the clear atmosphere of our open institutions where they will be doing healthful work and following good routine programmes of living.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): I wonder if the hon. Minister would permit a question? He stated that the jail guards do have a right of appeal and I wondered what that right is; if it is a right as a right, or a right as of grace?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before you call the orders of the day, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) when the matter that was referred to the committee on privileges and elections prior to the Christmas recess will in fact be directed to that committee? Tomorrow being a committee day, it occurred to me this would be an appropriate time to ask him, sir, when the necessary motion will be made to refer that matter to the committee on privileges and elections?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would hope to refer it to that committee some time next week—it will not be this week.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in rising to lead off in this debate, may I first, as always, congratulate the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) on his presentation of his budget. Just as in everyday life, it is a pleasure to do business with a gentleman, so it is a pleasure to do business with our hon. Provincial Treasurer, always a gentleman, genial beyond the call of duty, and truly a political adversary who will be remembered in the future as he is appreciated in the present for his kindness and graciousness to all members of this House whatever our political affiliations may be.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to congratulate the winners of the recent by-elections. I do so most sincerely, and wish all of them a complete satisfaction in their political lives, with the certain knowledge that, frustrating though it may be at times, there is much happiness in the work of looking after the interests of one's constituents and an appreciation by many for the work that one does. Particularly is it a happy occasion for us in the Opposition to welcome three Liberal members and to realize that there could very easily have been five with a little more work on our part; this work we are prepared to do in the future, at whatever time the next provincial election may be called. With 45 per cent of the popular vote in the by-elections and with the certainty of even more than this in a general election, we say to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts): the sooner an election is called the better.

In my work in this House in the past seven years, I am proud to say that I have made many friends. As was said the other evening at the dinner of Mr. Speaker, this is an exclusive club, the most exclusive in Ontario, made up of many fine people. The good qualities of the hon. members are not confined to any one party, and particularly is this appreciated as one becomes politically older. There is, therefore, a little sadness in my heart for my many Conservative friends as I look at the beginning of the end of their political regime. They know it, and we know it. If they will not admit it, it is nevertheless in their hearts.

There is today a different feeling in the air. We Liberals smell the scent of victory, while Conservative gentlemen opposite are squirming to defend the indefensible: their own pitiful position and the equally embarrassing position of their Conservative colleagues in Ottawa. It is the strength of democracy—indeed, it is the very basis of democracy—that you cannot fool all of the people all of the time.

Today, the voters of Ontario are taking a hard look at what has been going on in this province, and they do not like what they see. There is greater attention, a closer scrutiny, being paid to provincial affairs, and the Conservative Party cannot bear the examination. I do not envy my Conservative friends; rather, I pity them as they try now to explain away their sins of commission and omission. Their words, Mr. Speaker, have never been better expressed than in the book of common prayer:

We have left undone those things which we ought to have done; and we have done those things which we ought not to have done.

The Conservative downfall, Mr. Speaker, while paved with their lack of ideas and the certain knowledge of the people of Ontario that they have been here too long, will be hastened by the lack of unity in their own party. While this has been apparent to all of us since the opening of the Legislature, never was it more obvious than last week when, two days before the Budget presentation, the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay)—The Minister of Everything—relegated the hon. Provincial Treasurer to the position of Minister of National Revenue in Ottawa and appointed himself Minister of Finance. The hon. Minister's economic statement, which in years past has always formed the first part of the Budget itself, was truly a new and remarkable innovation. The hon. Minister has apparently recalled the words of Cicero: "When you are aspiring to the highest place, it is honourable to reach the second or even the third rank."

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): He is in that place now.

Mr. Whicher: But I ask the hon. Minister with great respect, is he perhaps not over-taxing himself? Let us look at his duties: Minister of Economics and Development, head of what we are told will be a gigantic new housing development in the province, head of a new Economic Council for Ontario, head of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission, the Ontario Research Foundation, Minister of Energy Resources, head of the gigantic Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, member of the all-powerful Treasury Board, and first lieutenant and chief adviser to the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): And acting Premier, too.

Mr. Whicher: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister should also consider the words of Longfellow: "Most people would succeed in small things if they were not troubled with great ambitions."

Allow me to assure the House, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side do not protest against this one-man wonder. While I have the greatest sympathy for the bitter concern which many of my Conservative friends feel regarding this small clique which runs the government, I know they will not expect me to lift a hand to stop it. When the history of The Rise and Fall of the Tory Empire is written, there will certainly be a chapter on how the Macaulay clique brought on the final fall.

Let there be no doubt about it, Mr. Speaker. We, on this side of the House, accept the Macaulay challenge, the Macaulay clique, the Macaulay budget, and it is my task and intention this afternoon to show just how frail and fatuous is the Macaulay salvation of the Conservative Party. This afternoon I propose to put the cards on the table; we shall examine them one by one and we shall see who is more fit to play them.

Before doing so, just a word concerning my hon. friends to the left. I must give them some credit; they are bears for punishment. Last autumn as we adjourned for the Christmas recess, we were told by them that they had reasonable chances in Eglinton and Brant, probable victories in Renfrew and Kenora, and a certain win in Beaches.

Mr. Bryden: Who said that?

Mr. Whicher: The results are self-evident. The only reason that they came as high as third in every riding was because there were only three parties running. And now they have lost their former national leader. Whatever the criticisms that one may make of Hazen Argue, there are two things that stand out. Firstly, he has proven over a period of years that he has considerable ability. Secondly, he certainly spoke the truth when he left the New Democratic Party. If there has ever been a party under the dominance of one segment of the population, it is the New Democratic Party. It has almost no support other than the labour movement, and really not a serious percentage of that. I must say, however, that they have almost 100 per cent support of all labour leaders. These leaders, drunk with power in their own movement, now are attempting to crucify it completely by seizing government power. Mr. Speaker, let us remember this, to the people on our left only a few months ago Hazen Argue was a good, honest and truthful man—

Mr. Bryden: I did not say anything about him.

Mr. Whicher: Yes, you did. —a born leader who had done much for the C.C.F. Party in the House of Commons. Today, according to them, he is changed as day from night. On top of this, our friends claim substantial support in other segments of the population other than labour and have tried vigorously to obtain farm support. Let me illustrate to you the support that they get from the farmers of Ontario.

In a story in the Owen Sound Sun Times of January 31, 1962, in reporting a meeting in my area, it was described as follows:

The New Democratic Party provincial farm policy meeting in Markdale Tuesday was called off as only four persons of 150 that were to attend showed up.

Those who arrived were Donald MacDonald, the provincial party leader, Mrs. Jo Carter, provincial party secretary, George Richer, an organizer from London, and Robert Good of Brantford, who was to be the chairman of the meeting.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) will no doubt tell us that the reason that there were so few who attended was because of the unfavourable weather conditions. May I, however, respectfully point out to him that he got there from Toronto, and others of his group arrived from London and Brantford, but that there was not one single farmer from the Bruce and Grey county areas who attended the meeting. Need I say more?

Mr. MacDonald: May I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: There is no privilege there.

Mr. MacDonald: I think, Mr. Speaker, I should correct factual errors in the statement the hon. gentleman has just read.

(a) the meeting was not held in Markdale, it was held in Walkerton; secondly, the roads were all blocked and he is wrong—the group he named was there first—but another car load got through behind the snowplows at noon. So with two factual errors you have an indication of the veracity of his statements.

Mr. Whicher: May, I say this, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for York South, that knowing the farmers of Grey and Bruce very well, there would not have been anybody there if the roads had been open.

The farmers of the province of Ontario will not swallow the ideas of any political party who are led by union labour leaders who continually demand more and more, which in turn has made the price of farm machinery an almost unbearable burden for the average farmer to carry. I prophesy that not only will they be unsuccessful in obtaining the support of our Ontario farmers, but also that they will now lose the sizeable support that they have had in the province of Saskatchewan in the past.

Mr. Speaker, let us start laying the cards on the table. I have no intention of playing with the cards dealt by the government in the budget statement of the hon. Provincial Treasurer or in the economic statement of the hon. Minister of Economics. Those cards, Mr. Speaker, came from a marked deck; they were marked cards. The government's budget was the result of phoney bookkeeping, just as this government's budgets for several years past have been the result of phoney bookkeeping.

That is a serious charge, Mr. Speaker, and I intend to prove it. This government has been cooking the books, and the time has come to inspect the kitchen.

On page eight of his budget statement, the hon. Provincial Treasurer reported the financial position for the fiscal year 1961-1962 in these terms:

Our interim surplus on ordinary account is estimated at $432,000 after providing $28,000,000 for capital works financed out of ordinary revenue and $35,800,000 for sinking fund.

And on page 11 he dealt with the 1962-1963 fiscal year in these terms:

A surplus on ordinary account of $374,000 is forecast for 1962-1963 after providing $39,000,000 for sinking fund and $66,000,000 for financing capital construction out of ordinary revenue.

Now I shall discuss the government's queer concepts of ordinary and capital expenditure in a moment. Let me at this point simply note what nice, neat, convenient figures these nominal surpluses are! How easy they make it for hon. members opposite to claim: "See! The government does not overtax, neither does it overspend! What good housekeepers we are". Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been hearing this refrain for quite a while; the unerring accuracy which enables the hon. Provincial Treasurer to forecast a surplus within 1/25 of one per cent of revenues has been a feature of his budgets for some years.

So let us apply a little common horse sense to these alleged surpluses, Mr. Speaker. What businessman would conclude that he had made a profit of $100 if at the end of the year he had an increase of $100 in his bank balance and if, at the same time, he also had an increase of $300 in his unpaid bills? Yet that is precisely what this government is trying to sell to this House and this province.

I invite hon. members to examine the public accounts for the year ending March 31, 1961. That was a year in which the hon. Provincial Treasurer claimed a surplus of $391,000. But what was the real cash position? The public accounts show the government began the 1960-1961 fiscal year with $19,580,000 in liabilities; at the end of the year it owed $22,240,000. Thus, liabilities increased by $2,660,000 at the end of the year. The government began the year with $17,420,000 owing to it; it ended the year with $19,090,000 in receivables, or an increase of $1,670,000.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the net increase in liabilities was $990,000, producing a deficit of almost $600,000 for the year after the alleged surplus of $391,000 is deducted. And yet a balanced budget was claimed.

Nor was the fiscal year 1960-1961 an unusual year by any means. I have examined the public accounts for the past five years, and in four out of five of those years, the government had a deficit in its real cash position instead of a surplus as was claimed. I shall table all the figures and simply give a summary here. In the fiscal year 1956-1957, the hon. Provincial Treasurer claimed a surplus of $1,805,000; actually there was a deficit of $60,000. In 1957-1958, the claimed surplus was $866,000; in reality, there was a deficit of $3,246,000. In 1958-1959, the surplus claimed was $304,000, but actually there was a deficit of $2,120,000. The 1959-1960 fiscal year was another year of error, but this time the government erred on the side of the angels; it claimed a surplus of $864,000 when its real cash position showed a surplus of $3,241,000.

I have already given the figures for 1960-1961 to the House. Over this five-year period, Mr. Speaker, the government claimed surpluses totalling $4,230,000 when in reality it had a net deficit of $2,789,000.

This is the picture, let me repeat, simply on the basis of what the government is pleased to call ordinary revenues and expenditures. When we include the so-called capital account, the government's claim to surpluses becomes downright laughable. I shall give the figures in a moment, but first let me repeat what I have said many times in this House, that the government's concept of what is ordinary and what is capital revenue and expenditure is arbitrary, deliberately misleading and irresponsible. It serves only one purpose, to enable the government to manipulate the accounts and put enough into current account to leave a nominal surplus.

So let us see what happens to the government's famous surpluses when capital disbursements are included. In the fiscal year 1956-1957, expenditures for highways and buildings, less receipts from disposal of assets and less provision for sinking fund, came to $71,560,000, and when this is added to the deficit on ordinary account, the grand deficit is $71,620,000. In 1957-1958, the total deficit was $64,277,000; in 1958-1959, $86,930,000; in 1959-1960, $104,026,000 and in 1960-1961, $97,076,000. For the five-year period, Mr. Speaker, the government ran up deficits totalling $423,929,000 while claiming surpluses totalling $4,230,000.

No doubt my hon. friends opposite will say that statistics can be made to say whatever one wants them to say. I challenge them to apply a very simple test. If what I have said is true, then it follows that the provincial debt is increasing. If the government has really had the surpluses which have been claimed, then the provincial debt must be declining. What is the situation?

I quote from page nine of the hon. Provincial Treasurer's budget: "The province's net capital debt as on March 31, 1962 is estimated at $1,200,000,000—an increase of $148,100,000 over that of a year ago." The increase in 1960-1961 was $99,000,000; in 1959-1960, it was $93,023,000; in 1958-1959, it was $81,926,000; in 1957-1958, $60,328,000 and in 1956-1957, $52,972,000. In the last six fiscal years, Mr. Speaker, the government's own figures show the net capital debt as increased by over $535,000,000.

Heaven forbid, however, that this government should ever have a deficit. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not even admit that the word exists. This government does not have deficits; it has "shortfalls." I quote from page eight of the budget of the hon. Provincial Treasurer: "After providing $211,500,000 for new capital construction, our shortfall of revenue in this current fiscal year 1961-1962 is estimated at $145,900,000." And again on page 11: "However, since our expanded capital programme for 1962-1963 calls for outlays of $230,000,000, the shortfall of revenue on overall account is forecast at $123,600,000."

Mr. Speaker, what kind of double-talk is this? What better proof is required that this decrepit administration is so pitifully bankrupt that it must re-write the dictionary in a desperate effort to keep up the appearance of surpluses?

Mr. Speaker, we all know that appearances are deceiving, and fortunately in a democracy we have ways and means of getting at the truth. One way is through the office of the provincial auditor, who is a servant of this Legislature. There is a section, sir, in the auditor's report for 1960-1961 which is most pertinent to the manipulation of the accounts by this government so as to hide the province's true debt position. On page 17 of his report, the auditor makes reference to the government's contribution to the teachers' superannuation fund and the public service superannuation fund. I quote from the report:

The actuarial examination of the teachers' superannuation fund has now been completed as at December 31, 1958. The actuary, Professor N. E. Sheppard, M.A., has presented his report dated January 12, 1961, to the chairman of the Teachers' Superannuation Commission of Ontario. The following paragraph is based on the above-mentioned report.

—this is the provincial auditor speaking.

As at December 31, 1958 the actuarial deficit of the fund was calculated to amount to $203,886,000. The preceding valuation, made four years previously, as at December 31, 1954 showed an actuarial deficit of $178,314,900. Thus the deficiency at the end of the four-year period had increased by some $25.5 million, even after taking into account that the 4 per cent provincial contribution rate was raised to 6 per cent from January 1, 1956. The general increase in salaries during the four years is the basic cause of the larger deficit. The $204 million deficit, in respect of the contributors, existing in 1958 will continue to grow, quite apart from any inflation, at 4.5 per cent interest per annum, less the special grant of $1 million made by the province each year. The growth of this deficit at interest will thus be of the order of $8 million per year.

—this is the provincial auditor talking, Mr. Speaker.

This is a serious situation both with respect to the amount of the deficit and the fact that it is apparently increasing each year. It is recommended that immediate steps be taken to place the fund on a sound actuarial basis.

Mr. Speaker, what an astounding revelation! Here is the auditor of the province of Ontario stating that the government owes the teachers' superannuation fund at least $235 million to put it on a sound actuarial basis. Let us consider this most serious statement. This is not the Opposition making a charge but the provincial auditor placing the facts before the Legislature. Thank heaven for an unbiased individual to examine the books and accounting procedures! And what does he say?

The net debt at the moment is $1.2 billion, but it now develops that the government owes an additional $235 million to this superannuation fund—in short, at least a 20 per cent concealment of the debt picture and a cooking of the books as far as the taxpayers are concerned.

Let us continue with the auditor's report. He deals with the public service superannuation fund, and on page 17 he states:

No actuarial valuation of the public service superannuation fund has been made since March 31, 1952 and as a result the amount of the existing actuarial deficit is not known and will not be known until the next actuarial valuation is carried out. At the date of the last valuation this fund showed a deficiency of $46,220,000.

I suggest, on the basis of a deficit of $46 million in 1952, that the present actuarial deficit of the public service superannuation fund must be at least $100 million. I ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer: where has he mentioned this situation in the budget? Does he believe this concealment to be fair either to the civil servants or to the taxpayers at large?

Small wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the provincial auditor's certification of the public accounts for 1960-1961 is most curiously worded. In paragraph 3 on page 7, he makes it clear that he is not prepared to state without qualification that the financial statements of the government have been properly drawn up so as to present fairly the financial position and the results of operations for the year. "Subject to the qualifications in this report," he declares.

Nowhere does he say explicitly what these qualifications are, but a careful reading of the subsequent paragraphs, I suggest, leaves little doubt that the provincial auditor does not approve and does not agree with the arbitrary and misleading distinction which this government has made between the current and capital accounts—a distinction, I repeat, designed solely to fool the taxpayers and conceal the government's true deficit position.

Mr. Speaker, this silly little game of "hiding the deficit" is about to be played out. For years, we on this side of the House have been exposing it; we have asked the government to reorganize the accounts, to admit the facts and to establish a programme for the orderly retirement of the provincial debt.

As this latest budget shows, my friends opposite have not hearkened to our plea. Yet they have not entirely closed their ears, and it is a relief to note that the Provincial Treasurer has at long last recognized the need to appropriate sufficient annual revenue to retire the debt over a 30-year term. Dare we claim some small credit for this, Mr. Speaker, or is it more likely that the government has been warned by the bond houses to cut out the nonsense and get down to business?

Now, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend dealt at some length in his budget presentation with the Liberal party's proposal that no sales tax should apply to consumer purchases of $25 or less. From the political point of view, I can understand why the hon. gentleman seems so concerned about this proposal, and I can understand why he did not see fit to give the Liberal party due credit for advancing it.

But what I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, is why the hon. gentleman should declare, and I quote from his speech:

The effect of such a change, while extremely difficult to estimate, would reduce revenue substantially.

Why should it be so difficult to estimate? The hon. Attorney-General had no difficulty last September when he was on what he thought was the victory trail to Varsity Arena, Toronto. This would-be leader of the Conservative party was in Kitchener, and according to a report in that leader of the Kelso Roberts fan club, The Toronto Telegram, he told 121 delegates to the Progressive Conservative nominating convention:

The $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 which would actually be collected under Mr. Wintermeyer's scheme would scarcely be worth collecting considering the cost involved.

Nor did a more successful aspirant for the Conservative leadership have any difficulty in estimating the effect of a $25.00 exemption in the sales tax when he addressed this House, December 14, 1961. According to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts):

If the leader of the Opposition's proposal became effective, the tax returns would be reduced on a full year's operations from $150,000,000 estimated by the hon. Provincial Treasurer to about $52,000,000.

And the hon. Prime Minister went on to claim that this would be the equivalent of increasing the sales tax to nine percent on taxable items if the $25.00 exemption were put into effect.

But the hon. Provincial Treasurer seems to have had great difficulty in making an estimate. Perhaps it is difficult to distinguish between Roberts and Robarts, Mr. Speaker, so the hon. gentleman decided to strike out on his own. Blithely ignoring his leader's claim that a $25.00 exemption is the equivalent of a nine per cent sales tax, he declared:

If we make allowance for the avoidance of the tax which would result from a $25.00 exemption, the rate on taxable items would not be three per cent but closer to eight per cent.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if it is the intention of hon. gentlemen opposite to confuse us, let me assure them that they have not succeeded. All they have done is reveal their own confusion and demonstrate to the House and the public that they do not know what they are talking about. For our part, I can only say we have known as much for a long time and I can only hope, in the interest of orderly debate, that they will soon go into a huddle and come up—all together—with a figure which we can take seriously.

There is another aspect of the sales tax, Mr. Speaker, which I suppose I should deal with at this time. The hon. Prime Minister, in his statement of December 14, made much of what he called piecemeal buying if a $25.00 exemption were applied. He cited the case of the $200.00 television set which could be broken up into cabinet, speaker chassis and other component parts so that each part would come to less than $25.00 and thus would be exempt from sales tax. Well, sir, I do not know where the hon. Prime Minister buys his television sets; perhaps he will be good enough to inform hon. members where they can buy the cabinet, or the speaker, or the chassis, or the picture tube of a $200.00 television set for less than $25.00. Frankly, I wasn't very impressed with that example, and I gather the hon. Provincial Treasurer wasn't either, because he preferred the case of a set of golf clubs, asserting that purchasers would avoid the tax by buying one or two clubs at a time instead of a complete set.

Now surely the answer to this alleged problem is obvious. It is simply a matter of definition in the regulations. Certainly, a purchaser determined to avoid the tax would be able to do so in some cases at considerable inconvenience to himself. But a host of exemptions, all of which the government claims are administratively difficult, would be replaced by one exemption, with considerable saving in the costs of collection and enforcement. With a $25.00 exemption, for example, virtually all sales from all the grocery, general, variety, drug, hardware and shoe stores in the province would be exempt from sales tax.

To the hon. Prime Minister I ask this question: "Of what are you afraid?" To the hon. Provincial Treasurer I ask the same question. We are not totally babes in arms in the field of finance on this side of the House and our statements regarding the sales tax are not dreams but realities. Well over $100 million can be placed in the hon. Treasurer's coffers with an exemption of $25.00 and, because of the fact that this will exempt approximately 75 per cent of the retailers in the province from the necessity of collecting the tax, it will greatly decrease the administrative costs. Our offer, that we hope has been accepted by the hon. Prime Minister still stands. Let us sit down with his experts, explain our position in detail, show them how to do this job and, at the same time, greatly help the small businessmen of the province and the taxpayer in general.

Mr. Speaker, the government has been drifting aimlessly for many years. It is a policy of drift, without direction and without a goal. It is also a policy which pays little or no attention to simple common-sense economies. The government collects the money it needs, on a catch-as-catch-can basis, and spends it the same way. The house-keeping of government administration and spending is not being done and the result is a wasteful squandering of resources. Let me cite some specific instances.

The civil service—the backbone of government administration—has been most shabbily treated, and the taxpayer has been the loser. It is simply good business, it is only common-sense, to pay adequate salaries, competitive salaries, for competent people. But this is not the way this government views the civil service. Men and women are being forced out of the public service because the government will not pay enough to keep them; the government then has to hire new personnel and train them at great expense—until these replacements are driven away too.

The process has been repeating itself for years until the turnover in the civil service today is 10.6 per cent. The figures are even more alarming for public servants on the executive level. In the interests of false economy, the government has vitiated the competence and quality of the public administration.

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I ask the government why it has done nothing to introduce the merit system in the public service of Ontario? I am informed this province is alone in the western world in not having the merit system; Ontario, I am told, is on the same level of the public administration of Great Britain over one hundred years ago. Eventually, the civil servants of Ontario will have collective bargaining; and when that time comes, a great many incompetents will be entrenched in the administration—many of them placed there because of Conservative political patronage.

A merit system now would do two things—it would ensure that all job vacancies would be filled only on the basis of competition and impartial examination, and it would institute impartial standards whereby the performance of existing operations could be measured. I suggest it is obvious a merit system must precede collective bargaining and I think it is obvious it is essential to improve the quality of the public service. The salary bill for the civil service is a large one; if economy were the watchword, a prudent government would increase salaries where appropriate in order to keep the many key personnel in its employ, and thereby save the taxpayer money in the long run.

But, Mr. Speaker, hon. gentlemen opposite have not been adverse to looking after themselves. When one looks at the swollen Treasury benches opposite, one can see some argument for having a Senate where hon. gentlemen could be put out to pasture, instead of being created hon. Ministers without Portfolio. We have four such gentlemen now, in a Cabinet of twenty-one.

And let us look at the composition of that Cabinet, Mr. Speaker. The Departments of Education, Health, Highways, Public Welfare and Municipal Affairs between them account for 75 per cent of the budget; there are five Ministers to administer these departments. The remaining portfolios account for 25 per cent of the budget and these are handled by twelve Ministers. And then there are the four homeless Ministers without Portfolio, whose duties are most obscure.

Parkinson's Law is at work, Mr. Speaker, and little empires—with secretaries, assistants, chauffeurs, and cars—are being built. I venture to say that the taxpayer could be spared at least a quarter of a million dollars yearly by reorganization and reduction of the Cabinet.

One wonders, Mr. Speaker, what savings could be effected in the administration of the departments themselves. No doubt they would be substantial. Recently, for example, The Department of Highways announced that 22 service station areas will be built on Highway 401. Such servicing areas, of course, are necessary. But why were the sites not bought and built at the same time as the highway itself? The land buyers of the department have had considerable trouble purchasing many of these sites and have had to pay considerably higher costs. Construction and grading costs will also be higher than they would have been had the government shown a little foresight and planning.

Not only have the taxpayers at large suffered for this shortsightedness, but many small businessmen will lose heavily because they took the government at its word. The original policy was that Highway 401 would have no servicing areas; as a result, service stations, restaurants and motels have been built on access roads—how much business can these people expect when the servicing areas on the highway itself are ready?

This lack of planning, Mr. Speaker, can be seen many times and in many places on the highways of Ontario. I invite hon. members to view Ontario's Stonehenge the next time they are in the Hamilton area near the Queen Elizabeth Highway and the Burlington Skyway cutoff; sterile pillars of concrete rise from the fields, bleak testimony to the fact that The Department of Highways capriciously decided to put the Chedoke by-pass elsewhere, at a cost to the taxpayer of many thousands, perhaps even hundreds of thousands, of dollars.

Mr. Speaker, one could go on at some length about this Department of Highways. Suffice it to say that it is the department of the contract overrun, whereby contractors are paid for claimed expenses above the mockery of tender bidding; it discounts economy; it places a premium upon inefficiency. It has no place in a properly administered department of government. Small wonder, Mr. Speaker, that it is such a feature of this government, a government which has overrun its contract with the people and must now face the dreadful accounting.

The Department of Highways is not alone in its spendthrift ways. May I cite, sir, the case of the Blenheim District High School which was brought to the attention of the House by my colleague the hon. member for Kent East (Mr. Spence). Two proposals were presented to the district high school board, both of them bearing the tentative approval of The Department of Education. As explained by the Blenheim News-Tribune on September 4, 1961, one proposal involved adding nine new rooms and making certain repairs to the high school at a total cost of $407,985; of this, the provincial grant would have been $178,210 and the school board's share would have been $229,775. The second proposal was that eight of the existing classrooms be torn down and seventeen new ones be built.

I ask the House to note that the net gain of nine rooms was the same in each case. Yet the second proposal would have involved a total cost of $513,900, of which the province would have paid $301,750 and the school board $211,480. In other words, it would have saved the school board $18,295 and it would have cost the province $123,540 more to tear down eight rooms and build seventeen new ones, rather than simply adding nine new rooms. The explanation, Mr. Speaker, involves a tortuous explanation with which I shall not weary the House; but surely the lesson is clear: the government has no real concept of economy, no concern for saving the taxpayer a dollar wherever possible.

A classic example is to be found in the auditor's report for 1960-1961. On page 19 he points out that the federal government allows a sales tax refund on goods purchased by provincial government departments, but will not do so when dealing with Crown agencies of the provinces. I quote from the report:

An example of the inequity that has occurred under this system is that the Manitoba Health Services Plan, operated under the direction of the Minister of Health and Public Welfare, can buy materials free of federal sales tax because the manufacturer under the provisions of The Excise Tax Act is able to obtain a refund of the taxes paid thereon, while the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, performing precisely the same functions under a commission-type of operation and under separate statutory authority, cannot buy these goods tax free because the manufacturer is not permitted to obtain a refund of the tax paid on the sale of the goods. This condition appears indefensible and as yet no effective steps have been taken to correct it.

I am glad to see they are starting to sit up anyway, Mr. Speaker, because there is a lot more here yet.

What a slap in the face to the taxpayers of Ontario; what a needless extra cost to their pocketbooks, already overburdened by heavy taxation. I ask the government when it will take effective steps to correct what is truly an indefensible position. If my hon. friends opposite want to show some economy, here is a place to start.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, would it be fair if the hon. member pointed out that the—

Mr. Whicher: The point, Mr. Chairman, is simply this: the auditor of the province of Ontario, the hon. Provincial Treasurer of this Legislature, has said that the government's position is indefensible and as yet no effective steps have been taken.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is the federal government he is referring to.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I turn now to a forecast of what the position will be ten years hence, if the trends established by this government are allowed to continue without change, if the status quo is maintained—that is, if current tax rates and current rates of government services continue—then the budget of Ontario in 1971 will look like this:

Government expenditures will be over $1.8 billion;

The year's deficit will be $520 million;

The net capital debt will have reached $4.13 billion.

These forecasts, Mr. Speaker, are all on the low side. They are based on 1961 dollars and make no allowance for inflation. They provide for no escalation for improved quality in existing services. Because they have been conservatively calculated, I believe they merit the serious consideration of all hon. members and I have therefore set them out in charts which I shall table for the benefit of Hansard and the hon. members.

Let us examine, Mr. Speaker, some of the major spending areas over the next ten years. The charts are particularly instructive in the field of education costs. They show that in 1971, provincial grants for primary and secondary education will exceed $410 million; that municipal governments will be levying $700 million in taxes for education; that municipal tax rates for education will be up 62 per cent over current levels.

I think hon. members will agree that these are startling figures and some extenuation of them is justified.

In 1961, Mr. Speaker, the elementary and secondary school enrolment in Ontario was 1,462,000. Assuming only that the current retention rate of 94 per cent for elementary schools continues and that the retention rate for secondary schools will rise from the current 65 to 75 per cent, then enrolment in 1971 will be 2,104,000. This means that education costs will rise from $380 million in 1961 to $1.11 billion in 1971. Again I emphasize this is a minimum forecast and makes no allowance for monetary inflation. The province's share of this cost under the current grant structure will rise from $191 million in 1961 to over $410 million in 1971; the municipal share will rise from $289 million to $700 million.

All these forecasts, Mr. Speaker, are based on the government's own statistics concerning enrolment and pupil costs, school construction, teacher training, and teacher-pupil ratios.

Obviously, the effect on the municipal tax structure in Ontario will be catastrophic. We will know how mounting educational costs have placed a heavy strain on the municipalities in the last 10 years. But what has happened in the 50's will be a mere drop in the bucket compared to what will happen in the 60's if current trends and tax structure continue. In 1961, the municipalities spent an estimated $290 million for education on a total taxable assessment of $11 billion, a levy which represents a 29 mill rate on current assessment. If taxable assessment simply continues to increase at 4 per cent annually in real dollars, it will total $15 billion in 1971. In order to raise $700 million for education on this assessment, the municipal mill rate will have to rise to 47 mills—18 mills higher than in 1961 and an increase of 62 per cent in the 10 years.

How can the municipalities possibly adjust to this crushing burden? Where in this budget is there a single clue to indicate that my hon. friends opposite are even aware of the problem? What have they done except to wring their hands and cry that the municipalities must hold the line? Mr. Speaker, the prospects for 1971 which I have outlined cannot be prevented by holding the line. Are my hon. friends advocating birth control? Would they keep children out of the schools?

Perhaps this government will be good enough to explain just what it means by holding the line. Perhaps it will explain why, in its own budget, there is no indication anywhere of the need for a research crash programme to find ways and means of reducing education costs. Why is the government not allocating funds for research into school design, construction materials, classroom layouts, optimum school sizes?

Would the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) be good enough to spare a moment from his many duties and tell us, in his role as hon. Minister of Education, whether the most efficient classroom is one that accommodates 15 pupils, or 30 pupils, or 200 pupils? Will he say how educational television can be exploited? Is any research under way to determine the advisability of standardized architects' plans for school construction?

Mr. Speaker, I repeat there is not a clue in this budget to indicate any thought is being given to research to lower basic costs. If it is an honest budget—and I have stated my doubts about that—the government is doing nothing. It is content simply to dole out the grants in the same old way, passively accepting the status quo, abdicating its responsibility to protect the taxpayers' money by preventing unnecessary expenditures and by assuring that full value is received for money spent.

And may I point out to the House that I have allowed nothing for the costs of the new programme for technical and vocational education, or of provincial grants to the universities. The technical and vocational education programme is a new area on which little information is available at this time. But obviously it will involve higher operating and construction costs per pupil than is now the case in the academic secondary schools, a fact which many municipalities appear to be forgetting in their eagerness to accept the federal and provincial grants.

In respect of university education, the province's grants in 1961 totalled $45.4 million. Since only between 6 and 7 per cent of the college-age group in Ontario is currently enrolled in the universities—compared to 30 per cent in the United States—it is virtually inevitable that university enrolment in the province will increase drastically. It is entirely probable, therefore, that the provincial government's grants to the universities in 1971 will total at least $100 million. In any event, I simply suggest to the House that my picture of educational costs in 1971 has not been overdrawn.

Now, let us examine the next 10 years with respect to highways expenditures.

In 1958, The Department of Highways published a report giving detailed estimates of capital and maintenance costs both for provincial highways and for roads in counties, townships and urban municipalities. This report forecast an expenditure of $7.1 billion in terms of 1957 dollars, for the 20-year period from 1957 to 1977. The provincial government will be required to spend $2.4 billion on provincial highways and secondary roads. In addition, if the province shares the municipal programme on a 50-50 basis it will be required to spend an additional $2.3 billion for a total expenditure of $4.7 billion.

An examination of the capital expenditures planned by The Department of Highways in the budget shows that $247 million will be spent in 1962-1963. This is no more than one year's share of the 20-year programme and makes no allowance for the heavy backlog of work which the 1957 report said had to be done immediately. Clearly, if the overall programme is to be realized, there will have to be an acceleration in spending in the coming years. A little arithmetic indicates expenditures of $320 million will be required by 1965-1966, even without allowing for monetary inflation, and that by 1971 the annual rate will be of the order of $420 million.

Now what about the municipal share? The total cost to the municipalities for the 20-year programme was estimated at $2.3 billion. This is an annual average of $115 million. How does that figure compare with what the municipalities have been spending? Assuming that municipal expenditures have equalled the provincial grants, then the public accounts reveal that the municipalities in the past five years have been far below the $115 million annual spending level which was expected of them in the department's 20-year plan. In 1958, the municipalities spent $51.5 million on roads; in 1959, $54 million; in 1960, $62.4 million and in 1961, $70.4 million. In the fiscal year now closing, they will have spent $73.1 million and according to the budget, they will spend $80.9 million in 1962-1963.

In short, Mr. Speaker, if the 1957 report has been implemented to date, municipal expenditures should total some $690 million by the end of the next fiscal year. In fact, they will total some $392.3 million, or about $300 million short of the programme.

The conclusion is obvious: our back-log demand for more and better roads is increasing rather than decreasing. And it is equally obvious that it is not the fault of the municipalities. It is the fault of this government. "The powers of the municipalities devolve from the provinces and therefore municipal government is part and parcel of provincial government."

I wonder if the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost)—I am sorry he is not in his seat—recognizes those words? He should. They are taken from a statement he made to the federal-provincial conference in July of 1960. We all know, certainly this government must know, that the municipalities are strapped by the current tax structure. For the municipalities to meet their share of the roads programme this year, the mill rate for local road construction and maintenance would have to be increased by 44 per cent. I ask this government whether it seriously claims such an increase is realistic. Why, then, does it continue to blindly follow antiquated formulae based on a horse-and-buggy tax structure?

Mr. Speaker, I have shown that in education and in highways, this government has demonstrated no real desire to come to grips with real problems. In education, the province's share of the total cost has been approximately 40 per cent and there is no plan evident in the budget for relieving the municipal burden.

In highways, the department proposed a 20-year plan but in the first five years the plan has failed to meet even minimum requirements.

Let me emphasize the point, Mr. Speaker, that nowhere in the budget of this government can any plan of expenditures be found. There are no discernible priorities in the government's expenditures.

I have here a chart, Mr. Speaker, which will be tabled, that demonstrates what I mean. It sets out departmental ordinary expenditures as a percentage of the total budget for each of the seven years from 1957 to 1963. In 1957, expenditures of The Department of Agriculture were about 2 per cent of the total budget. In 1963 departmental expenditures for agriculture were still about 2 per cent of the total budget and the same ratio prevailed for all the years in between.

The same applies to the hon. Attorney-General's department. Its expenditures have been about 3 per cent of total costs.

The same thing applies to The Department of Lands and Forests at approximately 3 per cent; Public Welfare at approximately 6 per cent; Commerce and Development at approximately 1 per cent; Reform Institutions at about 2 per cent, and so on.

The figures speak for themselves, Mr. Speaker, and what they say clearly is that the expenditure policies of this government are those of drift. There is no direction to expenditures.

The departments are all growing at approximately the same rate and that rate is much closer to Parkinson's law of bureaucratic mushrooming than it is to the changing needs and requirements of the people of Ontario.

When one looks at these figures, Mr. Speaker, one can almost hear the hon. Prime Minister and his hon. Ministers drawing up their annual estimates. The procedure is simplicity itself. They get an estimate of total expenditure by adding the amount of 15 per cent deficit to estimated revenue. Then the hon. Prime Minister, or the members of the Treasury Board, interview the hon. Ministers and say: "Gentlemen, this year the total money available is X millions of dollars. The hon. Minister of Agriculture, therefore, can expect 2 per cent of that; the hon. Attorney-General 3 per cent; Lands and Forests 3 per cent; Commerce and Development 1 per cent; Public Welfare 6 or 7 per cent; Reform Institutions 2 per cent," and so on.

Mr. Speaker, the status quo triumphs again and the dynamic needs of this province are once again at the mercy of fate without any government planning, without any government direction, without any government initiative.

What will be the picture in 1971 if we go on in this way?

I have prepared a chart, which I shall table for the benefit of hon. members, which shows the actual revenues and expenditures for the province for the 10-year period, 1951-1961, along with the government's forecasts for 1962 and 1963. The chart then projects these trends to 1971.

The chart summarizes departmental expenditures under the headings of education, highways, health and welfare, interest charges, public works, etc., and I believe hon. members will find it merits study.

The figures for education show, for example, that the department's total expenditure in 1951 was $60 million. This figure included grants to elementary and secondary schools, universities, libraries, the Teachers' Superannuation Fund and the administrative expenses of the department. By 1963 The Department of Education estimates its total expenses will be $330 million.

Carrying the same trend forward the department's expenses will be $440 million in 1966 and $600 million in 1971. This figure, Mr. Speaker, makes no allowance for inflation and will be required just to maintain the status quo.

The same procedures employed in working out the projection for education costs have been applied to all other departments.

Highway expenditures of $83 million in 1951 will be $264 million in 1963. If the present trend continues, highway spending in 1966 will be $320 million and by 1971, $420 million.

Health and welfare expenditures of $55 million in 1951 will be $205 million in 1963. By 1966 this amount will rise to $250 million and by 1971 to $320 million.

Interest costs on public debt were $20 million in 1950 and will be $60 million in 1963. By 1966, and listen to this, interest costs will be $90 million and by 1971 the interest costs bearing the debt that we have accumulated will be $200 million annually.

Public works spending totalled $12 million in 1951 and will amount to $50 million in 1963. Because the public works programme of this province is not planned, Mr. Speaker, I have deliberately kept the expenditures for public works at the low figure of $60 million by 1971 because I think it is inconceivable that the figure could be less.

The expenditures of all other departments in 1951 were $48 million and will be $177 million in 1963. Projecting the trend gives a total expenditure of $210 million in 1966 and $250 million in 1971.

The total expenditures of all departments in 1971 will be $1.850 billion in terms of 1961 dollars.

I turn now to the projected tax revenues—the hon. Minister has to be fair about this thing—he is the expert about the tax revenues. We will give them to him. I turn now to projected tax revenues for Ontario on the basis of the present tax structure. In these projections I have used the government's own estimate of population increase and I have assumed a real growth rate of 3 per cent per year in terms of 1961 dollars. This growth rate, Mr. Speaker, is relatively greater than that experienced by Ontario under Progressive-Conservative administration in the past 10 years.

The projections show that in 1966 provincial government revenue will be $1.095 billion and $1.330 billion in 1971.

It is simple arithmetic to see what our deficits will be in the years between now and 1971. The deficit in 1966 will be $270 million—that is only 4 years away. Averaging the increase in deficit for the five years from 1966 to 1971 at $50 million per year, it is easy to see that in 1967 the annual deficit will be $320 million; in 1968, $370 million; in 1969, $420 million; in 1970, $470 million and in 1971 $520 million. The accumulated deficits will bring our net debt to $4.1 billion in 1971. The hon. Provincial Treasurer has expressed himself as mildly alarmed at our present net debt of $1.2 billion. I wonder how he feels when he looks at his projections, if he has made any projections that is, when he sees a net debt in 1966 exceeding $2 billion and in 1971 exceeding $4 billion?

On a per capita basis the net debt in 1971 will be about $536 for every man, woman and child in Ontario, almost three times as much as the figure of $180 in 1961.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: 1971 is not too far away, you know. It is only nine years. The hon. member will not be here by then, that is certain.

An hon. member: You will not be here a year from now.

Mr. Whicher: If I were the hon. Minister I would not worry about it at all. I am talking mostly to my own fellows who worry about it.

An hon. member: The hon. member is not worried about it?

Mr. Whicher: We will show the planning in a minute. And this $4.1 billion in net debt by 1971, Mr. Speaker, is assuming no increases in provincial services, no improvements in the quality of existing services and, to be fair to the hon. Provincial Treasurer, no new taxes and no increases in existing tax rates.

As a consequence of this huge increase in net debt, debt interest payments in 1971 will be $200 million or more than 10 per cent of the province's total expenditures.

In 1961 interest costs of $44 million represented less than 5 per cent of the provincial budget.

Mr. Speaker, here are the cards of an unmarked deck placed face up on the table where the taxpayers of Ontario can have a proper look at them.

What price an incompetent government? What price stagnation? What price Toryism?

Mr. Speaker, the increase in provincial debt is only part of the total picture.

Let us look at municipal debt. I have prepared a graph, Mr. Speaker, which shows population increase in Ontario and trends in provincial and municipal debt from 1935 until today, with a projection to 1980.

The chart shows clearly that from 1935 to 1945 municipal debt in Ontario steadily declined from a high of $460 million to $231 million. In 1945 provincial debt was about $483 million.

From 1945 to 1961 provincial debt rose from $483 million to almost $1.1 billion, an increase of over 100 per cent. In the same period municipal debt rose from $231 million to $1.62 billion, or an increase of almost 700 per cent.

In other words, municipal debt, which was less than half as large as provincial debt in 1945, is now one-third larger than provincial debt.

This, Mr. Speaker, is just another indication that the heaviest burdens of development in Ontario are being borne by the municipalities.

Small wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the Ontario Municipal Board is already issuing words of caution to municipalities about their growing debt.

In its last report, the board said the increase in the fixed overheads of municipalities was a serious matter and would become crippling in periods of recession if the total debt is not kept within a safe limit. During the year, the board expanded its earlier practice of requesting a capital budget or forecast from municipalities which, in the opinion of the board, were approaching the limits of safety for capital debt.

What better indication can there be, Mr. Speaker, of the increasing inability of municipal governments to finance their services?

If the position of municipalities is so bad today that the municipal board has to caution them, what will their position be in 1971?

Small wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) and the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) have gone to great pains in their reports to leave the impression with this House and the public that the government's policies and programmes are directed towards economic growth. No doubt their expressions are meant sincerely. Unfortunately, the past is here to haunt them.

The budget, Mr. Speaker, should be more than an estimate of revenues and expenditures. A budget in excess of $1 billion, sir, has significant effects on the economy of Ontario and on the economy of Canada. It is important that such a budget become an instrument of economic growth—a device by which the government exerts initiative in expanding and developing the economy in specific ways.

It is clear that the budgets presented by Conservative governments for the past two decades have not been geared to the specific task of promoting growth. They have frequently worked against economic expansion; they have caused Ontario to lose its share of the Canadian economy; they have resulted in the imposition of new and heavier tax loads.

I repeat: the Ontario budget has been working against economic expansion.

The economy of Canada and of Ontario goes in cycles. At a particular time it may be in a period of rapid growth. Business activity is high. There is large-scale capital investment. Employment is high. Money is in short supply and the general pressures of the economy are inflationary because they all tend to push up prices. In such periods government revenues swell.

In such expansive periods, wise government policy is to try to relieve excessive inflationary pressures in a number of ways, including tighter credit and reduced government spending. While the general economy spends, government saves and holds its surpluses or its borrowing capacity in reserve for a rainy day.

In periods of economic contraction business activity slows; unemployment increases; money is less in demand; and the general pressures of the economy are deflationary as prices tend to remain stable or to decline.

In order to alleviate the depressionary effects of such trends, sound government policy is to lower tax rates and to increase spending. In other words, when private business and individuals curtail spending the wise governments increase spending.

In short, Mr. Speaker, government policies should be employed as instruments to temper the general trend of the economy by swimming against the stream. This process is called contra-cycle budgeting.

But this policy has never been employed by this government.

In fact, for the past 12 years this government has been budgeting in a fashion that compounds the difficulties presented by general economic trends.

The budgetary practices of this government have been to follow the trend of the economy. In good times it expanded its budget, thereby increasing the competition for investment capital, increasing the competition for labour and exerting a powerful added pressure to inflationary trends.

In recessive periods it contracted its capital spending thereby making it more difficult for the economy to rally and recover.

This government's budget policies have not provided a true surplus for 15 years. In good times there is a deficit; in recessive periods there is a deficit; in each and every year there has been a deficit. Once again we have a budget which follows the Conservative status quo.

It is not a budget for economic growth. It is a budget that inhibits economic growth. And the reason it is not an instrument for growth is because this government has no policies of growth. This is not a government with a plan for Ontario and the initiative to carry it out; this is a government of caretakers doing what they have always done—presiding over an ever-expanding bureaucracy, watching expenditures rise in the same proportion in each department, establishing no priorities, and continuing a trend of ever-mounting deficits.

In an expanding economy, government revenues tend to rise in a ratio that keeps pace with the cost of services. Because the growth of the economy has not kept pace with the rising cost of service this government has continued to have larger and larger budgetary deficits. These increasing deficits have resulted in ever greater pressures on provincial credit. As our debt mounts the interest rates rise so that today the credit of Ontario is little better than some of our larger municipalities. The costs of servicing debt are rising steeply. The cost of debt service in Ontario today exceeds the budgets of all but the five largest departments.

The lack of growth has resulted, as it must inevitably, in higher taxes. The lack of growth is one of the reasons for the recently imposed sales tax.

This government imposed the sales tax, not to provide new services, or expanded services, but to pay for old debts. The sales tax in Ontario is one of the prices which the people of this province have had to pay for the lack of economic growth and the bad financial practices of this government.

Mr. Speaker, this government has not had a policy and a programme for economic growth. In fact, Ontario is losing its share of the Canadian economy. One of the chief indicators of growth is new capital investment. In 1951 Ontario had 36.7 per cent of the new capital investment in Canada; in 1959 it was 34.6 per cent.

What are the consequences of lack of economic growth? The failure to grow results in tax increase to meet rising expenses; it produces unemployment because the labour force grows faster than job openings; the debt increases relative to the total economy; increasing welfare costs go up, and lagging municipal assessments result in higher municipal taxes and increased municipal borrowing. We will show hon. members the future in a minute or two.

Mr. Speaker, I have already referred to the imposition of the sales tax, the largest single levy imposed upon the people of Ontario by any government in this province's history. The sales tax, expected to raise some $160 million in the next fiscal year, will be providing 17.3 per cent of the province's total ordinary and capital revenue. And yet the hon. Provincial Treasurer still anticipates a deficit next year of some $134 million.

The effects of lack of growth on provincial revenue is demonstrated clearly in the budget's report that revenue from the corporation income tax will be $19 million less than was estimated last year. And this, Mr. Speaker, in a year in which the hon. Minister of Economics reported a good business climate with a year-end upturn.

Rising unemployment is another indicator of lack of economic growth. What is the trend of employment in Ontario, Mr. Speaker? On page A-3 of his economic survey, the hon. Minister of Economics reported that unemployment as a percentage of the labour force in Ontario has been rising steadily from 2.4 per cent in 1956 to 5.5 per cent in 1961. The number of unemployed has risen from 51,000 in 1956 to 132,000 in 1961.

This is a clear indication that Ontario's rate of economic growth is not keeping pace with the growth of the labour force.

What about other indices of economic activity?

Do they reveal the economic growth which the hon. Minister of Economics spoke about so frequently last Tuesday, or to which the hon. Provincial Treasurer made reference last Thursday?

Let us look at the tables provided by the hon. Minister of Economics in his survey.

Page A-4 shows industrial employment in Ontario for the period 1946 to 1961 as a ratio with industrial employment in 1949 taken as the base of 100. The hon. Minister's tables show that industrial employment in 1961, at 119.2, was the lowest since 1955.

On page A-5 the hon. Minister shows housing completions for the period 1946-1961. Housing completions in 1961 totalled 43,754, the lowest number since 1954.

On page A-15 the hon. Minister shows a chart in which employment in primary industry—farming, forestry, mining, fishing and trapping—has steadily declined from 20 years as a percentage of total employment. This chart also shows that employment in manufacturing, has declined from 38 per cent of the labour force in 1951 to 30 per cent of the labour force in 1961.

Does this indicate economic growth?

On page 28 of his report the hon. Minister of Economics himself admitted:

It is apparent that there is still excess capacity in many of our industries and until this is fully utilized there will be no large-scale investment undertaken in the private sector.

And on page 29 he stated:

We recognize that our rate of growth in the last four years has not been adequate.

Small wonder that the advocacy of growth and the espousal of growth which we now hear from the hon. Minister has a hollow ring to it. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I think the first step the hon. Minister of Economics might take to establish an element of realism in this matter would be to introduce the man who prepared the tables in his report to the man who wrote the text.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the present tax structure, by its very rigidity, is inhibiting economic growth.

The fixed base of the property tax is like an aging Hercules straining to hold aloft an ever-growing number of services, all of them increasing rapidly in cost. The municipalities are straining now to keep pace with current services. They will be incapable of assuming additional services or even of improving the quality of existing services.

The rigidity of the municipal tax structure in Ontario is such that municipalities are facing local austerity as the price of local autonomy. Embellishment of municipal life by the provision of worthwhile and desirable amenities is almost prohibited by the tax structure.

In years gone by, municipal leaders worked hard for the growth of their communities. Today, largely because of the sterile rigidity of the local tax structure, municipal officials look on population growth as a mixed blessing at best, bringing more problems than solutions, more headaches than rewards, more dissension than satisfaction.

A normal and healthy attitude towards growth has been perverted. Caution has replaced confidence.

The rigidity of the provincial tax structure, and the paralysis of action which is evident throughout this whole budget presentation, is another inhibiting factor in the promotion of economic growth in Ontario.

The deficits which this government has been accumulating down through the years, in meeting the normal requirements of the people of Ontario, have now mounted to the point where there is little flexibility in the present budget for additional provincial government programmes which has allowed circumstances to overwhelm it in the past 15 years. And now adjustments are no longer sufficient and major overhauls in provincial-federal and provincial-municipal relations are required.

The municipalities must have equity and flexibility restored to their taxing powers in terms of their responsibilities. The provincial government can no longer be a docile, contented cow, gratefully munching federal handouts and passing them on to the municipal governments.

The provincial government can no longer be a passive, unassertive middle man in the structure of Canadian government. The provincial government must exert the leadership which the constitution imposes and become an active, aggressive agency for the promotion of economic growth and development.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Provincial Treasurer, in his estimate of revenue for the coming fiscal year, clearly shows that he does not really expect economic growth in Ontario in the next 12 months. It is true he has predicted an increase in revenue of $148 million.

But this increase includes $84 million more from the operation of the sales tax; $33 million more from an adjustment in the personal income tax rebate under the federal-provincial tax-sharing agreements. In other words, higher taxes, not growth, will be providing $117 million of the $148 million increase in revenue. The hon. Provincial Treasurer may talk economic growth, Mr. Speaker, but he is not counting on it.

Mr. Speaker, I have shown the past and present sins of this government. I have shown how it has cooked the books and thrown a smokescreen around the true position of the provincial accounts in order to hide them from the voters. I have shown how 15 years of Tory budgeting has resulted in steeply rising municipal taxes, new provincial taxes, rising unemployment and economic stagnation. I have shown how the tired, hackneyed budget presentation given this House by the hon. Provincial Treasurer last Thursday does not meet the times and the needs of the people of Ontario.

I have shown how this House has been given a shortfall budget by a shortfall government.

Mr. Speaker, I turn now to the future. I will not weary the House by asking the government whether it proposes to reform and do better in the future. There is no future but oblivion for this administration. The future belongs to the people of Ontario and to the Liberal Party, because only the Liberal Party is alive to the possibilities, the potential and the promise of Ontario.

I will therefore conclude, Mr. Speaker, with an outline of what the Liberal Party and a Liberal government will do in Ontario in the field of fiscal and economic policy.

What do Liberals want for Ontario?

We want a province where every man and woman who needs and wants a job can find one. We want an economy where everyone will receive a fair and decent return for his labour and can face the future with confidence and a sense of security and progress.

We want a community where there is a sense of co-operation, of purpose, of unity and of fair sharing.

We want expansion, not conservatism. We want production, not stagnation. We want change and movement and progress, not reaction and privilege and fat-cat Toryism.

Mr. Speaker, we believe this Liberal philosophy can be achieved by producing a real economic growth in Ontario of at least 4.5 per cent per annum. Expressed in current dollars, this would be an annual growth rate of between six and seven per cent. A Liberal government in Ontario will institute budgetary, fiscal and economic policies to ensure a growth rate of between six and seven per cent.

What would such expansion mean for the people of Ontario in the next ten years? Perhaps the best way to explain it would be to simply point out that in the past five years, there has been a 2.2 per cent increase in the gross provincial product in real terms. In short, the Liberal programme would more than double the growth rate of the last five years.

But a growth rate of 4.5 per cent in real terms would mean much more than that. It would mean a full employment economy. Not only would those currently unemployed be put back to work but jobs could be provided for all new entrants into the labour force. It would mean a decrease in welfare expenditures. It would provide the economic foundation for the full realization of our human resources. It would mean a 50 per cent growth in personal income in real terms by 1971; in other words, it would mean that the average person in Ontario would be 50 per cent better off than he is now.

If there is no acceleration in the growth rate—which the Conservative government has tolerated—the gross provincial product in 1971 will be about $20 billion, and I have already described what that means in terms of deficits, provincial and municipal debt, and inadequate government revenues to meet essential services.

But an annual growth rate of 4.5 per cent in real terms will mean a gross provincial product in 1971 of $24 billion. And this in turn would mean higher provincial revenues, lower debt charges and a balanced budget—without tax increases.

Mr. Speaker, to get the Ontario economy going again will require new capital investment in Ontario by industry, commerce, and all three levels of government, of $4.5 billion per year for the next 10 years. By comparison, new capital investment in the province this year is expected to exceed $3 billion. An annual average of $4.5 billion is not a pie-in-the-sky figure. It is a realizable goal if we design our programmes to achieve it. New capital investment of $4.5 billion annually would be the equivalent of 22 to 23 per cent of gross provincial product per year. I point out to the House that this rate is currently the target of the United States and several European economies. But in recent years, in Ontario, Conservative policies have produced an investment rate of only 20 per cent, or less, of gross provincial product.

One of the major reasons for the falling rate in new capital investment has been the failure of the government to devise and carry out programmes for economic expansion.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal programme for economic growth will include a genuine and sympathetic understanding of the problems of business and industry and a willingness to use provincial services to assist industrial growth. I submit that the present government's unsympathetic approach is driving certain industry out of Ontario.

For example, Atlas Steels of Welland, Ontario, has begun construction of a $40 million plant in Quebec, with the direct assistance of the Quebec government in locating an industrial site, and in securing favourable hydro-electric power contracts which are playing a significant role in the company's decision to build in Quebec, instead of expanding in Welland.

Atlas Steels is a company making a special product. The cost of energy is an unusually large part of the total cost of the product.

Long-term hydro-electric contracts at reasonable rates are a prime requisite for the successful operation of this company.

Ontario Hydro did not meet Quebec's competition in terms of rates over the life of the contract.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): And that is true, too.

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): That is not true.

Mr. Reaume: That is absolutely true. The hon. Minister knows it is true.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the thing is this: Atlas Steels are in Quebec, not in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They are not in Quebec either.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, a government desirous and determined to encourage economic growth in Ontario would have been certain that this $40 million investment was kept here, along with the 400 permanent jobs which this investment will create.

Mr. Speaker, the provincial government cannot, by itself, produce all the growth rate which I have called for. But it can exert powerful influence in securing that measure of growth which is beyond its direct control. By developing a set of plans and programmes of its own, it can give leadership and direction to the other sectors involved. It can co-ordinate and support the efforts of the municipalities and it can take the lead in securing closer co-operation from the federal government.

To produce this co-ordination, co-operation and support among the three levels of government, there must be a searching review and reshaping of the entire tax structure. A full diagnosis is required before there can be an adequate cure. Many business and industrial leaders have called for such an investigation and study of the Canadian tax system. A Liberal government in Ontario will, as a matter of policy, promote, and if necessary convene, such a tax conference.

A Liberal government will establish an Ontario Development Fund with an authorized capital of $200 million.

Mr. Speaker, let me cite you examples of what this fund could do. There are many manufactured products which the highly industrialized province of Ontario imports.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Which speech of mine is he reading now?

Mr. Whicher: I will tell him whose it is. It is mine. I do not suggest to the hon. Minister that he does not write his. I do not think he is being too fair.

There is no reason why many of these products could not be manufactured in Ontario. We intend to promote the establishment of such industry by making loans available from this fund at low interest rates.

For example, Mr. Speaker, Ontario is the home of all the automobile manufacturers in Canada. This year, some $400 million worth of automobile parts will be imported into Canada. I suggest that the government should make it one of its goals to induce industry to produce in Canada all the automobile parts currently being imported. The active support of a sympathetic government together with the positive assistance of the Ontario Development Fund would go a long way towards achieving this goal.

The fund would also be used to encourage industry to process in Ontario, as much as possible of the raw materials which are currently being exported in a raw, or semi-finished condition, for finishing elsewhere.

This fund could also be used to particular advantage in promoting industrial location in regions that are currently being by-passed in the development of Ontario—for example, in eastern and northern Ontario. A strengthening of these regions, Mr. Speaker, would go a long way towards a sounder provincial economy.

A Liberal government will use the resources of the Ontario Development Fund to promote a massive programme of urban renewal.

Another function of the fund will be to provide money to set up marketing agencies in foreign countries to promote the sale of Ontario's farm products. There are more than 18 marketing boards in Ontario now, whose function is almost exclusively confined to marketing Ontario's farm products within the boundaries of Ontario.

The problem facing Ontario farmers is over-production and lack of markets. An aggressive sales force abroad is essential to Ontario farmers, at a time when the formation of new trading areas throughout the world threatens our traditional position.

Mr. Speaker, another goal of Liberal policy is a comprehensive programme of retraining those in the labour force who require it.

A Liberal government will undertake to provide leadership in co-ordinating labour, management and government in the achieving and maintaining of an adequate rate of economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, these are the policies of the Liberal Party. They will be the programmes of the Liberal government.

They are policies and programmes worthy of the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, we have not heard anything yet.

Mr. Whicher: They have not heard anything yet? Mr. Speaker, what they have heard is this. Action instead of sitting over there doing nothing. Instead of starving the farmers to death in this province, we are going to look after them. Instead of having thousands of people drawing money out of the unemployment insurance fund, we are going to put them back to work. And I think earlier in the speech, you will agree that I said we were going to make a few changes in the provincial Cabinet.

To continue, Mr. Speaker: They are progressive, positive and forward looking.

They are the foundation of the future. They are a rejection of the past and the present, I might add.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: He has mentioned two planks, both of them he has stolen from us.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I do not care whose planks they are, but they are most important to the people of this province and we are going to initiate them.

They are a clarion call to the restoration of leadership. They are a condemnation of this government, its record and its budget.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. H. Worton, that the motion

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee of ways and means be amended by adding thereto the following words:

This House regrets that the government has failed during its term of office to present an orderly accounting of the finances of the province, and

This House regrets that the government has established no system of priorities in its expenditures and has exerted no control over the haphazard growth of its departments, and

This House regrets that this government has not utilized its budget as an instrument to promote the growth of Ontario's economy, and

This House regrets that the government has failed to implement the Liberal plan of a $25 exemption in sales tax.

This House regrets that the government has not undertaken a provincial-municipal conference to restore equity and flexibility to the tax structure, and

This House regrets that the government has failed to exert its influence to secure a thorough review of the Canadian tax structure, and Therefore, this House rejects the budget as presented and must advise Your Honour that the government does enjoy the confidence of the people of Ontario.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, a House that is so overwhelmed with regrets will, I think, be very delighted to hear, through you, sir, that we have just had notification from the federal government at Ottawa concerning live polio virus vaccine, an additional service to the people of the province of Ontario. With your indulgence, sir, I would like to announce Ontario's part in this.

As of today, the federal Department of National Health and Welfare have issued a license to the Connaught Laboratories to distribute polio virus live oral vaccine to provincial departments of health.

We are all familiar with Salk vaccine, which was a killed vaccine given by needle. This new vaccine is prepared by a new process developed by Dr. Albert Sabin, of Cincinnati, by which the polio virus is treated to remove its disease-producing power yet retaining its power to produce protective antibodies. This vaccine is prepared in a solution of sweet syrup and is to be taken by mouth. It can be diluted with water and taken in a small paper cup, or by a plastic spoon. In the case of small infants it can be given by a dropper. At least two doses, and preferably three doses, should be given, at least eight weeks apart.

This vaccine will not be used to replace Salk vaccine, but rather to reinforce the level of immunity and give added assurance that any person who did not for any reason respond well to the Salk vaccine will get a good booster from the live oral vaccine. Its greatest value will be in giving adequate protection to a whole family unit or a whole community. It is easily and rapidly given and only requires the services of a nurse or other qualified person to measure out the dose.

The Department of Health has ordered a supply of this vaccine and will distribute it free of charge to local boards of health for administration by local health department staff. Until the supply is unlimited we will have to restrict the distribution in this way.

It will be supplied to local boards of health to be given to children three months of age and over, together with the other members of the family. The family or household unit basis for administration is important since this is the segment of our population which is most vulnerable to poliomyelitis infection. In due course, perhaps even by next fall, it may be made available to everybody.

Our people have been very well vaccinated with Salk vaccine, but we have never had any means to be sure that they all have as high a level of protection as is possible. This new live polio virus vaccine, given by mouth instead of by needle, will give us a new level of assurance that protection is as high as possible.

The Connaught Laboratories, located, as hon. members know, here in Toronto at the university, have once again accomplished a great forward step in vaccine production. They have produced this new product and have made it safe and easy to administer. We are justifiably proud of this accomplishment.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity to break into the normal proceedings of the House in order that this announcement may be made to the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, by what stretch of the imagination can the injection of that statement at this stage be in order? We were assured, Mr. Speaker, last week, that the budget debate would be put on today and that following the budget critic of the Liberal Party would be the budget critic of our group in the House. We are not in the normal position of before the orders of the day; we did not ask for a reversion to that position on your part. In other words, it was just an injection of a statement by the hon. Minister in violation of the rules of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I did ask for a reversion to the orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: I will agree to some extent with the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). I was notified by a note that the hon. Minister had a public announcement of something of real importance to announce to this House and I sent a note back that possibly we could hear it after the present speaker had resumed his seat. However, I will agree with the hon. member for York South that it possibly could have waited until tomorrow before the orders of the day.

Mr. MacDonald: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think your original idea was correct. It could only have been in order if it was made at the conclusion of the sitting today, not injected at this point. There are no special privileges for the hon. members of the Cabinet to ride roughshod over the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I did not ask for any special privileges as a member of the Cabinet.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I personally do not begrudge the hon. Minister his little effort to snatch a headline during the time that is traditionally devoted to the Opposition in the discussion of the budget. I would feel that the only way in which his effort could be considered to be in order would be if it is regarded as his contribution to this debate. However, I have no doubt that we will hear from him further in this debate at a later time.

In rising to participate in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to take advantage of this, my first opportunity to congratulate the new hon. members of the House. All of them have now taken their seats and I feel quite sure that they will all make a constructive contribution to the work of the House. I wish them success in all of their future endeavours which are not political in nature.

I would also like to congratulate the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), a man for whom I have always had the highest regard, and I hope I have always made it clear that I have a high regard for him. Year after year he struggles manfully and without audible complaint to create an appearance of order out of the chaos of government policy. Admittedly, he has never succeeded in this endeavour but one can hardly blame him for that, because no man can achieve the impossible. At least he should be given an "A" for effort.

In discussing the budget, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I am going to disappoint a man whom I regard as a friend of mine, Mr. John Miller, the perceptive observer of the Toronto Globe and Mail, by refraining from asking what he described in last Saturday's Globe as the perennial question as to how the government can claim a surplus when it actually has a deficit. I have asked that question many times in the past, I have never got an answer to it—and I may say many other people have done the same with the same lack of success—and I do not see much point in pursuing the matter any further.

I think it would be better if the hon. Provincial Treasurer would present his accounts in a straightforward manner, avoiding euphemisms such as "surplus on ordinary accounts" and "shortfall" and that sort of thing. After all, a deficit is a deficit, Mr. Speaker, it does not matter what you call it.

However, I will concede that the hon. Provincial Treasurer's little subterfuges do not really fool anybody. They are quite harmless. They have not fooled anybody, not even the hon. gentlemen on the Liberal benches. Since the hon. Provincial Treasurer seems to get genuine personal satisfaction out of them, I do not want to deny him his little pleasures.

I would, however, like in passing to refer to another of the hon. Provincial Treasurer's subterfuges. On pages nine and ten of his budget statement he tries to tell us that through his sinking fund arrangements he will retire part of the province's debt over a 35-year period and the balance over a 30-year period. I think that is a fair summary of what he said. When I heard that and read it I almost came to the conclusion that the hon. Provincial Treasurer must have been taking lessons from the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer).

Now as we all know, the hon. leader of the Opposition has always been mesmerized by special funds. He seems quite convinced that a dollar put into a special fund can be made to do the work of two; it can first of all be used for the purpose of the fund and then be used for general purposes as well. That is a very good trick if you can do it, but I do not think even Houdini has managed to find out how you do it.

As far as the statement of the hon. Provincial Treasurer is concerned, I would suggest to him that the plain fact is that he is busily engaged in increasing the debt. Now if he knows a way of paying off debt by increasing it, I think he ought to let all hon. members in on the secret. I am certain that, possessed of that knowledge, all of them could become rich men in a very short period of time. In this day and age, I would suggest to the hon. Provincial Treasurer, for his consideration, that the time may very well have come for a province of the size of Ontario to abandon double-talk about sinking funds, just as the federal government did a great many years ago. This, however, is merely in passing, Mr. Speaker.

There are other more substantial matters that I would like to deal with. But before I do that, I would like to make one or two references to the comments of my immediate predecessor in this debate.

Now the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) is a man with whom I rarely agree, but I do not believe that there has ever been an occasion when I have spoken anything but well of him. I respect his sincerity, and I consider him a kind of man that I like to know.

It was therefore a matter of very considerable regret to me, Mr. Speaker, to find that political expediency had apparently reduced him to a despicable attack, at the opening of his remarks, on a perfectly honourable group of people, namely the men and women who have been elected to leadership in the trade union movement of this province and country and who, in discharging their responsibilities of leadership, carry out decisions which have been democratically arrived at at conventions representing the members who elected them.

Now it is a very old tactic, Mr. Speaker, to attempt to destroy the organizations which working people have formed for their own protection, by launching an attack on the leaders, whom the working people themselves have elected, and to try to drive a wedge between the leadership and the membership. This is an old labour-baiting, anti-union tactic, and apparently the hon. member for Bruce considers it quite suitable for the Liberal Party.

Apparently the tactic of that party in its present political exigencies is to try to sow dissension within the labour movement and between the labour movement and the rest of the community, in the hope that it can cash in on the resulting confusion. If this is the new Liberalism about which we have heard so much of late, Mr. Speaker, it is not much different or any different from the old Liberalism of Hepburn and Smallwood.

It is preposterous to suggest, as the hon. member for Bruce suggested, and as I may say, a gentleman such as the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) has tried to suggest, that people who have been elected to office in the trade union movement, and indeed members of the trade union movement, should not be permitted, or perhaps should voluntarily abstain, from exercising their democratic right—and I would say responsibility—to play their part in the public affairs of the nation.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): We just say they should not be politicians and trade union leaders at the same time.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. gentleman from Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) says of a man who has been elected to a position of leadership in the trade union movement and has to stand for re-election and to submit an account of his stewardship, that if he wants to take an interest in the affairs of the nation, apparently, he should withdraw from his position within the trade union movement. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if we carry that principle very far, there would be very, very few people participating in the affairs of the nation, and the running of the country would be reduced to a group of professional politicians with very few roots in the community.

I believe that people who are leaders in the union movement, people who are leaders in the business world, people who are leaders in all phases of our nation's life should play a part in the affairs of the nation, should stand up and be counted, and should be prepared to identify themselves when they have positive opinions. The Liberal Party would like to restrict participation in democratic affairs exclusively to those people who support it. I will say for myself, and I think for my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, that we are proud that many people in the trade union movement, not all by any means, but many, and an increasing number, both in positions of leadership and among the rank-and-file membership, find that the programme of the New Democratic Party best expresses their own philosophy and objectives. I congratulate them, these people who have the courage to declare themselves, for having come forward and accepted their democratic responsibilities within the community.

Mr. Sopha: —with a platform like that.

Mr. Bryden: Well, if we are talking about platforms, maybe we will just pause for a moment or two. The Liberal Party has made a great attempt over the years to curry favour in the trade union movement. It has been conspicuously unsuccessful, and that may be the reason for its chagrin on this particular point. However, I would like to take a moment to refer to one of the more recent efforts of the Ontario Liberal Association to curry favour among the ranks of the organized working people of this province.

Under date of June 15, 1961, a circular letter was sent out, under the letterhead of the Ontario Liberal Association and over the signature of Mr. Ian Wahn, who is described as the chairman of the labour policy committee of the Ontario Liberal Association, and I have no doubt a very fine man, as the hon. gentleman says. This circular was sent out to, as far as I know, all or most trade union locals in the province, and it reads, in part as follows:

At the last annual convention of the Liberal association, the Liberal Party adopted a strong, pro-labour platform which will be of interest to your union. Not only did the Ontario Liberal Party adopt the general principle of full support for the organized labour movement but—

Let us put in parentheses, attacking the leaders all the way down the line—

Mr. Sopha: Is that what it says there?

Mr. Bryden: That is what the hon. member's financial critic said this afternoon within his hearing. I put it in parentheses—

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Is it in the circular?

Mr. Bryden: I said "put in parentheses". Apparently the hon. gentleman from Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) has difficulty understanding ordinary English. However, I will continue with the quotation, Mr. Speaker. The letter goes on to say:

It is also called for specific reforms of the type the trade union movement has been demanding. These reforms include—

There is a list of them which I will not read, but I will mention the first one—which is the one in which I am particularly interested. Hon. members can read the rest of them if they like. The first one is:

Endorsation of the union label programme.

Mr. Speaker, I might mention that the circular which was set out conveying this programme, including endorsation of the union label programme of the trade union movement, did not itself carry a union label. This is an indication of the sincerity of Liberal promises.

I would like to call attention to a further manifestation of the sincerity of Liberal policy on this particular matter of endorsement of the union label programme. During the recent Beaches by-election campaign, the Liberal candidate, Mr. MacGregor, put out a large-sized newspaper-style publication—in fact, he put out two of these, I have one of them here—which was devoted entirely to extolling his merits, which I may say are quite considerable in my opinion, and various other matters which he considered would be useful in persuading the people to vote for him. Now then, when I received this, I was naturally interested in it, for I am always interested in items of this kind, and knowing of the Liberal policy of endorsement of the union label programme, I naturally took a quick look for the union label on this publication.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Why would the hon. member do that?

Mr. Bryden: Because I am interested in seeing the union label.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What about the candidate of the NDP in Hamilton?

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, on page two of the publication, in the lower right hand corner, my eye was attracted by something that certainly appeared to be a union label. This happens to be an area in which I am particularly interested, so I studied it a little more than perhaps the average person might do. I looked at it very carefully and although it is always noticeable that union labels, even when they are quite small, are quite legible, this one could not be read at all. Then I noticed beside it the number 62, which we know is the customary way of identifying the particular shop which printed the publication. So I phoned up both of the organizations that have authority to issue union labels in this city and I found that neither of them had a number 62. There is no 62 shop either for the lithographers or the allied printing trades in this city.

A friend of mine got a magnifying glass and we studied this symbol more carefully. It was impossible, Mr. Speaker, to distinguish anything in it but straight lines. It appears to be a union label but under examination it becomes very obvious that it is not a union label at all. It was a deliberate, calculated effort to deceive the public, to make them think that the union label was being used and the publication was being printed in a union shop under union conditions, when in fact it was not being so published at all and there was no union label on it at all. I may say that this did not happen once, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Wintermeyer: If this is proved to be an error, will the hon. member apologize to this House?

Mr. Bryden: Well, if it was in error, it was a repeated error because it happened a second time. A new edition of this newspaper was circulated to the electorate in Beaches—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order I would ask the members if they would listen to the present speaker. The House has been very orderly this afternoon and I would ask the members to continue in that way. Up to the present time with the present speaker, I have been taking particular notice. If you add up all the interjections and what is being said at the same time, there are others who are actually speaking more than the speaker. It is very difficult under those circumstances.

Mr. Bryden: I may say, Mr. Speaker, that there was a second such publication put out in the campaign right on election day. It was put out by the Liberal Party and it was entitled: "The Danforth-Beaches Leader," but it was a straight piece of election propaganda put out by the party. The second one again contained this phony label, but I would judge that there may have been some complaint because this time it was scored a little bit even more than the one I have here, so that even the number 62 was illegible. This is what happened during the Beaches campaign.

I may say that I do not want to get into an argument at this stage as to whether or not printing should carry the union label. I believe that it should, and certainly no literature would ever be issued on my behalf that did not have the union label. But whether or not I am correct in that, I think all hon. members will agree with me that this attempt to deceive the public is thoroughly discreditable and totally unjustifiable.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I do not know that it was his paper.

Mr. Bryden: Well, the sponsorship of the paper is shown here. I will give the hon. leader of the Opposition a copy of it. In the masthead it is described as "The Danforth-Beaches Leader, published by the Don MacGregor Youth Committee, Don MacGregor Campaign Headquarters, 2084 Queen Street East, Phone OX 8-2535."

Mr. Sopha: Would someone ask the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) to come in, this may be organized crime.

Mr. Bryden: This is an indication, Mr. Speaker, of the reliance the public can place in Liberal promises.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Reform Institutions): If this trademark were registered, action could be taken for infringement, but if the label be not registered the hon. member would have to rely on one of passing off, which is more difficult.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, certainly the Allied Printing Trades label is registered and so also is the Amalgamated Lithographers' label, but I do not know what action the printing trades council might decide to take. I understand it is quite a complicated legal problem. It is fortunately not my responsibility to deal with that phase and I am certainly in no position to give them any advice at all. But I do call attention to the fact of the matter.

In turning to deal with the substance of the budget, I would like to say first of all that I have certain criticisms to make of the government and I am sure that the hon. Provincial Treasurer would be very surprised if I did not have. But I will promise him that I will not content myself merely with blasting the government from here to kingdom come, with practically no suggestions for concrete action. I believe that the government is open to criticism. I hope to put before it concrete proposals which I hope will be useful. At any rate they will be there for the government and the public to see and to judge.

The hon. member who preceded me in this debate (Mr. Whicher) blasted the government at great length, but I would suggest to him that it takes more to produce economic growth than simply to make a lot of noise and do a lot of desk-thumping. There was only one concrete suggestion in his budget that might stimulate economic growth. It was a good suggestion, it came out of the New Democratic programme as a matter of fact, and I will mention it myself a little later. But by itself it is quite inadequate. Much more than the hon. member suggested is required to restore growth to an acceptable level, and certainly much more is needed than merely mouthing generalities about the desirability of growth, with which I am sure everybody could agree.

With that preamble, Mr. Speaker, I will now proceed with my analysis of the budget for what it is worth, and of the economic situation in which this budget is produced.

Mr. Sopha: My daughter would like this better than Huckleberry Hound.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Provincial Treasurer has been at some pains to persuade the public that the budget is a new departure. We have a new and youthful looking hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) and a new and youthful looking economic czar. No doubt, many people expected that under the circumstances we would also have a new and youthful looking budget.

Unfortunately, even a superficial examination reveals that it is really just the same old budget as the hon. Provincial Treasurer presented last year and the year before and the year before that. In fact, it is decidedly in the hoary old tradition of the budgets which the former hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) presented regularly in this House before the hon. Provincial Treasurer assumed his present portfolio. If one took any of those old budgets and merely revised the figures upward, including the debt figures, one would have the present budget in all its essentials.

The basic policy of all those budgets was to drift with the tide.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I thought the hon. member was not going to be critical.

Mr. Bryden: On the contrary, I said I had criticisms to make, but I also have constructive suggestions which I will come to if the hon. leader of the Opposition will just be patient.

This was hardly an adequate approach to the responsibilities of government, but as long as the tide was flowing in the main, it was quite a pleasant avocation. All the government had to do was to congratulate itself on the growth that was taking place independently of it and to scurry around sufficiently to prevent developing shortages of social capital from resulting in complete collapse.

It is true that warning signs were appearing, and not least in the area of government finance. Gradually government surpluses declined until they became deficits, and the fact that the first deficit appeared right in the period of peak economic activity, that is in 1956 and 1957, might conceivably have given the government some food for thought.

It preferred, however, to avoid the travail of thought. It was easier to try to conceal the deficits by the reverse application of the formula which it had previously used to conceal its surpluses, and to drift along with the tide—right into the sharp recession of the past few years.

This, however, is water under the bridge. One could forgive the government its lack of foresight in the past if it were showing any disposition to learn the lessons of the past. Unfortunately, a study of the budget statement and of the monumental economic statement which preceded it reveals no such disposition at all. We have once again the same old complacency, the same old refusal to consider anything beyond the moment.

The tone of both the economic statement and the budget is one of self-congratulation on the fact that conditions are now somewhat better than they were a year ago. Heaven help us if they were not, because a year ago they were very bad indeed. There is still, however, the same basic failure to face reality as has been apparent in government statements in previous years.

The hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Macaulay), for example, exaggerates the present level of economic activity by failing to take account of rising prices and rising population in almost all his statistical series. If he presented his figures in terms of constant dollars per capita, as he surely should if he wants to make valid comparisons with previous years, the picture would be much less rosy than he paints it.

Moreover, he totally ignores the fact that almost all those who have studied the subject, other than Tory politicians, are convinced that the present economic revival is inherently weak and is not likely to be long-lived. There is currently some dispute as to whether the next downturn will come in the last quarter of this year or will be delayed until the first quarter of 1963, but few experts question that a downturn will surely come on the basis of any evidence now available.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Now that is not true.

Mr. Bryden: It certainly is true.

A study of Canadian economic development since the end of World War II indicates that we moved forward in three successive surges under the influence of three successive powerful stimuli.

First, there was the upsurge of 1945-1949. A large volume of unfilled demand which had accumulated under the restrictions of war was released, and in addition, there was powerful new demand from European countries whose productive equipment had been all but destroyed by war and which were now in the process of rebuilding. These forces produced rapid economic growth in Canada but by 1949 they were largely spent and our economy started to drift downward again.

We were rescued from this unhappy situation by the Korean war, which stimulated the second surge forward in our economy. Peace, however, ultimately broke out in that particular shooting war, and we again found ourselves drifting downward.

The third and most powerful surge forward came in 1955 and 1956. Rapid development of our natural resources, mainly by US concerns, produced a powerful investment boom in Canada. In fact, the boom was clearly excessive and ought to have been checked. Acute shortages developed resulting in strong inflationary pressures.

One of the most unfortunate by-products of this situation was that the development of essential social capital was seriously retarded. Municipalities found it almost impossible to obtain funds to provide even the most elementary services. We are now paying the price for this lack of foresight. The community has been starved of social capital. This has obviously undesirable consequences in terms of human welfare, and also has undoubtedly been a factor in depressing business activity.

No business can operate without the services the community provides. Severe congestion, lack of adequate transportation, water and sewage facilities and of low cost housing, the menace of air and water pollution, inadequate education resources, all help to increase the cost of doing business to a degree which cannot possibly be estimated in quantitative terms, but which is unquestionably substantial. In fact, lack of social capital may very well be the most important single factor contributing to a high and inflexible cost structure in Canada.

In the overall picture, the inevitable consequence of the excessive boom of 1956 and 1957 was the bust which came in 1957 and 1958. Liberal propagandists are now feverishly trying to create the impression that recessions are the special prerogative of the Tories. They hope everyone will forget the fact that the seeds of our present troubles were all sown before 1957, when the Liberals, not the Tories, were in power in Ottawa.

Their total failure to control the boom of 1955-1956, to spread investment of the day over a longer period of time and to allocate scarce investment funds according to something approaching a sensible system of social priorities was bound to result in collapse. Indeed, the downturn had already started while the Liberals were still in office, and they gave no indication that they had any clearer idea than the subsequent Conservative administration of how to deal with it.

It is not my purpose, however, to assess precise degrees of incompetence as between two incompetent administrations. It would take the wisdom of Solomon to do that. One could forget the errors of the past if there were any disposition to deal with the problems of the future in an intelligent and realistic way. Unfortunately, there is no evidence of that at all.

The government of Ontario, like the government of Canada, is content to bask in the reflected glory, such as it is, of the minor recovery we are now enjoying, without any thought about what comes after. This may be good politics in a federal election year, but it is bad economics, especially for a government that now professes to have a five-year plan.

Sooner or later we are going to have to face the fact that the dynamic forces that made for expansion in the decade or so following the war are no longer present, and there is no evidence at present of anything to replace them. These forces, it should be stated, were purely fortuitous. They were not in any sense the product of government policy either at Ottawa or Queen's Park. But at least they existed, and it was feasible, even if not sensible, for governments to drift along with them—as they did, both at Ottawa and Queen's Park.

Today we are in an entirely new situation, and a policy of drift, which never was good enough, is now entirely inadequate. Mr. William Lougheed, the Toronto economist—and an economist, I may say, who normally represents the business point of view; he is a very well qualified man but his associations are mainly with the business community—summed the situation up in this way at page 10 of his valuable new book, "Secondary Manufacturing Industry in the Canadian Economy."

From 1958 on it has become evident that the economy has used up the head of steam that formerly propelled it insistently forward. The growth rate is diminishing, and it is observable that boom periods are becoming shorter and recoveries from minor recessions longer and more troublesome.

Now, if I may interject for a minute, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) accused me a moment ago of being a crepe-hanger. I have no doubt that he would apply the same epithet to Mr. Lougheed. Indeed, I would take it that he would apply that epithet to any person who wants to discuss our present situation in any serious or realistic manner.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: The hon. member could get five economists to give the opposite view.

Mr. Bryden: But continuing from Mr. Lougheed, I would like to quote this:

Nothing appears at the present moment to be shaping up which would play a part similar to the conditions of the 1945-1949 period, or of the Korean War scare which followed, or of the 1955-1956 round of resource development and public investment.

Until some such stimulant as Mr. Lougheed referred to appears or is created, we will continue to limp along with chronic hard-core unemployment and unused capacity. There will undoubtedly be minor upturns from time to time but the long-term condition is bound to be one of stagnation.

Moreover, there is no reason to believe that we will be so lucky as we were in the past, when strong expansionary forces appeared spontaneously or fortuitously to compensate for our own lack of policy. On the contrary, all the evidence indicates that external forces will be working against us in many important respects.

The war-ravaged nations have now recovered and they are offering powerful competition. The development of the European Common Market and the probable adherence of Britain and other outer seven countries to it do not justify the immature squalling we have heard from Ottawa during the past year, but they certainly provide food for serious thought. The development of automation, both domestically and beyond our boundaries, is already creating doubts and fears and is bound to result in serious dislocations in the near future. A stagnant economy is not well equipped to deal with problems of this kind.

The lesson is obvious. If we cannot count on new expansionary forces to appear spontaneously, we must take positive steps to create them. In this respect, our failure of the past creates an opportunity for the future.

I have already referred to the shortage of social capital which has been allowed to develop in this country and province over the years. Let us remedy this deficiency with a bold, imaginative, co-ordinated programme of public investment—to build the roads and other transportation facilities, schools, hospitals, houses, parks and recreation areas, water and sewage works and power facilities we need so badly, and to eliminate forever the blight of slums and pollution. These are not mere make-work projects; they will create wealth as well as work for our people and strength for our country and province.

There is no shortage of wealth-creating projects to be undertaken. Our problem is to make a proper selection and to develop a programme that is both large enough and balanced enough to produce maximum results. The patch-and-paste type of public works programmes this province has carried on in the past and is still carrying on are not good enough.

It is not sufficient to dive in here, there and everywhere with makeshift programmes designed merely to prevent growing crises in various service areas from becoming calamities. A carefully planned, long-term programme of public investment, involving close co-operation by both the federal and provincial authorities, is clearly required.

I realize that talk of planned public investment conjures up visions of an undefined calamity vaguely described as "creeping socialism" in the minds of faint-hearted Tories in both Conservative and Liberal ranks. Perhaps these escapists may be induced to face reality by a voice from the business world, and for that reason I would like to quote another extract from the book of Mr. W. F. Lougheed to which I have already referred.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Does the hon. member agree with his general principle of attack?

Mr. Bryden: Oh, I think he has a very sound argument. It would be surprising if anyone agreed with everything he said, but he certainly has a very sound thesis and a very sound analysis. In my opinion, I think it is an excellent book. But I would like to read just one more sentence from it. This is in the summary which appears at the very beginning of the book and the page number is roman numeral vi:

The horror of creeping socialism [he says] is always with us and this fear is not without basis, yet we must face the fact that the economy is now suffering from creeping paralysis. This is the choice.

Public investment to compensate for inadequate private investment is the only choice sane men can make when faced with the alternative of creeping paralysis. Not only is it desirable in itself, but if undertaken on a sufficiently large scale, it will provide the stimulant to real growth which we now lack.

As it proceeds, new demands will be created for the products of private industry. The present excess capacity will disappear, and provided with new opportunities, private investment will revive. The result will be an accelerating growth of the economy.

By itself, however, this will not be good enough. We cannot afford to ignore the lessons of 1955-1956. It is imperative that in the future we avoid the uncontrolled kind of boom we had then. Our aim should be to stimulate steady and continuous growth, avoiding the pitfalls of unemployment on the one hand and inflation on the other. This requires planning.

The subject of economic and social planning is one that has always been dear to my heart, and I can assure the House that it is only with the greatest of self-restraint that I refrain from dealing with it in some detail now. I do so in the expectation that I may be able to express my ideas on this vital subject more fully under the estimates of The Department of Commerce and Development. For the present I prefer to devote my attention to the more immediate problem of restoring economic growth.

The budget discloses only two areas in which significant new public investment is contemplated.

The first is to provide for the extension of technical and vocational training facilities. The programme envisaged is substantial and very much needed.

It suffers, however, from the disadvantage of years of neglect by this government and the then Liberal government at Ottawa of the important problem of technical training. As a result, the present programme is very much of a shot-gun affair, blasted together without adequate foresight or planning to deal with an emergency that has now become desperate.

From an investment point of view it is useful, though by itself it is far from sufficient to meet the requirements of the day; but from the point of view of providing technical training in a rational and efficient manner, it leaves very much to be desired. Indications are that substantial waste will result from the wrong facilities being constructed in the wrong places and, if I may add, from the wrong courses being offered in many instances, and this could have been avoided by proper planning. This is a matter which

I hope my hon. colleagues and I will have an opportunity to deal with at another time.

The other new departure the government claims to have undertaken in the investment field relates to housing. The housing programme which was first announced by the hon. Prime Minister, is described in the budget statement as "a new and bold effort by the government to meet public housing needs in the light of the greatly changed conditions that now exist."

An hon. member: Bold and imaginative, too.

Mr. Bryden: The statement is bolder than the programme, I may say. In fact, I would say that it would take a lot of nerve to make such a statement in view of the nature of the programme. However, I will proceed.

This statement sounds wonderful, but one is entitled to be sceptical in view of the numerous announcements this government has made over the years of bold new housing programmes which in practice did not amount to anything. Perhaps the new hon. Prime Minister and the new economic czar have turned over a new leaf, but the evidence of the budget is not reassuring.

A little over $1 million is to be appropriated on current account for housing in the coming fiscal year, together with $5.6 million on capital account, making a total on all accounts of a little more than $6.6 million for this bold new housing programme. Over the past five years, annual appropriations for housing on current and capital account taken together ranged from a low of $5.776 million in 1958-1959 to a high of $9.673 million in 1959-1960.

In other words, this year's appropriations are of about the same magnitude as those for previous years. What, then, is so bold about the programme and what is so new?

It is true that in previous years the government actually spent only a fraction of the amounts appropriated. The appropriations were for window-dressing purposes only.

It is to be hoped that the appropriation will actually be spent in the coming fiscal year. If so, I agree something new will have been added. Nevertheless, the total appropriation amounts to only two-thirds of one per cent of the total budget.

If this is a "bold effort", I would hate to contemplate a timorous one. Clearly the government is not serious about either housing or investment.

I have already expressed the view that a massive programme of public investment is needed to restore to the economy the dynamism it now lacks. I have also indicated that such a programme will stimulate private investment and will be reinforced by it. The present situation is serious enough, however, that direct stimulants to private investment should also be considered.

In dealing with this subject, it is important in my opinion to distinguish between measures that have some reasonable prospect of achieving the desired result and those which will merely have the effect of making the rich richer and this is a very important area of debate at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

At the present time the community is being deluged with a flood of propaganda to the effect that the level of government spending and with it the burden of taxation in Canada are too high to permit satisfactory economic growth, and that if taxes on corporations and wealthy individuals were reduced, economic growth would be stimulated.

This mythology is the stock-in-trade of Conservative and Liberal speakers as well as many business leaders and editorial writers. It is repeated time after time, yet I have never seen a solitary shred of evidence to support it. On the contrary, available evidence points to a quite different conclusion.

The best available figures on rates of economic growth have been produced by the British National Institute of Economic and Social Research and I would like, Mr. Speaker, to refer to its Economic Review—that is a publication—for July, 1961. This publication showed that in the period between 1954 and 1959 Canada ranked tenth among the nations of the western world in terms of economic growth—Iron Curtain countries were excluded from the study. Ahead of us were Japan, Italy, Germany, France, Sweden, the Netherlands, Norway, Denmark and the United States, in that order.

Figures published in the United Nations Yearbook of National Accounts indicate that all of these countries except Japan and Italy had heavier burdens of taxation than Canada, and in most cases substantially heavier burdens. Moreover, the same publication shows that in the 1954-1959 period, about which we are talking, government spending increased at a faster rate in all but one of these countries than it did in Canada, and in most cases at a much faster rate. The only exception was the Netherlands.

Most of these countries, of course, have more extensive social security systems than

Canada, and this is a major reason for their higher levels of taxation and government spending. Their experience seems to indicate that, notwithstanding the scare propaganda of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, it is not necessary to starve old age pensioners and others in order to achieve a satisfactory rate of economic growth.

The theory that reduced income and corporation taxes will stimulate economic activity is based on the claim that corporations and wealthy individuals undertake most of the country's investment. If they have ample funds available, it is claimed, they will invest those funds in employment-creating projects. The solution to our difficulties, therefore, is to reduce the few progressive elements that now exist in our tax structure and to shift more and more of the burden of taxation from the rich to the poor, as this government has already done with its retail sales tax and as would still be the case with the Wintermeyer version of this sales tax.

This, of course, is a very comfortable theory for rich people and their spokesmen. If one is not poor himself, it is always nice to think that the way to save the country is to make the poor tighten their belts. Such a proposition may be acceptable to the Conservative and Liberal parties, which after all are essentially the parties of special privilege, but I can say quite categorically that it is not in accord with the ideas of social justice held by the New Democratic Party.

Moreover, it is not in accord with the known facts regarding our current economic difficulties in Canada and Ontario. Our problem is not a shortage of investment funds. It is a shortage of investment opportunities. Even the hon. Minister of Economics and Development has had to recognize that in a sentence that has already been quoted, but I think is worth quoting again. It appears on page 28 of his economic statement. "There is still excess capacity in many of our industries and until this is fully utilized there will be no large-scale investment undertaken in the private sector."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Now, I often disagree with the hon. Minister, but notwithstanding the immature chirping to my right from people who do not understand these problems thoroughly, I think he hit the nail right on the head with that sentence. There will be no large-scale investment in the private sector as long as we have the present excess capacity. Now let us face that fact and work from it.

The crux of our problem is that consumer demand for goods and services is inadequate to use to the full the productive capacity we already possess. Therefore, it does not matter how much money you try to put into the hands of corporations and private individuals, they will not invest in sufficient measure to take up the present slack in the economy, because they simply will not be able to find sufficient opportunities for profitable investment.

That surely is just plain common sense. No private individuals or corporations are going to invest unless they can see a reasonable opportunity for a profitable return on the investment.

To shift the tax burden from the rich to the poor will simply make matters worse, because it will reduce demand still further. I have made many criticisms of Ontario's new sales tax, which I will not repeat here, but my major criticism is that it necessarily reduces demand to some extent, and to the extent that it does, it helps to intensify our economic difficulties. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that is a basic economic objection with respect to the timing of the tax which has never been answered by the government or the Liberal Party, both of whom favour this tax.

The futility of liberalized corporation tax arrangements as a method of stimulating investment under present conditions has been demonstrated by the federal government's experience over the past two years with its provisions for accelerated depreciation. That experience was well summarized in the following paragraph which appeared in a front page story in the Toronto Globe and Mail on February 28, 1962:

Trade officials believe that the tax incentive devices introduced in the two previous budgets, which consist mainly of accelerated depreciation measures, have had only a limited effect in encouraging the expansion of Canadian industry required to provide an ever-increasing demand for labour.

Mr. Sopha: Is the hon. member suggesting we are advocating liberalized corporation taxes? The hon. member should stop building these straw men and knocking them down and proving he is such a great—

Mr. Bryden: I have not had anything to do with straw men at all. I leave that department entirely to the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha). He is an expert at it.

The hon. member for Sudbury drivels on and on in this House. Admittedly when he has the floor his efforts are pretty poor, so he tries to improve upon them when other people have the floor.

Mr. Sopha: I am not immodest like the hon. member for Woodbine and the hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Macaulay), I admit that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would like to carry my argument a stage further. Measures which merely liberalize corporation tax arrangements will not only not produce the desired result in the current situation, but they are positively harmful in that they intensify another serious difficulty facing us at the present time. I refer to the increasing concentration of private investment funds in the hands of a relatively small number of corporations.

The days when new development was financed mainly by placing new issues on the stock market are long departed. Such development is now usually financed by corporations, primarily out of depreciation and depletion allowances and secondarily, and I may say to a very considerable extent, out of undistributed profits.

Canadians as individuals are frequently accused of being unwilling to take risks. In my opinion, this accusation is unjust. Their problem is not that they are unwilling to invest in risk-taking enterprises but that they have little opportunity to do so. The average citizen, unless he wants to take a wild gamble on moose pasture, has little option but to put his savings into bonds or insurance policies or stocks that are already trading on the market and whose purchase does not represent any new investment.

Private investment is now becoming the prerogative not of people but of faceless and soulless corporations. This has led Eric W. Kierans, president of the Montreal and Canadian Stock Exchanges, "to pause and to muse on the future of a capitalistic system that has no further need for more capitalists."

The result is that monopoly control is rapidly being extended and tightened. Relatively small groups of managers of increasingly powerful corporations are more and more taking over decision-making functions within our economy.

When decisions are to be made as to whether to invest or how to invest the funds of the company, these managers quite naturally determine their course according to what they consider to be in the best interests of their respective companies. But the best interests of a particular corporation do not necessarily correspond at any given time with the best interests of the community as a whole.

Mr. Sopha: Would the hon. member permit a question? I would like to ask the hon. member, with his permission, sir, whether in Saskatchewan the corporations that ran the leather tannery, the shoe factory, the paint spray company, the woollen mill, the housing corporation, the box factory and the sodium sulphate plant, whether those corporations were faithless and soulless?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): They were boycotted by the rest of the country.

Mr. Bryden: I think it would be rather dangerous to confuse the hon. member with facts, Mr. Speaker, so I will ignore his perfectly frivolous question.

The problem is compounded in Canada by the fact that most of our large corporations are controlled from outside the country. We are thus in the unenviable position where many important decisions affecting our welfare may be made from outside the country on the basis of factors that have little or nothing to do with our own best interests.

I submit that everything possible should be done to reverse this trend. I believe it is in the public interest that power to make investment decisions in the private sector be spread as widely as possible.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, after listening to the reactions of some of the hon. gentlemen in both of the other groups to what I have been saying up to now, I have come to the conclusion that I and my associates are perhaps the only exponents of free enterprise in this House. These other fellows apparently are in favour of bureaucratic corporations controlling the country.

Not only will this spread of investment decision help to curb monopoly power, but it will make for greater flexibility and, if I may use this word, Mr. Speaker, greater venturesomeness in investment activity. The inherent conservatism—and I think one could use both a large and a small "C" in this particular context—of the large bureaucratic corporations is notorious and inevitable. It is simply the product of its size. It is not a ground for criticism, but there it is, the conservatism is there.

The fact that such large corporations have so large a say in private investment decisions is in my opinion an important factor holding back growth at the present time.

In the light of this analysis I would like to propose a number of measures which I believe will genuinely stimulate private investment and thereby reinforce the programme of public investment which I have already said is essential to full economic recovery.

My first suggestion is that the taxes on corporation profits which are distributed to the shareholders in dividends should be reduced—and I would say significantly reduced, perhaps even with the ultimate objective of eliminating them altogether—provided that taxes on undistributed profits are retained at least at their present level and preferably increased, and provided also that the present provisions regarding depreciation and depletion allowances are substantially tightened up.

Mr. Sopha: What is the hon. member's objection? What jurisdiction does this Legislature have over that?

Mr. Bryden: I had understood that the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) took up the time of instructors at Osgoode Hall, and if he did not learn from them that provinces have powers in the field of direct taxation, I cannot take responsibility for his education at this time.

Mr. Sopha: What association have I with Osgoode Hall? I graduated from the other place.

Mr. Bryden: The effect of the provision that I have just put forward would be to induce corporations to disgorge at least some of their retained profits. The shareholder would begin to come into his own again, and why shouldn't he? Theoretically, he is supposed to own the company.

What is more important, potential investment funds would be spread more widely, and investment decisions would be more varied and flexible.

The company itself would suffer no harm in the event that it had expansion plans of its own. In all probability it would no longer have enough funds in its own treasury to carry out its plans, but that would hardly—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: And this would not affect the numbers of shares?

Mr. Bryden: I think if dividends went up that maybe the value of the shares would increase.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If dividends went down, and the hon. member had forced this kind of thing on us—

Mr. Bryden: I am proposing a distribution of profits, a greater distribution than now takes place. I know that the hon. Minister has trouble with arithmetic, but that is going to make dividends go up. The money that I want to get out of the hands of the corporations I suggest should go into the hands of the shareholders. I think that would create a very desirable element of flexibility in our economic structure and in our investment structure.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I see. Then what does the company use to invest?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): They may borrow, like they used to do, in days gone by, instead of getting it all—

Mr. Bryden: In all probability, a company that wanted to expand would not have enough funds in its own treasury to carry out its plans.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I would like to draw the attention of hon. members once again to the fact that one speaker at a time is quite sufficient in this Chamber. It is most difficult for me, and I am sure many of the other hon. members, to hear what the speaker is saying when there is all the undercurrent and interjection.

Mr. Bryden: I was trying to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the fact that a corporation is not in a position to finance its expansion entirely out of its own treasury should not be regarded as a disadvantage. My suggestion is that such a company can readily remedy the deficiency by going to the market. I would like to ask these hon. gentlemen, who claim that they are exponents of the free-enterprise system, what is wrong with asking a company to meet the test of the market, which most of them can now escape?

Mr. Sopha: The hon. member could not blame that speech on anybody else. He did write that.

Mr. Bryden: I would further suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government would not suffer any loss of revenue under my plan. It is true that the revenue from corporation taxes would be reduced but this would be compensated for and probably more than compensated for by increased revenues from the income taxes paid by the people receiving increased dividends. I am assuming, of course, that the present dividend tax credit would be eliminated, but this seems to be a fair assumption since there could be no conceivable argument for the retention of that credit under the proposal I am now making.

It is true that if the provincial government adopted this proposal on its own it could very well lose revenue with the compensating gain going to the federal government because of the way in which the corporation and income tax revenues are divided up. I believe, however, that in this as in other proposals I will make, there should be close co-operation between the federal and provincial governments and I am satisfied that they can jointly work out a plan that would be of benefit to both the country and the province and would not have any unfortunate consequences for the treasuries of either the federal government or the provincial government.

The next suggestion I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is one that is now causing a fair degree of public discussion, even to the point where the financial critic of the Liberal Party has picked it up. As I said earlier, it was the only concrete suggestion he made in quite a lengthy and vigorous speech.

The proposal, as I indicated at the time, came from the programme of the New Democratic Party and I would like to refer to page 6 of that programme which has been published in a booklet form and which I think—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What date was that?

Mr. Bryden: This was adopted at the founding convention of the New Democratic Party held in Ottawa at the end of July and the beginning of August. It represented a digest of documents that had been circulated a year or more before then and had been under discussion within the New Democratic Party for considerably more than a year prior to August, 1961. But I am now taking the official statement which was adopted by the convention.

In that programme the New Democratic Party advocates the establishment of a Canadian development fund "to give Canadians a greater opportunity to invest in the future of their own country." I believe that such a fund should be set up and I believe—apparently this is now a matter of unanimity as far as principle, at any rate, is concerned within this House—I believe that we should have a similar fund in Ontario.

I would like to make certain suggestions, however, as to the composition of this fund, because I am not quite sure if the specific ideas I have in mind are as readily acceptable to other hon. members. Perhaps they are, perhaps they are not, but I would like to put my ideas on the record. I believe that the fund should consist of money contributed in part by the government, together with funds subscribed by the public on a share capital basis.

Such a fund would provide the government with some of the capital required for development purposes. I really do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that it could be stretched as far as the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) apparently thinks, but, as I indicated earlier, the hon. gentlemen on the Liberal benches are always mesmerised by funds. They seem to think that they can use the same dollar in many different ways provided they have it in a fund. However, I do agree that it would provide some of the capital required for development purposes.

It would not necessarily be used for the purposes of public enterprise, although that possibility should certainly not be ruled out; it would also be available to assist private enterprises of merit and joint public-private enterprises. Above all—and as a matter of fact, this is a feature of it to which particular attention was called in the federal programme of the New Democratic Party and the one which appeals to me the most—it would give the man of limited means an opportunity he does not now possess to invest a little bit of his savings in Ontario and in Ontario's development.

In the past the government has boasted loudly and at length about the development of Ontario, but essentially what it has been talking about is the Oshawa-Toronto-Hamilton-Niagara complex and a few other isolated spots in the province. A study of the Ontario Survey—I think that is the title, it is hard to tell from this frontispiece exactly what the title is, but I believe it is Ontario Survey—published by The Ontario Department of Economics in 1961—a very excellent piece of work, I may say, one for which I congratulate the department and the hon. Minister.

An hon. member: Is there a picture of the hon. Minister in it?

Mr. Bryden: Very likely, but I missed that part. I was more interested in some of the more thrilling sections of the publication. A study of that survey indicates that those parts of Ontario which have similar economic characteristics to those of the less advanced parts of Canada are similarly retarded in their development.

After all, this growth that took part in some sections was not produced by the government. This is demonstrated by the fact that they were not able to produce it in other parts of the province.

In other words, the development that has taken place in the province in the past 15 years has been localized and has really had nothing to do with government policy. Unfortunately, it has been dazzling enough to blind the government to serious problems of imbalance. On the one hand, slow strangulation is rapidly inflating costs in the metropolitan complex, while other parts of the province are suffering from underdevelopment.

Concessions on corporation taxes are devices that can be used legitimately to counter this trend, and I would urge the provincial and federal governments to get together in working out a programme along these lines.

Now, I do not think they disagree with me, why do they not do something about it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Is the hon. member quoting this, or is it his opinion on it?

Mr. Bryden: Anything I say is usually my opinion unless I specify otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Let us be fair, it does not sound anything more like the hon. member than the man in the moon. Is he talking about what he is saying or is he quoting somebody?

Mr. Bryden: This is completely in accord with my ideas of economic planning.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: As of when?

Mr. Bryden: As of a good many years ago. And in accordance with views that I have expressed in this House and other places before. Tax incentives by themselves are probably not enough—they undoubtedly should be supplemented by direct subsidies and public enterprise in appropriate circumstances—but they will certainly be helpful.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is a complete reversal of policy.

Mr. Bryden: The great difficulty that the hon. Minister of Economics always suffers under is that he never pays attention, or rarely pays attention, to what anybody else says. He attributes to other people his own twisted version of what he thinks they ought to say, and then he blasts them for that. Anything he has ever attributed to us has not even a coincidental resemblance to what we have said in the past. I am grateful, Mr. Speaker, that at long last I appear to be contributing something to the enlightenment of the hon. Minister.

Coming to another and related point, I believe that concessions on corporation taxes can also be used to encourage enterprises subject to heavy seasonal unemployment to spread their operations more evenly over the year. I would suggest that the federal and provincial governments should work out a joint programme of rebates on corporation taxes for off-season production undertaken by firms in specified seasonal industries.

An hon. member: Where did the hon. member get that?

Mr. Bryden: It is all in our programme. The only trouble is that these hon. gentlemen go around spreading the most grotesque falsehoods about our programme to the point where they begin to believe them themselves, and the truth comes to them as a great surprise.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. member stood in this House and he advocated increasing taxation on natural resource industries.

Mr. Bryden: I still do.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Now I will appeal to the hon. members for the third time, in one afternoon. I will point out that the budget debate is just starting and all hon. members will have an opportunity to speak on it. At this point, in the early part of the debate, we more or less set the stage for the entire debate and I am sure that when hon. members themselves wish to speak, they will wish to obtain order. As a matter of fact, I find that some of the worst offenders, as far as I am concerned, are some that insist on order from the Speaker when they are speaking themselves.

I would ask the hon. member to proceed.

Mr. Bryden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I will not attempt to penetrate the fog surrounding the hon. member for Sudbury, Mr. Speaker, but I would merely mention that what I am talking about now has nothing to do with revenues from natural resources. I am talking about problems of seasonal employment which undoubtedly affect the resource industries to some extent, but it is a much more widespread problem than that.

Mr. Sopha: If the Speaker permitted me, I would say to the hon. member, do not try to weasel out of it.

Mr. Bryden: I would be very happy at any time to repeat what I have said previously about taxation of resources, but frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think I have stated my views on that a good many times in this House and I do not really think it is necessary to repeat them. I am quite sure that hon. members are familiar with them.

There are some other matters, however, that I would like to deal with. The final suggestion I have to make is one of somewhat more long-term import. I would propose that the federal and provincial governments should work out a plan to induce private industry to deposit part of its retained earnings in special accounts, which would be released for investment only at times to be determined by an appropriate government planning agency. The inducement given to industry to co-operate in such a project would be reduction or elimination of the corporation tax on any profits deposited in the special accounts.

Experience in Sweden has demonstrated that such a device can be very useful in levelling out the business cycle. In periods when private investment is too high and threatening to produce inflation, private companies can be induced to defer some of their plans. Subsequently when private investment begins to fall off, the deferred investment can be brought into play to offset the natural trend towards reduced economic activity and rising unemployment.

I realize that there is no need to induce industry to defer investment at the present time. We should, however, be looking to the future. If the federal and provincial governments would undertake the large-scale programme of public investment which I am advocating, we can reasonably look forward to a time in the not-too-distant future when strong inflationary pressures will again be present in the economy. It is only common sense to start laying the groundwork now for plans to offset those forces when they appear.

Certainly, a plan of the type I have just outlined would have been useful in controlling the boom of 1955-1956 and the subsequent recession.

I believe that the various proposals I have made, when taken together, will solve our number one domestic problem in Canada today—the problem of inducing a sufficiently high rate of growth to eliminate unemployment.

Basically our problem is lack of demand for the goods and services we are already able to produce. I think that almost all economists agree that increased investment is the most effective stimulant of demand. Because of the so-called multiplier effect, any given amount of money spent on investment will have a much more powerful influence than the same amount spent directly on consumption. In the present situation, however, private investment itself is insufficient because of the insufficiency of demand.

The only way to get out of this vicious circle is to use public investment to compensate for inadequate private investment. This will stimulate private investment since it will provide opportunities which do not now exist. In addition, I have proposed that certain direct stimulants for private investment should also be provided.

The measures I have proposed are instruments of planning. In view of the ill-informed charge often made that planning necessarily involves large-scale regimentation, I would like to point out that not one of the proposals I have made would involve any compulsion of any kind whatever. They would provide stimuli and offer inducements and incentives, but they would not require anybody to do anything.

The point is that each of them is part of a co-ordinated programme which, in turn, is based on a careful analysis of the exact nature of the problem facing us. This in my view is the essence of democratic planning, and, as I indicated earlier, I expect that I will have an opportunity to elaborate those views at a later time.

Mr. Speaker, I have completed that phase of my address which relates to the budget and to the economic situation in the province. There is, however, one other matter unrelated to the budget itself, which I would like to deal with, and perhaps, since it is now 6 o'clock, that could be deferred until after the recess.

It being 6 of the clock, the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 6, 1962

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, when I left off just before the recess, I had completed my remarks that were specifically directed to the budget and to the economic situation in which the budget is presented.

The budget debate is traditionally a time when private members can call attention to grievances. There are a number of grievances that I could feel quite justified in bringing to the attention of the House but, in view of the amount of time I have already taken in this debate, I will confine myself to one which in my opinion is of such major importance that no opportunity should be missed to deal with it.

I am referring to the situation existing in the Metropolitan Toronto jail, otherwise known as the Don Jail. I heard the statement made, before the orders of the day, on this subject by the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Haskett). I am happy to note that after years and years of effort on the part of many people to move the government to take some action to remedy a totally ridiculous situation, at last under the new hon. Minister a step is being taken. At least, I would judge—I have not had time to study his statement—but I would judge a step has been taken to remove the employees from the totally impossible situation they were in where, year after year, year in and year out, for about 10 years, action on their legitimate and very urgent grievances was never taken, because the province of Ontario passed the buck to the city of Toronto, or the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, the municipality passed it back to the province.

And so it went, back and forth, no action ever taken, the employees admitted on all sides to be grossly underpaid, without proper procedures for dealing with grievances, without proper procedures for negotiating reasonable working conditions. I would judge from the statement of the hon. Minister that this situation is now remedied and the jurisdiction turned over entirely to the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Reform Institutions): If I may correct the hon. member; about to be.

Mr. Bryden: About to be, yes. I think that will be beneficial to the employees because the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, I think, has a pretty good record in labour-management relations and it pays reasonably good wages. I am certain that when these employees get to deal with the Metro council they will at least have their association recognized—if it still exists—and that is a point I will deal with in a moment. They will be able to negotiate some sort of a collective agreement which will, I trust and I feel sure, provide for quite substantial wage increases which are long overdue.

So that is a constructive step in a situation which had come to appear almost hopeless.

But I would like to state, Mr. Speaker, that it does not by any means remedy the injustice—

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, could we please draw your attention to the squabbling and arguments that are going on to my left. I am close to my colleague but I can hardly hear him myself. Would you call these gentlemen to order so that we can hear the fine presentation the hon. member is making?

Mr. Bryden: I would like to state, Mr. Speaker, that the step that the hon. Minister announced today, though valuable, still does not wipe out the gross injustice that was perpetrated in this institution over the past few months.

It came as a matter of surprise and regret to many of us to discover not long ago that the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) had blatantly lined himself up on the side of the Royal York Hotel and the Canadian Pacific Railway in their clear attempt to smash a union of employees of the Royal York Hotel. This was shocking to many of us but after a little reflection, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I found it was not so surprising after all; because, when you get right down to it, the government itself was engaged in what was nothing more than an attempt to smash an association of employees in Metro Toronto jail.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Well, there is an old quotation to the effect that there is no use in crying "peace, peace" when there is no peace. And peace cannot be based on injustice. A fundamental injustice took place at the Don Jail that has not been rectified; and as far as I am concerned, there will be no peace until it has been rectified.

It began when an employee of that institution—perhaps it began a little earlier than that. Some time last summer, I think in July, the government arbitrarily removed from the employees of that institution the grievance procedure which they had gained for themselves after very long and arduous efforts, and which was the only concession they ever had managed to get. This was arbitrarily taken away from them, so they were left again completely defenceless as they had been before. Then, back two or three months ago, an employee of that institution committed what apparently was the unforgivable crime of dyeing his hair.

This became a matter of great moment in the institution; it reached beyond the particular employee concerned and by a curious coincidence, Mr. Speaker, in no time at all the president of the employees' association in that institution, which is a branch of the Civil Service Association of Ontario, found himself involved in this matter.

As far as I have been able to determine, the sum total of his action was to carry out what I think would be quite properly regarded as the duty of a president of an employees' association—to relay from the employee who was under the gun to the association information that this employee was under the gun. For this heinous offence, the president of the association, Mr. James Keatings, was suspended and subsequently was dismissed.

An hon. member: Good.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): That is a typical Tory remark.

Mr. Bryden: This, I would call to the attention of the House, is a very ancient device. If you want to smash a union or an association, fire the person who is the leading figure in the association. Mr. James Keatings, as everyone knows, was for a long time the spearhead of the association in the Don Jail; he was the man who provided leadership to the other employees, and an opportunity was seized to get rid of him. This is a very old union-busting device.

We hear many suggestions from the government benches at this moment that what I am saying is "bosh". Is that one of the words I heard? I do not know, but words to that effect. So I would like to put it on a broader basis than merely my "say so".

I have here an article which appeared in the Toronto Telegram for January 9, 1962, written by Mr. Frank Tumpene. Now, my observation is that Mr. Tumpene is a man who, temperamentally, I think, is inclined in the main to support the Conservative position. He is, I think, a man of independent judgment; but I think his temperament tends in the Conservative direction. That is his business and he is quite entitled to his views, in my opinion. But I think that should be borne in mind as we hear just what Mr. Tumpene had to say about this disgraceful episode at the Don Jail. The heading of his article is: "What Goes On Here?" and I am going to read the whole article, because I think it sums up the situation very well:

This business of the jail guard who dyed his hair has ceased to be a joke.

The affair began with a light-hearted discussion of whether a man with grey hair has the same right as a woman to dye his hair. It has now gone far beyond that.

As a consequence of the situation, two other guards at the jail have been fired, the guard with the dyed hair has been suspended for 10 days, and the public is confused about the whole issue.

As far as the public is concerned, one man has been suspended over a triviality and two others have been deprived of their livelihoods for speaking on his behalf. I can hardly believe that is the whole story; but if it is not, then what is? The Department of Reform Institutions owes the public a full explanation of this matter, an explanation that will be frank and not evasive.

And if I may interject here, Mr. Speaker, we have had no such explanation as yet.

One of the guards who was dismissed has two children, the other has three. To fire men with children depending on them is a serious matter at any time. In the present instance, it seems outrageous.

Any reasonable person recognizes that an institution like the Toronto jail can only be operated with strict discipline and rules that must be obeyed. Nor is it necessary to discuss every internal personnel problem in public.

Nevertheless, the case of the guard with dyed hair received publicity through the entire country. The jail authorities may no longer plead that it is a private matter that should be handled quietly. It has become a public matter.

The public is suspicious. What is going on at the Toronto jail? Are men fired to satisfy the stuffed-shirt dignity of their superiors?

One guard is said to have been fired for telling the press about his colleague who was threatened with dismissal for dyeing his hair. The other guard lost his job for failing to answer questions at the inquiry into the matter.

What were the nature of the questions he refused to answer? This man was president of a branch of a civil service association, and the strong implication is that he was fired for union activity.

I repeat that I am quoting Mr. Tumpane, these are not my words. He goes on to say:

If he was not—that is, if the man was not fired for union activity:

—then I, as one citizen, would like to be assured that he was not, and would like the assurance supported by facts.

The three guards involved in this matter have forfeited any right to privacy. They were the ones who brought the matter themselves before the tribunal of public opinion. If their superiors have any further evidence against them, evidence that will convince the public of the justice of their dismissals, the authorities should reveal what it is.

All that has emerged so far bears a strong resemblance to pure malice, as if the authorities in The Department of Reform Institutions had declared: "Make us look ridiculous by telling that story to the press, will you? Well, we'll show you. We'll fire you."

Finally—and this issue has almost been lost sight of—is it against the rules of The Department of Reform Institutions for a male employee to dye his grey hair black? If it is, why is it?

And, as far as I'm concerned, it will not suffice in reply to say that it's because the jail governor doesn't like men who dye their hair black.

The man who should be answering these questions is not the jail governor, nor the Deputy Minister of Reform Institutions, both of whom are employees themselves. The man who should be answering the questions is the Hon. Irwin Haskett, the Minister of Reform Institutions, who has had practically nothing to say so far.

I think we can update this and bring it to the present date; he still has had practically nothing to say—in fact I do not remember him saying anything.

And then the final sentence in Tumpane's article:

It is time for him to start talking.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Does the hon. member know where this should have been raised? In the estimates of The Department of Reform Institutions.

Mr. Bryden: Well, the estimates have not come up yet but maybe we will raise it there too if the hon. Minister wishes.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read into the record a written statement of Mr. James Keatings, who is one of the men who was fired, the man who was the president of the local branch of the civil service association. This statement reads as follows:

I, James Keatings, age 29 years, of 61 Langley Avenue, Toronto, a guard employed at the Metro Toronto Jail will state:

On Thursday, 14th December 1961, I reported for duty at the jail for the eleven p.m. to seven a.m. shift at approximately 10 p.m. On entering the guardroom I overheard a discussion between a number of guards and I gathered that they were discussing the position of a guard, Mr. T. B. Keatinge.

One of the difficulties in this matter, Mr. Speaker, is the confusion of names. The man who dyed his hair was Mr. Keatinge; the man who was president of the branch of the association is Mr. Keatings. Mr. Keatings' statement says:

I gathered that they were discussing the position of a guard, Mr. T. B. Keatinge, who had apparently been before the governor because he had dyed his hair.

At 10.45 p.m. I was making my way to my corridor when I passed Mr. Keatinge, who stopped me and handed me a letter and requested that I pass it along to the proper authorities at the Civil Service Association of Ontario.

At 8.30 a.m., Friday, December 15, I delivered the letter to Mr. Harold Bowen, Executive Secretary of the CSAO. During the weekend 16-17 December, I received a number of calls from Mr. Keatinge, requesting advice, and in each case I referred him to the CSAO head office.

On Thursday, December 19, 1961, I reported for duty at the jail at 10.40 p.m. I was then informed by Mr. A. Grey, Chief Turnkey, that Mr. Frost, Assistant Deputy Governor, wanted to see me in his office. I reported to the office and on entering I saw Mr. Frost seated at the desk, and Mr. Garrett, another Chief Turnkey, was standing nearby.

Mr. Frost then said: "You are ordered to appear before the chief inspector at 3 p.m. tomorrow, Wednesday, December 20." I asked him to repeat the statement and he did so and I said: "Mr. Frost, I regret I cannot make it at that time, I have a pre-set appointment which I cannot alter." Mr. Frost then replied: "I am only the message boy around here." I then said: "You are aware that I am on night shift; I have been given insufficient time to make myself available; am I not supposed to sleep?" He then replied: "Well that's that, I have given you the message." I then left the room and commenced my regular duties.

At 2.45 p.m., Wednesday, December 20, I presented myself at the jail. Two guards were outside the office occupied by the inspectors, Mr. Moore and Mr. H. Clarke. Mr. V. Hughes, who was acting as escorting officer, told me that I would be going in after the others. The two waiting guards were clear at approximately 3.15 p.m., and at 3.40 p.m., Mr. Jacobs, inspector, beckoned me into the room. I entered and saw Mr. Wright, Chief Inspector, seated at the Governor's desk. I noticed a recording machine before him together with a number of press-clippings.

He reminded me of the powers of an inspector regarding inquiries, and he then asked me if I would be willing to take the oath. I agreed, and he then switched on the recorder and after administering the oath, and identifying myself, he asked me if I was in fact the president of Branch 91 of the Civil Service Association of Ontario. I said that I was. He then drew my attention to the press-clippings which contained three photographs of guard Simonson. I had previously seen these photographs in the Telegram.

He then asked me if I had been approached in any way with regard to Mr. T. B. Keatinge, and I replied: "Sir, my involvement with regards this incident is as follows. Mr. Keatinge approached me and handed me a statement relating to his incident, and asked me to pass it along to the proper authorities at the civil service association, which I did. That is the sum total of my involvement in this affair." Mr. Wright replied: "Mr. Keatinge made a phone call to you prior to appearing before me, and you told him not to answer any questions. Is this correct?" I replied: "That is not correct, and may I add that I have made my statement under oath, with regards my implication and involvement in this matter, and I cannot add anything to it."

He then asked me if I could give any information regarding the publicity given to this incident, and I replied: "Sir, I respectfully decline, and I repeat I have made my statement." The chief inspector then said: "Mr. Keatings, are you aware that as chief inspector I have the power to carry out such an inquiry under The Jails Inspection Act, I would like to remind you of the seriousness of the situation, and grant you five minutes to reconsider." I replied: "Thank you for your consideration, I have no desire to reconsider, and again state that I have made my statement, and have nothing further to add. I respectfully decline and again I repeat I have made my statement."

The chief inspector then said, "Mr. Keatings, are you aware that as chief inspector I have the power to carry out such an inquiry under The Jails Inspection Act. I would like to remind you of the seriousness of the situation, and again grant you five minutes to reconsider." I replied: "Thank you for your consideration, I have no desire to reconsider, and again state that I have made my statement and have nothing further to add. I respectfully decline to make any further comment."

Mr. Wright then read for approximately one minute from The Jails Inspection Act. When he had finished I said: "Thank you, sir, but on the advice of the association I have nothing further to add." He then again offered me five minutes to reconsider, and I again thanked him, and declined. He then drew my attention to the seriousness of the situation, and stated that he had no alternative but to suspend me. I replied: "That is your decision, sir, I have given my statement under oath, with regards all I know in this matter." He then said: "I am sorry Mr. Keatings, you are suspended until this inquiry is completed." I thanked him and left the jail.

I have read the above statement before signing and have found it correct.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): Where did the hon. member get that?

Mr. Bryden: I got it from Mr. Keatings.

Mr. Simonett: Under oath?

Mr. Bryden: No, it is not under oath, but perhaps he should be asked, along with some others, to make a statement under oath.

Mr. Simonett: He must have a good memory.

Mr. Bryden: Well, in reference to the crack that he had a good memory, apparently implying that he was fabricating some of the story, I think from knowing him reasonably well that he is the careful and intelligent type of man who would make very extensive notes of an interview of this kind.

Mr. Simonett: We will accept your word.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Does the hon. member know him? Probably that is where all the trouble came from.

Mr. Bryden: I am acquainted with him.

An hon. member: That does not help him any.

Mr. Bryden: I am proud to say that I have tried to bring the situation at the Don Jail to the attention of the public and the authorities on many occasions in the past, and naturally in that work I have become acquainted with Mr. Keatings.

Now, here is a further statement from Mr. Keatings, which I think at least in part is relevant to the matter under discussion, and I would therefore like to read some of it.

On Friday, January 5, 1962, at 10 p.m., Mr. Dougall phoned me at home and asked me to come in and see him the next morning, Saturday, January 6, 1962, at 10:30 a.m.

The hon. members will realize that at this time Mr. Keatings was under suspension and therefore was not regularly reporting for duty.

By telephone to T. B. Keatinge and Mr. T. Simonson, I discovered that they, too, were to report at 10.00 a.m. and 11.00 respectively; we agreed to go together. The following morning, Saturday, January 6, we entered the jail at 10.00 a.m. At 10.15 a.m., Mr. T. B. Keatinge went into the governor's office; he came out at 10.18 a.m.

I passed him and went in. As I entered, Mr. Dougall was standing talking to Mr. Woodside, assistant governor. The governor looked at me and after passing the time of morning he said he was not going to answer any questions I may have or discuss anything with me, but that he was only going to read a letter to me from the Minister of Reforms, Mr. Haskett. He did so and its context stated that I was dismissed for flagrant contravention of The Jails Inspection Act, and my dismissal was retroactive to the date of my suspension, December 20, 1961.

I asked Mr. Dougall if I could have the letter, he said no. I then asked for a copy, and this was denied. I then asked if I at least had the right to read it. This was allowed, and I noted the signature was A. Graham, Deputy Minister. I left the office and Mr. Simonson went in, and came out in approximately three minutes.

There is a little more but it is not of any particular consequence. I think the substance of the matter is now before the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that in a jail it is necessary in certain situations to adopt rather arbitrary procedures in the interests of security. Emergencies arise from time to time where security becomes the paramount interest and other matters take second place. But there was no issue of security involved here. The procedures that are provided to deal with security problems were abused, in this instance, to deprive employees of their democratic right to a fair hearing. The tribunal before which Mr. Keatings appeared was nothing but a "Kangaroo Court," acting under legal provisions that were not designed to deal with such a situation under any circumstances.

It was an extraordinary procedure that should only have been adopted in an extraordinary situation. This certainly was not an extraordinary situation, except perhaps with respect to the extraordinary stupidity of the department; but as far as any matter at issue was concerned, surely this man, and all three of these men, were entitled to a fair and reasonable hearing. They were entitled to be represented by someone from their association, or any other spokesmen whom they wished to name.

In fact, it appears ridiculous that they should ever have been hauled up on the carpet at all; but if they were, surely they were entitled to ordinary protection. Surely they were entitled to bring in anything they wanted, to make any statements they wanted and to refrain from making statements if they wanted; and surely they were entitled to protection from being badgered by a superior officer with disciplinary authority, to make statements that they, in good conscience, could not make.

Mr. Keatings says that he told the gentleman time after time that he had told him everything that he knew about the matter. Now why should it not have been left at that? Why should he be pushed, intimidated into stating something more, into making statements of which he had no knowledge, presumably. This sort of thing, Mr. Speaker, should not be tolerated; and the fact that the jurisdiction is now to be transferred to Metro council does not wash out this terrible injustice. I believe that action should be taken to remedy it. I think these men should be reinstated—all of them, with full pay back to the date of their original suspension, unless—as Mr. Tumpane has suggested, the department, and in particular the hon. Minister, can bring out information that has not been brought to light as yet.

A long time has passed since these men were suspended, and since two of them were dismissed. As a matter of fact, at the time of the dismissal I wrote a letter on the subject to the hon. Prime Minister of the province. I may say my letter got the same consideration as all correspondence that I send to hon. Ministers of the Crown, it was not even acknowledged. But I sent it to him, nevertheless, and I would like to read it to the House now. It is to a slight degree dated, but substantially, I think, contains a valid point:

The purpose of this letter is to propose to you—

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): What is the date?

Mr. Bryden: The date is January 8, 1962, just a couple of days after these men were notified of the disciplinary action against them, at the time the information about it appeared in the press.

The purpose of this letter is to propose to you formally that a Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario be appointed to conduct a public inquiry into the question of labour relations at the Metropolitan Toronto Don Jail. It is public knowledge that there has been serious discontent among the employees of this institution for a long time, over such matters as rates of pay, grievance procedures, etc. The matter is now brought to a head by the dismissal of guards James Keatings and

A. V. Simonson, and the suspension of Keatinge without right of appeal, for what appeared to be completely trivial reasons.

The case of James Keatings is particularly alarming since he is the president of the employees' association at the jail, and it is difficult to escape the conclusion that his dismissal is part of an attempt to smash the association by intimidation. I submit to you that public confidence and harmonious employer-employee relations can be restored only by a full public inquiry, and by the remedial action which is found by such an inquiry to be necessary.

And I would repeat this proposal now, Mr. Speaker. I think the situation has reached the point where it is not sufficient merely to provide these people with an appeal. As a matter of fact, under intense public pressure, the government did offer them a form of appeal, and on the advice of their association they rejected the specific offer made, because the association wanted to fight this matter on a question of principle. It took the position that these people should have restored to them the same grievance procedure that all other employees of the government have, and that the appeal should be taken under the regular grievance procedure.

It is not my business to comment on the wisdom or otherwise of that particular decision of the association, but certainly it is a decision with considerable merit, and it is one which can be supported by sound arguments. But we have got past the point of a mere appeal, Mr. Speaker. This matter is such a grave injustice and is indicative of such a disgraceful situation existing in a public institution in this province, that we need far more than an appeal on the specific case of the employees of this institution. We need a full inquiry into what is going on in the institution, because if anything of the sort described in Mr. Keatings' statement can happen, a real clean-up is needed in that institution.

His statement is not made under oath; it is merely his statement; and it is possible that there is more to the story than he said. I do not know, but the onus is on the government to bring out whatever additional information, if there is any, that is relevant to this matter. I would say now, in view of the way the department, the hon. Minister and the government have acted, the way they have tried to conceal facts on the matter, no one can have any confidence in any inquiry that they themselves undertake. Only an inquiry undertaken by an impartial person of unquestioned standing in the community can ever resolve this matter, and satisfy the public that the situation, if there is a situation, and there appears to be, has been properly cleaned up.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, would the speaker allow a question? Is the speaker aware that the Minister saw that each of the men concerned was personally served with information that he had the right of appeal to the Minister; and if any one of them sought to avail himself of that right, that the Minister promised him an impartial tribunal outside the department, outside the government, an impartial tribunal to hear his case; that if anyone felt that he had been unfairly or unjustly treated, he had the right to appeal, and that not one of them took advantage of that impartial tribunal—

Mr. Bryden: I have already made reference to that fact. I stated that under intense public pressure, the government did offer a form of appeal, and I stated the reasons that the Civil Service Association had for turning that appeal down. I am not commenting on their reasons, one way or the other, but I certainly think they have a basic validity. I am suggesting that this has now gone far beyond the particular matter of the appeal of the employees, and that the whole situation needs to be inquired into. If the government has nothing to hide, and if, as Mr. Tumpane said, there is further information and further explanation, then they should have no fear of a full and impartial public inquiry. They should welcome it indeed.

I have heard, and I regret to say that I heard, very malicious rumours about one of these men. The form in which I heard them was—that it would be better just to leave this all alone because some of this dirt, which was rumoured about this particular man, might come out in public. I do not know where those rumours started, Mr. Speaker, but it is certainly a totally insufficient reason for refusing a full inquiry.

As Mr. Tumpane pointed out, the men themselves have sacrificed any claim for privacy; they have brought the matter out into the open. I presume they are 21 years of age and they knew what they were doing; they want it out in the open. I think it should come out in the open in a full public inquiry, not in a kangaroo court or back-door proceeding. Let us get to the bottom of this matter.

I do not see how the public can possibly be satisfied with the situation as it now stands; and I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that I have not seen any public comment anywhere that supports the government in its position. Newspapers, such as the Toronto Globe and Mail, which tends to be sympathetic to the government, have condemned the government absolutely; so have the Toronto Telegram and the Toronto Daily Star. Public opinion is 100 per cent against the government, and to clear the situation up the only answer now is a full public inquiry.

An hon. member: Responsibility of the hon. Minister.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Mr. Speaker, I move adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

House in committee of supply; Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

On vote 111:

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Chairman, on vote 111, the marketing development branch, I propose to make some observations tonight and amplify to some extent the remarks I made in the House a year ago concerning the agricultural export markets study group which toured the United Kingdom and certain European countries in the fall of 1960.

A year ago, when I discussed this matter, it was to relate the positive manner in which increased export trade could and would provide jobs for our people; and it is heartening to note that the efforts of the federal Minister of Trade and Commerce, associated with the assistance that has been provided at provincial levels and particularly by our own Ontario departments, has had the desired result. For the first time in nine years a favourable balance of trade amounting to $84 million has been accomplished.

Going hand in hand with this accomplishment our jobless figures are more favourable than they have been for quite some time, and I say this in complete contradiction of all the speeches and assertions that have been made in this House today. This is proof positive to me, Mr. Chairman, that a definite link between export trade and employment does exist.

In the course of my comments a year ago the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) made an observation to be found on page 382 of Hansard. He said:

Why did not a committee go ten years ago? Have they just found out about it?

A few weeks later the then Minister of Agriculture also made reference to the marketing development branch and the tour of the export marketing committee, and he summed up the situation nicely when he said:

The terms of reference provide for encouraging and fostering any activity which will develop additional outlets for farm production.

However, Mr. Chairman, the Opposition commented in their usual pessimistic fashion and, on page 1109 of Hansard, we find the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) stating:

This government has done nothing in 17 years to broaden the base of operations—
(Applause)

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Applaud, go ahead. The hon. members should applaud now because they will not a few minutes from now:

—to broaden the base of operations from which they could work to sell our products in the markets of the world, until a few months ago.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): What did they sell?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, that is a facetious remark. Just listen.

I would point out to the House that 17 years ago, the hon. member knows because he has been around for a long time, the United Kingdom was at war. During the war years, of course, imports of all commodities to the United Kingdom were handled on a strictly controlled basis and Canada, at that time, was called upon to assist the war effort with the provision of foodstuffs of all description. Little or nothing beyond what was related to the war effort was required to ensure that a market was provided, for much, if not all, of the food commodities this country could produce. And my hon. friend from Grey South knows that.

Mr. Oliver: Oh, I know that. There is no argument there.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): We are with the hon. Minister up to 1945. What happened after that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The hon. member for Bruce, as I have mentioned, asked why a committee did not go abroad ten years ago. The reason, of course, has been stated many, many times before this House, that ten years ago, as during the war, imports to the United Kingdom and many areas of Europe were strictly controlled. They were controlled to the extent that the export of currency was restrictive; allocation of dollars was only made for the importation of certain strategic materials, and many items of foodstuffs could not enter the United Kingdom because allocation of funds could not be obtained for this purpose.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Name one food that could not go into the United Kingdom. Just one.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Everything was controlled in those days, everything was related to the allocation of hard currency funds for that purpose; and the hon. member, if he does not know that, has been asleep at the switch.

Mr. Whicher: I happen to have been there during that time.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: As has been revealed—

Mr. Whicher: I was one of those bombardiers.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: As has been revealed, I repeat, said action was taken by this government to develop trade, in the manner which has been described, as soon as these restrictions were removed. The tour of the committee, the agricultural export inquiry committee, then was the direct result of the removal of these trade restrictions, at which time the marketing development branch immediately recommended to the government that an export marketing study be undertaken. The government approved the recommendations and the industry group was sent overseas. The inquiry, Mr. Chairman, was very broad and included over 500 interviews with importers, agents, wholesalers and manufacturers using Ontario agricultural products. Buyers for independent and multiple stores, government agencies, trade representatives—all were contacted and without exception, Mr. Chairman, they indicated their appreciation of the interest shown by Ontario in re-establishing itself on that market.

Mr. Whicher: How many products did you sell?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, may I clarify that particular point. Nobody in this committee went over there actually to sell.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, if they will keep quiet for a moment, may I just say that it is not the prerogative of representatives of government to go over with order books and pencils in their hands.

Concurrent with the tour of the committee in 1960 was identification with the United Kingdom Food Fair. The response to this identification was so enthusiastic that it was continued in 1961 and again it was expanded to include the Ideal Home Show, the largest of its kind in the United Kingdom and probably the largest in the world. Last year, over 1,200,000 people attended this show and it is expected that attendance will increase substantially at this trade fair this year.

Further proof of the enthusiasm engendered by the marketing development branch and the tour of the committee is the fact that a full range of over a thousand cases of Ontario canned fruits and vegetables will be sampled and sold to the public by the Tender Fruit Institute staff of professionally trained demonstrators and nutritionists. This effort is being sponsored and largely underwritten by Ontario industry; by such firms as the Boese Foods Limited of St. Catharines; Canadian Cannery Limited at Hamilton; W. Clark Limited of Harrow; Libby, McNeil and Libby Company of Chatham; Niagara Food Products Limited of Stoney Creek; Smart Brothers Limited of Collingwood; E. D. Smith and Sons Limited of Winona; and Stokeley-Van Camp of Canada Limited, Essex. It is expected that identification on the part of those I have just named will result in increased demand for our canned fruits and vegetables.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that the United Kingdom is largely dependent on the importation of canned fruits and vegetables, and that agents, brokers, wholesalers, grocers and supermarket operators have indicated many times that Canadian goods are extremely well regarded because of their high quality standards. Actual figures cannot be given at this time because they are compiled on a national basis, and published a year later.

There is no question, from the experience of the fruit and vegetable canning companies of this province, that they have re-established themselves in a substantial way on the British market, particularly, Mr. Chairman, for canned peaches, pears, cherries, cherry pie-filling material, and several tomato products. While the greatest progress has been made with canned fruits and vegetables, definite achievement has resulted in other fields.

During the past year, 35 tons of fresh peaches were shipped to London, England, to test the market for this product. Again last fall and this winter some 150,000 bags of onions and 100,000 bags of carrots for fresh consumption and for processing were shipped to the United Kingdom market; but more significantly, Mr. Chairman, these were all firsts for shipping such quantities of perishable products that distance. They received an excellent reception at good prices.

This is all new business. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, this is all new business which the department hopes will open the door for future expansion as the years progress; and that, in part, is my answer to: "What did we sell?"

Interest, however, is not confined to the products I have just mentioned. Previous to 1940, Ontario traditionally had a good market for apples in Great Britain. Today I am happy to report that Ontario apples moved in greater volume in 1961 to the United Kingdom and at better prices than ever before; and that again, Mr. Chairman, in part, is my answer to: "What did we sell?"

It is interesting to note that the quality of our red Delicious and MacIntosh apples—and I say this to the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes)—from Oxford county, arriving on the United Kingdom markets, has been outstanding.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): I would like to ask the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. MacNaughton) if the manager from the Oxford Fruit Co-operative did not personally go to England this year to instigate a large percentage of that order himself?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will answer the hon. member for Oxford. He said: did the man in charge of this from Oxford go this year? He probably did not hear me correctly, but I said today I am happy to report that the Ontario apples moved in greater volume in 1961. This, Mr. Chairman, is 1962. I relate this entirely to the efforts of those men who represented the Tender Fruit Institute and who accompanied this trade mission in 1960.

Mr. Innes: I would inform the hon. Minister without Portfolio that the orders the Oxford Co-operative got were made personally by the manager of the co-operative.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the honour of this House—Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) has asked the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. MacNaughton) to be truthful and he has suggested that the president of the organization to which he made reference personally visited and arranged—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, this committee had nothing to do with it. We are just unnecessarily taking the time of the House.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, may I simply say they were making so much noise, I did not properly hear the hon. member's question. There is a little difference between a question and a speech, but at least, Mr. Chairman, it provided the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) an opportunity to make a brief speech.

Now then, in answer to the question, if it was a question: I say I do not know whether anybody from Oxford went over there, but I do know that a well-constituted committee appointed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture in 1960 went over there and did a very excellent job.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I would say that these apples have been well received by the British trade and have been realizing top prices compared to apples from all over Europe. Reception has been particularly good from Scotland and north of England buyers, and if the hon. member for Oxford does not want us to help him sell his apples let him say so.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): The hon. Minister stated he did not go over to sell any apples.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We went over to sell everything. Let me rephrase that, Mr. Chairman; we went over there to find out ways and means of helping our people sell everything.

An hon. member: Was the hon. Minister paid out of the hospitality fund?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, may I say this? The greatest interest in Ontario agricultural exports centres around our Ontario cheese, which has long held an enviable reputation in the British market.

An hon. member: It did not say that in the public accounts.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Ontario cheddar cheese very obviously has been able to establish itself as a specialty product in view of the substantial premium that it has been able to command over all other cheese on the United Kingdom market. This is because of its peculiar flavour, as the only raw milk cheese now produced anywhere, and because of its excellent quality.

Mr. Chairman, may I make an observation? Why do these people scoff? Why do they laugh? Do they not want us to do business for this province or develop this province? Mr. Chairman—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege. I would want to remind the hon.—

Hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): What point of privilege is the hon. member—

Mr. Manley: Just a minute and I will let the hon. Minister know, if he will just give me the time. Just give me time.

The hon. Minister from Huron (Mr. MacNaughton), Mr. Chairman, did say that our cheese had a peculiar flavour. I take objection to that. It has one of the best flavours of any cheese that is made anywhere in the world. I do not like to hear him say it has a peculiar flavour. It has a flavour that appeals to the people of England and it is not a peculiar flavour at all.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of these hon. members over here, particularly the hon. member for Stormont, if he will bear with me I am going to describe a certain flavour relating itself to cheese that he may not be quite so happy to hear about.

Ontario cheddar cheese very obviously has been able to establish itself as a specialty product in view of the substantial premium that it has been able to command over all other cheese in the United Kingdom and on the United Kingdom market. This is why we are so quality-conscious of this product and why we took the determined step that we did in 1960 to maintain that reputation.

The major change in cheese export trading today compared to pre-World-War II days is that today over 95 per cent of cheese exported is actually handled by the Ontario Cheese Producers Marketing Board at Belleville. In 1958 this organization exported 15,489,000 pounds. In 1959 some 19,846,000 pounds. In 1960, 18,522,000 pounds, and in 1961 some 18,301,000 pounds, chiefly to the United Kingdom.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, and I think this is significant, that if Ontario could have produced and provided more cheese the United Kingdom market would have absorbed at least another 10 million pounds of our fine cheddar last year.

During the course of the visit of the inquiry committee, it was learned that the United Kingdom cheese trade is very well satisfied with the businesslike operations of the Ontario Cheese Producers Marketing Board.

Mr. Manley: I am a part of it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, the hon. member did not give much evidence of that last night. Last night in this House we heard some criticism, Mr. Chairman, of the action of the Ontario government in protecting the reputation of our Ontario cheese. I think the House is entitled to the facts in this connection.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I am. I propose to give the hon. leader of the Opposition the facts on that story right now.

In the spring of 1960, the Ontario cheese producers' association and the dairy branch received criticism from the United Kingdom that cheese made in a particular factory was not entirely satisfactory to that market and had deteriorated greatly in flavour. As a result the dairy division of the Kemptville Agricultural School was instructed to investigate the possible source of defect. Investigation was made and samples of the cheese in question were returned to Canada. This matter was drawn to the attention of the owner of this particular cheese factory.

As further complaints were received the investigation was stepped up and Mr. J. M. Bain, the director of the products division of the dairy branch, an internationally recognized cheese expert and a former outstanding cheese maker, was sent to the United Kingdom to make a thorough investigation of these criticisms as to the quality of Ontario cheddar cheese. Mr. Bain consulted with all the importers of all Ontario cheese and particularly those few who complained as to the quality of certain lots. The particular criticism of the cheese was it had a distinctly "off" flavour. On his return Mr. Bain made a detailed report of his findings and recommendations and I quote directly from Mr. Bain's report dated December 9, 1960.

Flavour was the major weakness of Canadian cheese, particularly the October cheese. Only minor complaints were registered about the summer-made cheese.—and the hon. member for Stormont will know that summer-made cheese is largely regarded as better than fall and winter-made cheese—

Then I would suggest they were normal complaints and probably experienced each year, because all the importers agreed that they anticipated a small percentage of pick-outs from raw milk cheese and they buy at a price allowing for a small loss.

—I am still quoting from the report of Mr. J. M. Bain—

October cheese carried a miscellaneous lot of flavours but the true catty odour—
—and this is still the language of the man who made the investigation—

—the true catty odour—

Mr. Wintermeyer: What is that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Catty. I could enlarge on that but it probably would not be parliamentary to do it.

Mr. Manley: It means it was not good—peculiar.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton:

—was confined to two registration numbers, 652 and 844, and were probably all made in the one plant but not necessarily, in fairness, as there was quite a range of back numbers from No. 844 carrying a very objectionable flavour.

—I am still quoting, Mr. Chairman:

It was indeed unfortunate that this cheese was so widely distributed through quite a number of importers. The odour is very foul smelling and does resemble a cat smell, as stated by some buyers. It created havoc, as some of this cheese would go out in a mixed shipment to a store, where it would be cut up and placed on the counter, for sale, by some employees not familiar with cheese. Customers would purchase a piece of cheese and immediately return it to the store. The retailer would then return the whole lot as "catty" to the firm that sold it to them.

Mr. Bain concludes his report as follows:

The Englishman is willing to pay a premium price for premium cheese and is not prone to complain about small amounts of spoilage. The situation in England is in jeopardy and cannot be minimized. My findings [quoting Mr. Bain] re the 1959 make, have been substantiated by the recent close examination of the 1960 make, results of which revealed almost 100 per cent depreciation in quality of the factories concerned.

As a result of the situation revealed in Mr. Bain's report, the dairy branch, in co-operation with the federal dairy authorities, made sure that no cheese from the two factories in question was permitted to be exported. The co-operation of the two factories in Stormont County left much to be desired.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: And I am still quoting from the report of Mr. J. M. Bain—

As a matter of interest one of the factories closed in 1960, and the other burned to the ground in October, 1960, and both have been replaced by a modern new plant under new ownership, which today, I am happy to say, has been giving full co-operation. They have an excellent record of quality of cheese on a re-graded basis.

Now to conclude, Mr. Chairman, I would ask these things from the hon. member for Stormont. Can there be anything but advantage to the continued development of our Ontario cheese industry in terms of the methods that have been employed? Can he honestly say that the money which was spent to remove this quantity of cheese—which was prejudicing one of our most important agricultural markets—was not warranted?

Does he not believe that this relatively small expenditure to maintain the good name of one of our principal agricultural export commodities was as good a promotional feature as the expenditure of sums of money in various forms of advertising? Surely the remarks made by him yesterday will not find favour with the many thousands of people engaged in the cheese industry of Ontario, who, I am confident, appreciated the assistance provided by this Department of Agriculture, which he so strongly criticized.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, I want to first thank the hon. Minister from Huron for bringing to the attention of the House the problems that he has this evening, and for giving me an opportunity, through you, Mr. Chairman, to answer some of the charges he has made this evening and something I do not think is going to help the industry as far as the cheese manufacturers in this province of Ontario are concerned.

The hon. Minister referred, Mr. Chairman, to two factories. The one number I got—the registration number 844. I did not get the other registration number.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will give it to him.

Mr. Manley: Will he give it to me?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes; 652.

Mr. Manley: That is fine; 652. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I brought up this question last evening, I saw it in the public accounts where Lovell and Christmas was paid $11,500 by this government, to bail them out of a loss they were supposed to have had in connection with cheese that was sent overseas.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—this money was not advanced to Lovell and Christmas to bail them out of a loss.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, I asked the question last night from my own seat here, "Why the amount to Lovell and Christmas?" The hon. Minister replied that these were losses sustained by this company outside of the province of Ontario, in Quebec. That has been in operation for far longer than the hon. Minister from Huron or myself has been in existence in the province of Ontario.

I want to say more than that, Mr. Chairman, that this same company, and others, before the cheese producers of the province of Ontario was formed, and before we had a marketing board, were one of the biggest companies that were making payments under the table to factories and buyers, in order to get rid of having the cheese placed on the board, where they would have to go and compete against the other buyers. Their method was losing many dollars to the cheese producers of this province. I think that I was justified in pointing out to the government, that a company operated under those conditions, and in operation as long as they had been, that this government of the province of Ontario was not justified in making a payment of that kind to them in order to take care of a loss that they might have sustained.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On a point of order—

Mr. Manley: Let me continue. He brought up the situation. Let me continue. He has named two factories in the county of Stormont; in other words, he has said that this $11,500 was attributed to those two factories alone. I had some connection with getting a permit for one of those factories—to be rebuilt; and it is producing a quality today equal or better to any in the province of Ontario, and I am proud of it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I did not say that.

Mr. Manley: I can tell him if he did not say it. He said he was proud of the record of that factory.

Another thing I want to say is that that plant, when they came for a permit, were turned down—not for the reason that the record was not too good. But the main reason why they were turned down was because it was pointed out to the people who applied for the permit and to me, who interceded on their behalf after they were turned down, that those plants had only received—in the flow of the milk—15,000 pounds of milk. Surely my hon. friend cannot say to the House tonight that the loss of $11,500 could come to a plant that only received 15,000 pounds of milk a day in the flow of the milk. My hon. friend had better go back—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On a point of order—

Mr. Manley: And now let me finish with him.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I said no such thing.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, what did he say?

Mr. Manley: He left the implication, though.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I said no such thing, nor did I imply any such thing. Nor did I imply that this particular loss was applicable to one plant.

Mr. Chairman, still on my point of privilege, I read into the record the statement of Mr. J. M. Bain—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to speak about another point of privilege.

Mr. Manley: We have one point of privilege at a time. If the hon. Minister has a point of privilege, let him state his point of privilege.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister referred to two factories and two factories only, 844 and 652, which are owned by the same operator. I will go so far as to say that, even though he did come from the county of Stormont, he was not a good operator, and the responsibility fell with The Department of Agriculture here in not putting in the proper regulations and not having the instructors going in and enforcing the regulations in order to produce the qualities that should have been produced.

I see my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Connell) having a great joke out of this. Maybe I could tell him a thing or two, too, if I get into that mood. But I want to say this again. We have an inspection department but they have not been doing their duty, as I pointed out last night. Maybe we do not have enough inspectors. But then, cheese is graded, Mr. Chairman. The cheese is graded. It is regraded again—that is the regulation—before it is shipped overseas. The grading of cheese is done by the federal Department of Agriculture.

Far be it from me to say that the graders are not doing the job they should do. But that cheese passed the regulations of the province and of the Dominion, as far as grade was concerned, and it went overseas.

If it has passed the grading regulations here as far as our grading regulations go—and they have to be up to the standards in order to export to the United Kingdom—then I do not think that I, or you, or anybody else, can be responsible for the conditions under which it is put on the boat and shipped overseas.

I do not think that we have the responsibility, once it gets over there, of the companies that buy it or of the manner in which it is stored. We have no assurance whether it is going to be disposed of at the time it arrives there, or whether it is going to be disposed of six or eight months hence. We do not know that the conditions of the buyer, or the storekeeper or distributor, are in order to display and keep that cheese in storage and prevent spoilage.

So, if there is any responsibility, it is not on the member for Stormont. I brought this to the attention of the House last night and I think I made it emphatically clear that I was very concerned about the quality and the future market of the cheese of this province.

I am a cheese producer myself. I am milking over 50 cows—I am interested—that is my livelihood. I say we have to maintain the quality of cheese in the province of Ontario and that we have to have this market in England, if we want to maintain the income for our farmers in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, unless we look after the quality of our milk and our cheese, we are not going to keep the market that we have at the present time. There are other markets that we hope to get into, and there are other things on which the hon. Minister without Portfolio can convince some of his friends in the front rows here and his friends in Ottawa. Maybe he could go down to Ottawa and convince them to try to get a little more of our good cheese going into the United States; we have only 500,000 pounds going there at the moment, but it is a good market.

Maybe they could explore the markets out west and get some of our good cheddar cheese out there. Do not try to pull a red herring across the trail and accuse the member for Stormont of defeating the purpose of the cheese industry of this province. There is no one more interested than I.

The hon. Minister without Portfolio has done a disservice to the cheese producers of this county because his is not a cheese industry area. He is just a spokesman for the Tory party on that side of the House. He thought he was going to get up in the House and tear me to pieces. But I can hold my own with him or anybody else on that side of the House.

As long as I am the member for Stormont, I will look after the interests of the farmers in that particular area and especially the people who are engaged in the cheese industry.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, it is a singularly peculiar thing to me to hear these observations from the hon. member for Stormont here tonight. I made no criticisms about the type of representation he makes for the people of Stormont. He singles out, Mr. Chairman, the firm of Lovell and Christmas. I did not mention the name of the firm of Lovell and Christmas, but I suggest this to him that the sale of all cheese in the province of Ontario is largely under the jurisdiction of the Ontario Cheese Producers Marketing Association.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: All right, Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member say that the Ontario Cheese Producers Marketing Association is not doing a good job?

Tens of thousands of cheese producers in this province, Mr. Chairman, say the Ontario Cheese Producers Marketing Association is doing an outstanding job, and I say so.

When the hon. member levels these criticisms, he is in effect criticizing the board of which he is a member.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, this is the most far-fetched and ridiculous statement that I have ever heard. I have not in any of the remarks I have made tonight made any reference at all to the Cheese Marketing Board or the Cheese Producers Association of which I am a member.

An hon. member: Yes, the hon. member did.

Mr. Manley: I never did. I mentioned Lovell and Christmas. I am not concerned about the back benchers over here. I have been here long enough for that. But I do want to co-operate with the hon. Minister, the hon. member for Huron.

The Cheese Producers' Association and the Cheese Producers' Marketing Board have done a remarkable job. I did not refer to them until just now, but I say they have been a remarkable board. I am a very modest man.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Just by implication.

Mr. Manley: Not by implication or anything else. I have not a word against them. I am a very modest man; I am a member of them. They have done a remarkable job. If they were not in existence today we would not be getting the price that we are for cheese.

I mentioned before the methods in which Lovell and Christmas and some of these companies that I could name bought cheese before our association came into being. The cheese producers themselves and the marketing board, when they came into being, removed some of the difficulties we had with those large buyers; and I have to say that the cheese producers and the marketing board have done a remarkable job, and we are looking forward to them doing a greater job still.

For the hon. Minister to say that I was casting reflections on the workings of the cheese producers and the marketing board, is going a long way and is accusing me of something that I had not even thought of or even suggested. I am a member of it, I pay dues into it, and I hold them in the highest regard.

I want to say to the hon. Minister that far be it from me to say that they have not, because they have been doing it. And if it was not for them, Lovell and Christmas and some of those other companies would be in the position of still giving payments under the table, and getting cheese in there at a much lower price than they are at the present time.

An hon. member: The hon. member does not sell to Lovell and Christmas.

Mr. Manley: Lovell and Christmas has come up, yes. Lovell and Christmas bought cheese through the Cheese Producers Marketing Board auction.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is exactly what I said.

Mr. Manley: No. The hon. Minister did not say that at all.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is exactly what I said.

Mr. Manley: I want to make it plain to the House because I do not want any difficulties here and misunderstandings. Lovell and Christmas, I presume, bought the cheese. If it was Ontario cheese they would buy at the auction conducted by the Cheese Producers Marketing Board. All the cheese has to go through that auction system. If my hon. friend goes to an auction sale in Ontario and buys a cow or anything else, once the sale is over the product is his. He has the cow or the horse or anything else, but the product is his.

The same thing applies here, except that we have qualities here, and grades. The cheese, as I said before, was graded; it was graded before it went overseas, and it passed the graders here. How can we be responsible for it after it leaves the port at Montreal?

The hon. Minister has tried to make something out of this tonight, but I do say in all sincerity that he had better know his facts again before he starts speaking about the cheese producers of the province of Ontario and taking the member for Stormont to task.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would just—

Mr. Manley: I asked a simple question last night in regard to what this payment was to Lovell and Christmas. I did not know what it was myself until I asked that question. Surely a member of the Opposition can go into public accounts and ask what an item of $11,500 was paid for; and surely we are deserving of an answer without this ridicule that the hon. Minister has tried to heap upon me tonight in this honourable House.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a few comments to what has already been said here tonight.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, are we all going to be permitted to discuss this over again? That vote was carried, I thought.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We are talking, I believe—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: May we have a ruling on that, sir?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Now, before you start ruling on this, Mr. Chairman, I am devoting my remarks to vote 111 which has to do in my book with marketing development grants. In relation to the remarks that have been made tonight, it would seem to me that it would be well indeed to recall some of the facts that actually apply to this case. I would like to go back and remind the hon. members of this House through you, Mr. Chairman, that a few years ago, in fact I believe it was something like 10 years ago, in 1952, when dollar supplies were very, very tight and as my hon. friend, the hon. Minister without Portfolio from the riding of Huron (Mr. MacNaughton) has suggested, there were literally no dollars available for supplies from this country in the United Kingdom market, we sent over our Department of Agriculture officials, our chief of marketing who is now our Deputy Minister, and Mr. Coomb, the president of the Cheese Producers Association.

They talked to the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the United Kingdom and they were successful in getting dollars released to buy Canadian cheese. This is what The Department of Agriculture has tried to do for the farmers of Ontario down through the years; and I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that it will always be our intent to help the little farmer of this province to maintain his market after he has secured it.

Along with that I would like to suggest to those—and I am not a cheese producer myself, but I would like to suggest to those who are, that when the cheese producers' organization was seeking to become established as a major marketing agency for the cheese of this province, The Department of Agriculture came to their assistance with the provision of a guaranteed loan, and sustained them to get into business, to take the cheese off the market and to export it through these importers who were in the business of importing cheese into the United Kingdom. And we have followed this cheese through, from the time it was made right through to the time it was sold in Great Britain.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it was in the interests of the cheese producers, the little farmers of this province, that we followed through on this particular project when the cheese was known to have gone wrong; and we maintained the reputation that is the most outstanding reputation that there is known in this world for cheddar cheese—Canadian cheddar cheese.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest further, in replying to hon. members of the House, that when we have done this we have guaranteed the integrity of the farmers of Ontario through The Ontario Department of Agriculture.

I wish further, Mr. Chairman, to say that if my hon. friend from Stormont (Mr. Manley), who has indeed the interests of the cheese people at heart—he is one of them himself, we do not doubt this—but we question his methods of promoting their interests. If, in fact, we had provided the type of inspection which my hon. friend from Stormont suggests that perhaps we should have done, and we had stopped the farmers from sending milk to this plant, and we had put an inspector in there 24 hours a day and he had seen something wrong every day, that he could find fault with—and I suppose there are few places in the province of Ontario that one could not criticize some time during the day—if this indeed had been the case and the inspector had said: "We are going to close you up; you are through doing business; your farmers can take their milk somewhere else"—because if there was a lack of water, if there was a lack of the right quality of water, it could easily have happened—what would have happened to the market of those people?

It was done with the best of intentions. These people were allowed to make their product, it was shipped in good faith, we followed it through, and we came across and maintained the name of Canadian cheddar cheese and the quality that it is famous for in this country.

Mr. Wintermeyer: On a point of order, is the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) suggesting that the regulations do not mean a thing? That is exactly the inference that he left.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, no, that is not it. Not at all, Mr. Chairman, not at all.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I would have to reiterate the statements which the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) just made. The hon. Minister, in speaking to this, suggested that because of the fact that the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Manley) had raised a question which was rightfully within the public accounts, that he was in fact saying that the department should go in and close up these factories. This was not what he said at all.

But I suggest to the hon. Minister, and I do not profess to be an agricultural man, but if we have inspectors and if we have standards, surely it is the responsibility of those inspectors to see that those standards are maintained. And if he is suggesting that the milk that was going into these factories was not satisfactory and did not meet with these standards, and if this is the reason the cheese gave us this problem, it seems to me that it is only common sense that he would do something about it. And if we are going to maintain the standard of Canadian cheese abroad, by buying off these companies that take the unsatisfactory cheese in the first place, it is going to cost us a lot more in the public accounts next year. Surely he is not suggesting that standards should be changed and should be winked at in certain cases? Because if he is, I suggest to him it is time there was a review of all the standards.

Mr. Whicher: May I ask the hon. Minister a question arising out of what was said by the hon. Minister without Portfolio? In connection with this export market study group that went to England a year or so ago, may I say that I agree with the hon. Minister without Portfolio in many of his remarks; I think that this was an excellent group and I am very pleased that there are some results, according to his words, some results so far. He mentioned such things as the selling of peaches, apples and carrots and some others, too.

Before I ask a question: I want to say that I really think that this is good; as far as I am concerned, and the hon. members on this side, the agriculture members particularly, hope that he sells a great deal more. The problem, as we see it in agricultural production in this province, is the fact that we have too much production and not enough sales, so the more that is sold the better, I want that clearly understood. But my question is this, Mr. Chairman: what is the hon. Minister doing to continue the sales of agricultural products in England? And I would like this specific question along with another that I am going to ask: who has the hon. Minister got representing him in the United Kingdom now, to sell Ontario farm products?

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, before I sit down, I might say that we have 18 marketing boards under this estimate of vote 111. As I understand it, the total of money involved is $115,000.

If the marketing of products is good in the province of Ontario, my question to the hon. Minister is this: did he ever consider the possibility of having marketing boards in foreign lands, not just in England, but in other lands—in Europe, in Asia, or anywhere where they have hungry people who have money and will give us that money so that we can give the over-production of the farmers of the province of Ontario a fair exchange?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the question was directed to me, was it?

Mr. Whicher: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think there were several questions. To deal with the last one first, if I may, Mr. Chairman, the question that the hon. member has raised regarding the provision of food for people in lands where there is definitely a shortage of food and marketing agencies: this method of disposal of our surplus foodstuffs is well under consideration by the federal government today and, in fact, the federal government through the federal Minister of Agriculture has led the way in the world in the formation of, and his recommendations for, the establishment of a world food bank.

Mr. Chairman, I know of no better way of disposing of our surplus food than through this particular method. This is the way we feel, in a unified effort, we can concentrate in providing the foodstuffs that we have in abundance for those people who need them—provided we can find a way to get it to them in a way that they can absorb them and can handle them. This is the answer to that. I hope I have made myself clear.

With regard to what has been sold in Great Britain—that was the first question of the hon. member? I would like to say that we have appointed a full-time director of our overseas marketing in the marketing development branch, Mr. Ted Merritt, who is working on this very matter. As a matter of fact, he arrived in England again this week. It is his job to develop the markets that were explored by this group that went over a year or two ago. And many possibilities were opened up to him.

We have hired this man and we have given him a full-time job to promote overseas sales. I would like to suggest that in this past year 35 tons of fresh peaches were shipped to London, England. Again this last fall, some 150,000 bags of onions and 100,000 packages of carrots were sent over to Great Britain.

This is sent over there simply to provide a sample, if you will, of the products that we have in abundance in this country. And we feel that with the general acceptance of our products and the favourable reception they are receiving in the food shows of Great Britain, where in one instance they had 1.2 million people at the show looking at our products. This, we think, is a fair start on providing a reasonably good outlet for Ontario products.

Mr. Whicher: I would like to ask another question in regard to the same thing. Firstly, I want to thank the hon. Minister for the capable way in which he has attempted to answer the questions that I gave him.

But I want to go back for one minute now to the English market. Do I understand that the hon. Minister has one man over there in a full-time capacity selling foodstuffs from the province of Ontario to look after the needs of 50 million people? Is that the situation, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, would the hon. member suggest we send over a percentage of the 50 million people?

Mr. Whicher: No, I would suggest that the minimum the hon. Minister could do is organize a sales staff of at least 10 or 20 people. What good is one man attempting to sell all of the food that we have, the overabundance of food that we have in the province of Ontario? It may be all right as a trial, but I must say it is a mighty poor attempt as far as looking after the needs of all the farmers of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, one thing more I would like to say—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): That sounds like eggs at three cents a dozen.

Mr. Whicher: Well, if they are that cheap, the hon. Minister of Transport will be able to buy some.

Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased that the hon. Minister has said, and of course we all realize, that the federal Department of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce in Ottawa have made a legitimate attempt to get rid of some of the extra food that we have here in Canada. But I am a little tired of hearing them boastfully saying to the hon. members opposite that for the first time in a great many years we have had a trade surplus in Canada, when they know perfectly well that the reason that there is a trade surplus is because they sold Red China millions and millions of dollars worth of wheat that they have never collected for yet.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We did not sell one single bushel that the hon. member said we sold. Now what does he say?

Mr. Whicher: I said—Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) was thinking about something else altogether. If he would let the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) look after this, we would get along much better. I do not mind him looking after everything else, but when he starts looking after the farmers of the province he is going a little bit too far.

Mr. Chairman, what I said was this, that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce had initiated the sale, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture in this province has suggested that this province has co-operated. With that, I heartily agree. But I point out that the reason there is a substantial trade balance this year as far as foreign trade is concerned is because they sold millions of dollars' worth of wheat to Red China.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, what is wrong with that?

Mr. Whicher: Nothing whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, then, stop apologizing.

Mr. Whicher: I want to ask this: that when you get the trade back from Red China—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We are getting paid for it; that is all that matters.

Mr. Whicher: But we are not getting paid for it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Every dollar that has been due has been paid.

Mr. Whicher: Every dollar that is due, but what about the dollars that were due on February 27?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They have been paid in full.

Mr. Whicher: Well, Mr. Chairman, all I can say is I certainly hope they are paid. But I suggest this: that Red China, instead of sending cash over to us, is going to have to trade with us. Trade is not a one-way street.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is paid in full, in cash.

Mr. Whicher: Well, Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope the hon. Minister of Energy Resources knows what he is talking about.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is paid in full, in cash.

Mr. Whicher: If it is paid in rice, or in textiles or something like that, I have no objection to this whatsoever. Now, Mr. Chairman, what I wanted to get back to is this. If we have been successful in selling wheat to China, what is wrong with having agencies, marketing agencies, go to other countries to sell our pork, for example, or our peaches?

The hon. Minister just told us a few minutes ago that last year they sold 35 tons of peaches to England. I suggest to you that is not one slice of peach to each Englishman who lives in London alone; it is a very small effort and I do hope the hon. Minister will reinforce his efforts and improve the staff and enlarge the number he has attempting to sell the over-abundance of food that we have in this province.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, maybe as one from this small group that had the opportunity to express some concern over this problem, in the face of being asked again what do I know about farming, I would suggest that not always does one have to be in the bush to observe what is going on. I have been listening very closely to this discussion about finding markets for our so-called surplus of Ontario farm goods. I wonder and would ask the hon. Minister to take a brief moment or two to explain to me what portion of this expenditure, or any expenditure, has been spent in trying to develop the consumption in Ontario of our Ontario products? Certainly there has been a lot of time spent in the last hour or two talking about developing markets in Great Britain for peaches, apples and other fruit from Ontario. I think we have overlooked the problem that has brought about the necessity to find these markets—that is, a failure to develop the consumption of our home-grown fruits in our own country.

I would like the hon. Minister to point out to me what is being done in this regard. You can go into almost any of the chain stores, walk up and down the aisles, and what you find on the shelves are imported fruits and canned goods of farm products from the United States. Peaches, asparagus, celery, all this sort of thing—I think this is where we lost track of the real problem in the last few years; we have lost track of the development of processing plants in Ontario to process the types of products we produce on the farm. Now we are faced with what we call a surplus. I think we have got the problem, and I think if we look at it squarely we can consider it superficial if we get down to the business of educating, and promoting our own product on our own markets.

The greatest example of this is our grape industry. There is more imported wine consumed in this province than any other type; and yet we grow one of the finest wine grapes in the Niagara Peninsula that can be produced. I believe it is all for the lack of promotion and education by either our farm groups or these manufacturers. I would like the hon. Minister to explain to me, or give me some idea of, what part of this expenditure in this estimate is going to develop the consumption in Ontario of our Ontario products?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would say, Mr Chairman, the answer is that about one-half of our award is going for this purpose. We feel that the home market is the best market there is and should be developed and expanded to every extent, and we have done everything we can to do that very thing.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow on what the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) has been asking. I know that the promotion of trade overseas is naturally very fundamental to not only the farmers but every citizen of Ontario, and that the hon. Minister is concerned with this, sir, and that his Ontario government representatives have gone over there in order to do something about it.

I was interested that there was an emphasis on the traditional British trade and the hon. Minister's people must be deeply concerned about the transition that is taking place in connection with the trade patterns in Europe. He must be concerned about the European Common Market and the developments there. Because he is taking a positive role—I should say, sir, that I am therefore directing the question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) or to the hon. Minister without Portfolio.

He is concerned with this and I am wondering if he is trying to promote a broader marketing area in connection with this European Common Market? Could he give us some of the steps by which he is trying to promote this? In other words, is he active? I am sorry; I am asking the hon. Minister of Agriculture; is this on a point of privilege he is rising?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, this is a point of order. The hon. member wants to know generally what we are doing in terms of the European market not just in agriculture—

Mr. Thompson: No, in respect to agriculture.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Not, surely, just in respect to agriculture, surely he wanted to proceed on a broad front—

Mr. Thompson: No, I am sorry. I am asking the question of the hon. Minister of Agriculture—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: —and this is a matter which comes under my department and I will be reporting on it next week. If the hon. member does not want to wait until then, or if he does not want to know the real answer in the matter, we will have to let it go until then.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, sir, but I am interested at this point because I know the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) has got many explanations, and I should say I have listened with interest to his remarks previously on this. But I am interested in hearing from the hon. Minister of Agriculture who has, obviously from his department, got someone over in England right now who is trying to develop trade with England. In fact it was said by the hon. Minister from Huron "Trade with England with everything."

There is a very dangerous tendency perhaps for us, or perhaps a golden opportunity, and I am interested in knowing the hon. Minister of Agriculture's opinion about this—if he is interested in moving into the European Common Market. And I am asking him what steps his department is taking to get broader market opportunities in the European Common Market.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We are doing everything possible to consider the very points that the hon. member has raised and, as was pointed out by the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development (Mr. Macaulay), an announcement will be made according to the deliberations with which we are now proceeding, at the proper time.

Mr. Thompson: I am not interested in what the hon. Minister is going to do in the future. I am asking what he is doing now; could he recount that to me? Has he made plans now?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: To make to the House?

Mr. Thompson: Has he made plans? This development has been taking place for some time about Britain joining the European Common Market—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It has not joined yet; it will be a year and a half before it does.

Mr. Thompson: I asked the hon. Minister of Agriculture. He knows the situation, for example, that took place in Accra. We know the point of view—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Every department would have to have an ambassador? The hon. member wants them to reduce costs and yet he wants everybody to have a foreign representative.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I consider this a very fundamental question in connection with both the farm people and others. Perhaps I know the policy of the government in Ottawa; we have heard their statements at Accra and we have heard their statements in other places, and I am interested because some of us felt they were a little bit confused about what role they played. I am interested in knowing from the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), in view of the very obvious situation that Britain is moving into the European Common Market—and many of us have known this for a long time—in view of the hon. Minister knowing this, what plans has he developed in connection with the European Common Market and getting sales there?

Or has he not developed any?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: When the hon. member sits down I will stand up.

An hon. member: The hon. Minister is getting kind of touchy over there.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We are not getting touchy at all. I always understood that when an hon. member was on his feet the other fellow kept down.

Mr. Chairman, we have had our marketing people examining every possible means of finding markets for Ontario products, not only in Great Britain but in Europe. Our market study group that went over on the instruction of my predecessor in office in 1960 examined the markets of Europe and we have sent our marketing people back there to give further study to promoting the sales of Ontario products there.

Now, if my hon. friend knows that Great Britain is going into the European Common Market I think he is ahead of even the British themselves, because I do not know of any announcement to that effect as yet. We are certainly concerned with it and are giving it every consideration. What more my hon. friend wants than that I do not know.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I have one more observation to make here. I think it is a rather peculiar situation and a very singular thing, and if the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) was in his seat I would have addressed my remarks to him.

First of all, I think I would like in fairness to congratulate him for the very fair way in which he expressed himself tonight. Now that he is not in his seat I will address this question to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer).

I find it very difficult to condone the difference of opinion that seems to exist in the Opposition benches across from me, when I recall that a little over a year ago when I discussed this matter before the House I found the hon. leader of the Opposition espousing some of the things that the government has since done: at that time I pointed out that the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) criticized us very largely for a matter involving something that we could not solve, that we could not touch. Now where do we stand on this thing?

Mr. Wintermeyer: What is the hon. Minister talking about?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am asking the hon. leader of the Opposition, where does he stand?

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): I have never discussed this.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I can find it in Hansard for the hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what he is talking about. I do not think he knows what he is talking about.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I will go and look it up in Hansard for the hon. member for Parkdale. He said we were embarking on a course involving trade that was entirely within the confines of the federal Department of Trade and Commerce, something that we could not solve and that we could not touch. Here tonight we get praise from the hon. member for Bruce to some extent for what we are doing, we get criticism from others for what we are not doing, and a year ago the hon. member for Parkdale told us we have no business being involved in it at all. How do you add all this up, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Trotter: If the hon. Minister knows what he is talking about, I would like him to come and tell me and we will have a nice discussion.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Chairman, we have had a lot of discussion about the European market and the British market. I personally would like to tell hon. members that there must have been some good work done by the committee that went over there because there have been some results. I would say that there is a great potential there for the future.

Could I ask the hon. Minister if Mr. Merritt is permanently located in Great Britain at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No.

Mr. Innes: There is nobody there at all on a permanent basis?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We have Ontario House there and we definitely feel that our marketing director can be more effective if he is conversant with what is going on here and what is going on over there. We are moving him back and forth to do the most effective job that can possibly be done. I think it is much better to have a man who is fairly conversant with the product that is available and the quality of the product available, so that he can put that product into the trade channels in Great Britain in an effective way. This is our policy.

Mr. Innes: I am amazed at that statement by the hon. Minister. To tell the truth, I had asked about a year ago of the then hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) if London House did have any liaison between the agricultural enterprise and the disposing of agricultural products over there, and the answer was definitely no. What does the hon. Minister expect our people there to do, handle it all? And the hon. Minister tells me today that he has Ontario House there.

Might I ask him this: Has Ontario House a liaison with distributing the agricultural products in London at the present time? He has actually admitted to me that at the present time there is no permanent person in Great Britain. This is shameful, when the hon. Minister from Huron made his great oration here tonight, and the hon. Minister comes and tells us that he has nobody permanently there. I think it is time that somebody got there.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This department does not, but there is one of them in my department. But the hon. member does not want to discuss what our department is doing.

Mr. Innes: Would the hon. Minister of Energy Resources mind? I am speaking to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will answer the hon. member's question, Mr. Chairman. I suggest that we are interested in expanding our trade regardless of what product it is that is produced in the province of Ontario. And I would further suggest to my hon. friend that if he expects every department of this government which is interested in expanding trade to put a whole staff over there to do nothing more than to sell that department's individual product, then he will be back next year telling us we are spending the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Innes: I am speaking on agriculture.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Just a minute and I will answer my hon. friend's question. He asked me if we had a permanent resident man in England representing this department. We have representatives at Ontario House represented by the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development's people over there, and our man here, Mr. Merritt, to whom I have referred, is doing the job of liaison between Ontario producers and the export market channels to Great Britain. Now, what better arrangement could one find than that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman. My privilege relates to the comments of the hon. member for Parkdale. Mr. Chairman, I make reference to page 102 of the Hansard of the last session, the hon. member for Parkdale speaking:

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister and his cohorts over on the government side want to talk about foreign trade. They want to get away from the problems that are in the province, they want to talk about something they cannot touch or cannot solve.

Mr. Trotter: In answer to that, Mr. Chairman, we were discussing unemployment in the province of Ontario. We had literally thousands of unemployed here. They were doing nothing about winter works. We were not discussing these problems at all. I would say the hon. Minister is completely out of order there. So I still say he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Innes: Could I ask the hon. Minister if the members at London House, who are apparently there representing the interests of agriculture, have been appointed since his study committee made their trip to Great Britain?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: First of all, I would like to point out to the hon. member that it is Ontario House, I am told, but that is beside the point. We are all interested in selling Ontario products over there just as much as my hon. friend tries to let on that he is, and I am sure that he is interested in this.

Mr. Innes: On a point of personal privilege, I think the hon. Minister should withdraw that. There is no one more interested in agriculture than I am, and I want the hon. Minister to know that.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did not say the hon. member was not.

Mr. Innes: And I would like to ask the hon. Minister how much tobacco was sold in England this past year. Tobacco sales are cut in half this year on the Tillsonburg market now.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well now, what question is it the hon. member wants to ask?

Mr. Innes: I would like to know what training the man has that has been appointed to Ontario House and when he was appointed, who he is, and also how much tobacco—well, that is enough for the moment. But will the hon. Minister tell me when he was appointed, who is he, and what are his qualifications?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The hon. member has stated his questions in an excellent manner, but I think they should take their time over there because they are befuddling him, I can see that. I would suggest this—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Can the hon. Minister answer this without consultation?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I told the hon. members, if the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) would only listen, that we have no agricultural representative in Ontario House specifically hired by this department to do the job. We are using the departmental people of the whole government to do this very thing.

Vote 111 agreed to.

Votes 112 to 116, inclusive, agreed to.

On vote 117:

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, in connection with vote 117, I would like to say again that the remarks by the hon. Minister at the outset of the discussion of these estimates emphasized the fact that our educational institutions in Guelph on the OAC campus are expected to have an overall enrolment of 4,000 by 1970 and the total vote in 117, 118 and 119, which actually, after the passage of one of the bills before the committee on agriculture at this time, will all be one, is well over $7.5 million.

Previously in this debate I have attempted to point out to the House and the hon. Minister the importance I feel there is in extending to the Ontario Agricultural College full university status, in that they can grant graduate degrees, particularly at the doctorate level. Now the advantage of this is obvious in attracting scholars in agriculture from all over the world and also retaining our own scholars in this province, because at the present time they are forced to leave Ontario for graduate work in agriculture.

Granting university status to the Ontario Agricultural College would therefore be a tremendous step forward for agriculture in Ontario and the whole academic community.

I would therefore ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture if he contemplates seeking this university status for the Ontario Agricultural College and, if not, perhaps he could explain why he is not going to do that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the hon. member who discussed this, I believe, at Guelph during the committee the other day, that this matter can be very well discussed when the committee on agriculture meets to deal with the bill. This has nothing to do with the estimates whatever, and I suggest there will be the fullest opportunity to discuss this at the time the bill is being discussed in the committee on agriculture.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister was not present at that discussion, and when I asked the question there was a pregnant pause and there was no answer forthcoming, although I had the distinct impression that the President of the OAC wanted to answer but said nothing under the circumstances. Now I asked this question; no answer was forthcoming in committee and I ask it here.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I might be able to assist the hon. member in this question dealing with the status of OAC, OVC and MacDonald Institute.

These institutions are basically developed for the benefit of the agricultural community of the province and they do not at the moment and under their present organization fit the pattern of our university development in the province in any way. They are completely subsidized by the government, both academically and as far as residences and so on are concerned. They do not fit the pattern of our universities, all of which are independent and have sources of revenue independent of the government. That is one difference that I would point out.

We have introduced two bills in the present session in order to separate two functions that have been carried on in these three institutions, namely, the educational function and the research function. The purpose in separating these two functions as we have done by uniting the three institutions into one group and establishing a research institute to handle research, is to distinguish these functions so that we will have the purely educational function on one hand and the practical research function, which has served agriculture so well over the years, separated from research as it is associated with an educational institution.

Now, as far as granting university status to these three colleges, I would say that a great deal of thought would have to be given to that matter. I think we have taken the first steps in these bills in order to develop the idea and see whether it would, in fact, prove to be feasible, whether we would establish a university there.

Hon. members can see now that this is basically a farmers' college and has been over the years. It has performed that function very well. It is one of the few institutions of its type in the British Commonwealth of Nations and I think we would have to proceed very carefully before we made any changes in its status, and particularly change its relationship to the rural communities and to the rural economy and the farm economy of the province.

For these reasons, I would say that immediately I cannot see any possibility of this institution becoming a university. On the other hand, I do point out to the hon. member that in separating these functions as we have done with these two bills—and I believe these were the bills that were being discussed in the committee—this is the first step to seeing what can be done.

But hon. members have to consider the possibility of duplication of facilities. If these institutions became a university, then of course, they would, I assume, want to immediately institute all types of university courses. I would point out that we have a university in Waterloo which the government is subsidizing quite heavily, which is developing and providing many courses for young people from that area. We have another university in London being subsidized by the government for some few years. Recently we have created another university in the Windsor area. Now, at the moment, it is a good question as to whether we need another general university in the Guelph area.

So if hon. members put these various points together, they can see that it is a very complex question and one that cannot be settled immediately. It is a question that will require a great deal of examination and study in order to trace through the final ramifications and results of the hon. member's proposal.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister about these particular votes. Most of them, as they go along, seem to be rather high. There does not seem to be any real consideration being taken as far as seeing if it would be possible now or in the future to see that reductions are made in any of these votes. This particular one here—we spent $5,091,429; now we are asked to spend $5,306,000. All the different categories here are added up and it comes to a certain figure; does the hon. Minister take these different votes, look at them very carefully to see if they can be pared?

There does not seem to be any indication through the whole vote, that I can see, where this has been done in any of the votes. I feel that if the hon. Minister could look at these things very carefully and see where savings could be made—just because something is to cost a certain amount last year does not necessarily mean it is going to cost the same and more this year. Surely there should be some reduction shown somewhere along the line through this particular department.

Of course, I would not want to say all the departments are doing exactly the same thing but the indications seem to be there. Surely, we should or could expect real concentration of savings within this department, at least, and I certainly would like to see for once some indication of this being done.

Vote 117 agreed to.

On vote 118:

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the revenue of the various departments—OAC, OVC—from where does the revenue from the various departments come? Does it come back to the department, does it come to OAC, or does it come back to the general revenue of the province?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Innes: Recently, I believe it was last year, the dining hall concession was tendered to an outside firm at the OAC; previously it had been operated by the college. What was the reason for tendering it out? There seem to be some complaints.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think it was done in the interest of efficient administration. This is done in most of our high schools across the province, and we simply expanded it to the OAC as a very efficient way of handling this particular service.

Mr. Innes: Well, it may be efficient but I understand from the students up there that it is not too satisfactory, and I bring that to the attention of the hon. Minister.

In the public accounts for the OAC there is an item for Rochester and Pittsburgh Coal Company—$146,000. I would like to know if any Canadian coal was tendered for that particular college? Why an American firm?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I understand that is a Canadian company; the tenders are called, and considered, and the low tender gets the bid. Again, it is a Canadian company as I understand it.

Mr. Innes: Do we understand this is Canadian coal? There is a difference.

Vote 118 agreed to.

Votes 119 and 120 agreed to.

On vote 121:

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on vote 121, the Ontario Telephone Commission. I would like to express to the House my satisfaction in the work this commission is doing. I had considerable to do with getting it appointed, a number of years ago, and they are trying to fill a place where some assistance is very necessary. When they first were appointed, there were 500 independent telephone companies in the province of Ontario, serving about 175,000 phone holders. That number of phone companies now is down to 270 and the strange thing is it is serving about the same number of phone holders, because more people are taking phones on all the time.

Different people have said to me, why do we have these independent companies? Why are they necessary?

Back over the years the rural people had to help themselves. The Bell Telephone was serving the urban areas and was not interested in rural areas—that is partly correct. They were not interested in branching out into the rural areas because it is not a paying proposition. They established in the towns, villages and urban centres and in many instances farmers took their own lines in and attached on to the Bell central. They became, what they call, service station companies. They have operated that way over the years.

This telephone commission has been gradually trying to get these companies amalgamated. There are still quite a number of those in existence, yet. It means that a company like that is not large enough to maintain a staff of repair men and operators to carry on in a businesslike way, and to make any money. And, like any other business, if you are in the telephone business, you must make some money. They have been disappearing very fast and it is causing a very great worry to many people in this province.

In 1961, 39 companies disappeared—27 of those were taken over by the Bell. I want to say here and now that the Bell does not want to take those companies over. The Bell is worried about the situation. They have no desire to become a monopoly. We already have our NDP people with a platform that is going to take over the Bell Telephone Company, and as soon as any company becomes a monopoly there is always the possibility of being accused of monopolizing things and getting into trouble. We have worked with the Bell Company all our lives. I have been on the telephones directing the company for about 40 years, and we have found them very co-operative and anxious to work with independent companies.

The telephone authority has been offering various kinds of assistance to these companies. They help them set up bookkeeping and proper accounts. They assist them in engineering. They have an engineer who is the chief engineer and doing an especially good job. We have used him two or three times in our work and he is very co-operative. The authority is very co-operative in assisting in any way they can.

We are worried about the fact that the companies are disappearing through the country and I want to make a statement here right now that Bell Telephone does not give as good a service to country people as independent companies do and can. They are closer to their work, closer to the people, and are doing an exceptionally good job.

Of course, disputes arise and they are brought to this board to be settled. They try to get the companies together, trying to get them to amalgamate and get them stronger, because a company must be a certain size before it can have enough income and revenue to carry on. We have a hundred systems today that involve less than 500 phones and any company under 500 phones cannot operate successfully. My worry, Mr. Chairman, is that unless something is done to assist these companies to carry on they will gradually disappear and we may get to one system.

I can assure the hon. Minister—and I repeat myself—the Bell Telephone Company does not want this and they are willing to do anything and help in any way to keep these smaller systems working. Bell Telephone assists the small systems in giving service because they are interested in following the service right through to the subscriber whether it is on their line or on the independent line.

We have—there is no need of me reading a list of them of 59, there is a list of 500 or more—our number was about 100 with less than 500 phones. I am not going to take much time on this, because it is only a small item of expenditure, but one that has been very useful to a great number of people in the province.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to bring this before the House, if the time has not come when there should be some assistance given to these small independent companies? I am suggesting that there be a loan company or something set up for the government to loan them some money. I am not suggesting that we give them any subsidy or bonus of any kind.

There is no place they can go to borrow money. The loan companies are not allowed to lend it to them, and apparently this IBB in Ottawa is not allowed to lend it to them, as so far they have not approved any loans. I am suggesting that the Ontario government could well step into the picture and make money available at, I would suggest, not less than 6 per cent or whatever it costs the Ontario government to supply the money.

There would be no loss in this because it would be under the control of the telephone commission, who have now had enough experience. They know the situation, they know the business; and the telephone business is one business where you know where you are going.

I might say I have been a director of our company for years. We have 1,600 phones. We have two centrals that have been changed over to dial. We are proceeding now to change over the third central, and by the time it is changed over we are going to have approximately 2,000 phones.

It requires a lot of money for this service. The people are demanding it, and unless some money is made available for these companies to carry on, the people themselves, in demanding services, are going to force them all out of business; because country people have the same rights to the same kind of telephone service that anybody else has. It is not a question of the government giving anything; it is a question of the government making available money to assist these firms to carry on and put their systems up to date and give the people in the rural areas the proper kind of telephone service.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there be a minimum set for the number of phones that would be assisted. I would say it should not be less than 800 to 1,000, but I would not want to be too definite about that figure. Sometimes there is a company in a situation with 500 phones, which number it is not possible to increase without a great deal of difficulty. I would suggest that while there should be 800 to 1,000 minimum, there should be a leeway made that the commission, or the hon. Minister, or whatever board is set up to handle it—and I believe a commission would be the proper board—where there was, say, a company with 500 phones, would have the deciding vote or authority to say whether that company should have a loan or not.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring this up before the House; I think it is worth considering and worth some discussion, and I think would be a great deal of help to the rural people and the farmers of Ontario.

Vote 121 agreed to.

On vote 122:

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the hon. Minister under vote 122? I should like to know how many loans are still outstanding to the Ontario junior farm loan branch.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the question is that there are just under 3,200 loans outstanding at this date.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, we know that under the estimates for this we have a budget of some $100,000. I checked back into the public accounts for last year and find that we have some six or seven executive-type personnel on the payroll. This loan board, as I understand it, has ceased operations for the purpose of granting loans since the federal government went into the business of making loans. Now, there are 3,200 loans outstanding and it costs us $100,000 a year to administer this department; it seems to me that it is costing us $3,000 per year per loan. Is that correct?

An. hon. member: No—$30.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, in any event, Mr. Chairman, I will get the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) to figure it out for me, and maybe correct it for me. In any event, I do not think any organization would continue a staff this large to service such a few loans. If we figure that it requires $100,000 simply to keep the records and take in the payments with respect to this limited number of loans, I think it is costing us too much money; and I think the hon. Minister should take another look and perhaps cut these estimates.

I have raised this matter in the Legislature before, Mr. Chairman, and I note that very little has been done. I suggest that possibly the only changes that have been made have been the odd one that they have been able to absorb into other departments within The Department of Agriculture.

I wonder if the hon. Minister would inform us as to why it is necessary to maintain a staff this large to service these few loans which are still outstanding.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that is certainly under consideration. I would point out to my hon. friend that the estimate has been dropped $16,500 for this year; that there are three less on the payroll today than there were at this time last year, and that we assume that as this matter consolidates itself into purely a collection agency we can perhaps reduce the staff even further.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, I am pretty sure, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. Minister were to, as suggested, tender out the servicing of this loan to a private enterprise company, it could have been done for at least half of this.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: A collection agency to collect from these junior farmers? Does the hon. member really believe in that?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I think that if this is as efficient as the government can operate this system, they had better look around for some method of getting it done. I did not suggest a collection agency, and apparently the hon. Minister is of the opinion that the only people who could do it was a collection agency. There are other facilities available in the province that I think could do it.

Mr. Oliver: Did the hon. Minister tell the House how much money was outstanding? I just came into the House and I did not know if that information was given or not.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Does the hon. member want that information?

Mr. Oliver: Yes, I do.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The principal outstanding is $20,250,000, approximately, just within a few dollars.

Vote 122 agreed to.

On vote 123:

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): On vote 123 I would like to ask about this Co-operative Loans Act. Is there money still being loaned for co-operatives under this Act?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Mr. Chapple: There is money still being loaned?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, yes.

Mr. Chapple: And this $450,000 is available this year for loans under this category to co-operatives? It is $450,000 here set aside. Is that so?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I am not too clear on what the hon. member is asking, but the amount loaned this year was $488,000 to co-operatives. Now, this has been set as an estimate of $450,000, for the coming year, and if there is more needed we will--

Mr. Chapple: I just wanted to know that.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I had noticed on the leadership convention of the Conservative party, that there was a platform which had been drawn up, and in this platform it was going to give assistance to immigrant families to settle on farms. I wonder would this assistance come under this co-operative loan or is there any way that an immigrant can get a loan to settle on a farm? Does he have to be a resident of Canada, or does he have to be a Canadian citizen?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The Ontario government is not in the farm loan business. The junior farmers loans were the only ones we were engaged in and we withdrew from that at the establishment of the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation, which does provide loans for farm people engaged in full-time farming.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister: has his department given any consideration that they might possibly go back into the field again to give loans to junior farmers in the province? Might the department go back into that field again?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No consideration has been given to that. We have had no particular demand for it. As far as I know, the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation is providing satisfactory credit for farmers and I have not heard of objections to it in our area. We would feel that at the moment at least there would not appear to be any demand for a duplication of services.

Mr. Manley: Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot altogether agree with the observations of the hon. Minister when he says that the Canadian Farm Loan Corporation is meeting the demands in this province. I have had considerable experience with this and I find that young farmers are having great difficulty in getting loans from the Canadian Farm Loan Corporation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Manley: I was saying that I have had some experience, Mr. Chairman, and I find that this really does not meet the needs of the young farmers in the province of Ontario, nor in fact in Canada.

Now the Farm Co-operation Loan Board, as we know it, at Ottawa, will not look at a loan unless the acreage is far in excess of 100 acres. I have had experience where a son wanted to buy a farm adjoining his father. The father had the machinery and the equipment and they could work together, but the young farmer was turned down. They figured that what they were going to loan on was not of sufficient acreage and he did not have the full equipment in order to operate the farm. Nevertheless the equipment was there which could run both farms' acreage. I think there definitely is a place—if we are so concerned with the future development of the farming industry in this province and if we are going to contribute in a way that is going to keep the young farmers on the farm then we have to provide the credit that is necessary for them to get into the business of farming.

I do not know why in the world the Ontario government pulled out of this field. I do not think that the losses were such that that was a deterrent at all, or know why that would be any reason for them to pull out of this field.

It is quite different in other provinces, and I want to give the example of Quebec. Quebec did not pull out; they went on and made loans more available and easier for the young farmers there. They are encouraging the young men in Quebec to stay on the farms.

An hon. member: It has changed a bit.

Mr. Manley: Surely, it is making credit easier. The loans have increased in Quebec. They have shown a forward step in Quebec. But in 1959, the latest figure that I have, the Quebec government put out loans to the value of $7,243,295 at an interest rate of 2.5 per cent. They are only charging 2.5 per cent down there. They are leading the way, they are encouraging the young farmers to take up farming and to stay on the land.

But here the government is putting the young farmers off the land, they are increasing the unemployment rolls across the province and they are not giving any encouragement at all to the young farmers who might want to stay on the land if they had an opportunity to get started.

Any hon. members who have any experience in farm operations today or who have been in the position of having to start a young boy out on a farm, surely they must know the amount of money that it takes. I think there is a definite place here as far as the Ontario government is concerned. If they are interested in the welfare of the farming interest today, then I think there is a place for them to get back into the loaning of money to young farmers in order to get them established on the farms of this province.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Just on a point of information, did the hon. member say that Quebec is loaning money at 2.5 per cent? Under what conditions and in what amounts?

Mr. Manley: Pardon?

Mr. Root: Under what conditions did they loan money at 2.5 per cent and in what amounts?

Mr. Manley: The length of the loan runs up, I believe, to about 35 or 39 years. They give up to 75 per cent of the value of the farm. I hope that will answer the question of the hon. member.

Mr. Root: Mr. Chairman, that was not the question I asked.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is an existing programme today, is it? Is the hon. member for Stormont asserting that?

Mr. Root: Mr. Chairman, my question was, how much money can you borrow at 2.5 per cent and under what conditions, what type of farm, or what type of operation can you borrow money at 2.5 per cent?

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, I want to get involved here just for a minute. Maybe it would be a good place for this government to borrow money, from Quebec at 2.5 per cent. Look at the money they would save in interest in a year.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, if I could, I would like to come back to this platform about the immigrant families settling on farms. I would like to say to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) that in my riding of Dovercourt there are many men with a background of farming. Right now, and over the past couple of years, these men have been without work and are huddled in small homes. I came down once with a delegation to The Department of Agriculture. They have this background in agriculture and would give anything for the opportunity of owning a small bit of land. I notice—and I would say that I thought it was a very far-sighted policy—that hon. members opposite had at their convention mention of placing people on farms. But I would say that from the point of view of these people—I am speaking particularly of Portuguese immigrants—who have tried to set up a co-operative farm base so that they could farm after having had some experience on Ontario farms, have heard that the government would help. I understand that previously the federal government, through a department of settlement, did give some assistance. I understand that in Alberta and some of the other provinces there has been assistance given to immigrants after they have had a certain period of residence.

I would like to just raise this to the hon. Minister, that in view of the congestion of people in cities and in view of the unemployment picture, instead of having to keep people on relief payrolls, it might be a wonderful thing if we had some way to give them a foothold to get some land. I am quite sure that they would prove their value as farmers of Ontario if this opportunity was given to them, and perhaps given through this Co-operatives Loans Act or if there was some extension from The Junior Farmers Act.

Vote 123 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report that it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves, seconded by hon. R. W. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources), that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof, it do stand adjourned until Thursday next at 2:00, p.m.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. C. T. Rollins (Hastings East), from the select committee appointed to prepare the lists of hon. members to compose the standing committees of the House, presented the committee's third report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee recommends that the revised list of the standing committees ordered by the House be composed as follows:

Committee on agriculture: Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Auld, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Carruthers, Chapple, Connell, Davis, Davison, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Edwards (Wentworth), Evans, Fullerton, Gisborn, Gomme, Guindon, Hall, Hamilton, Hanna, Hoffman, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Letherby, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morningstar, Myers, McNeil, Nixon, Noden, Oliver, Parry, Quilty, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Spence, Stewart, Sutton, Whicher, Whitney, Wintermeyer, Worton—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on conservation, lands and forests: Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Auld, Belisle, Boyer, Brunelle, Carruthers, Chapple, Davison, Edwards (Perth), Evans, Fullerton, Gibson, Gisborn, Gomme, Guindon, Hall, Hamilton, Harris, Hoffman, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), Johnston (Parry Sound), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morningstar, Morrow, McNeil, Nixon, Noden, Oliver, Parry, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Sopha, Spence, Sutton, Troy, Quilty, Wardrope, Whicher, White—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on education: Messrs. Auld, Beckett, Belanger, Belisle, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Bryden, Carruthers, Cowling, Davis, Davison, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Evans, Gibson, Gould, Guindon, Hamilton, Harris, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, MacNaughton, Morin, Morningstar, Morrow, Myers, McNeil, Newman, Nixon, Parry, Phillips, Price, Reilly, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Singer, Stewart, Sutton, Thompson, Trotter, Troy, Whicher, White, Wintermeyer—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on energy: Messrs. Brunelle, Bryden, Bukator, Carruthers, Chapple, Davis, Gomme, Guindon, Hamilton, Haskett, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, MacNaughton, Myers, McNeil, Nixon, Oliver, Phillips, Reaume, Reilly, Rollins, Root, Simonett, Singer, Sopha, Stewart, Thomas, Whicher, Whitney, Wintermeyer—35.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of five members.

Committee on game and fish: Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Beckett, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Chapple, Cowling, Davis, Davison, Evans, Fullerton, Gibson, Gisborn, Guindon, Hamilton, Hoffman, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, Lyons, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morningstar, Morrow, Myers, McNeil, Newman, Nixon, Noden, Parry, Price, Quilty, Rollins, Root, Simonett, Sopha, Spence, Stewart, Sutton, Troy, Whicher, White, Whitney—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on government commissions: Messrs. Auld, Beckett, Belanger, Brunelle, Bryden, Davis, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Guindon, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lawrence, Lewis, MacDonald, MacNaughton, Morningstar, Morrow, McNeil, Oliver, Parry, Phillips, Price, Reaume, Root, Sandercock, Singer, Sopha, Sutton, Thomas, Trotter, Troy, Whicher, Whitney, Wintermeyer—35.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of five members.

Committee on health and welfare: Messrs. Auld, Belisle, Boyer, Brunelle, Brown, Bukator, Carruthers, Chapple, Cowling, Davis, Davison, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Edwards (Wentworth), Evans, Gomme, Guindon, Harris, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Laverne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Morningstar, Morrow, McNeil, Newman, Noden, Oliver, Parry, Phillips, Price, Reilly, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Spence, Sutton, Thomas, Thompson, Trotter, Troy, Wintermeyer, Worton—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on highways and highway safety: Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Auld, Beckett, Belanger, Belisle, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Carruthers, Cowling, Davis, Edwards (Perth), Edwards (Wentworth), Fullerton, Gibson, Gisborn, Gomme, Gordon, Grossman, Guindon, Hall, Hamilton, Hanna, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Laverne, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morrow, McNeil, Newman, Noden, Price, Reaume, Reilly, Rollins, Root, Simonett, Singer, Sutton, Thomas, Thompson, White, Worton—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on labour: Messrs. Auld, Belanger, Belisle, Carruthers, Cass, Daley, Davis, Davison, Downer, Edwards (Wentworth), Gibson, Gisborn, Gomme, Grossman, Hamilton, Hanna, Haskett, Laverne, Lawrence, MacDonald, MacNaughton, Morningstar, Myers, Newman, Parry, Reaume, Rowntree, Simonett, Singer, Sopha, Trotter, Wardrobe, Whicher, White, Yaremko—35.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of five members.

Committee on legal bills: Messrs. Beckett, Bryden, Cass, Davis, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Gould, Grossman, Hall, Hanna, Haskett, Lawrence, Macaulay, MacDonald, Myers, Nickle, Noden, Parry, Price, Rowntree, Singer, Sopha, Trotter, Wintermeyer, Yaremko—25.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of five members.

Committee on mining: Messrs. Belisle, Brunelle, Bryden, Chapple, Davis, Evans, Fullerton, Gisborn, Gomme, Grossman, Harris, Hoffman, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Laverne, MacDonald, Mackenzie, Manley, Morin, Morrow, Newman, Noden, Price, Quilty, Rollins, Root, Rowntree, Sandercock, Sopha, Thompson, Troy, Wardrobe, Wintermeyer, Worton—35.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of five members.

Committee on municipal law: Messrs. Auld, Beckett, Belanger, Belisle, Brunelle, Bryden, Carruthers, Cowling, Davis, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Edwards (Wentworth), Evans, Fullerton, Gibson, Gomme, Hall, Hamilton, Haskett, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), Laverne, Lawrence, Lewis, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morin, Myers, McNeil, Newman, Nickle, Oliver, Parry, Price, Reaume, Reilly, Root, Rowntree, Sandercock, Singer, Sopha, Stewart, Sutton, Thomas, Whicher, Whitney, Worton, Yaremko—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on printing: Messrs. Auld, Belanger, Belisle, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Carruthers, Cowling, Evans, Fullerton, Gisborn, Gomme, Gordon, Hamilton, Haskett, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), MacDonald, Mackenzie, Manley, Morin, Parry, Whitney, Wintermeyer, Worton—25.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of five members.

Committee on private bills: Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Auld, Beckett, Belanger, Belisle, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Bryden, Carruthers, Cowling, Davis, Edwards (Perth), Evans, Fullerton, Gisborn, Gomme, Gordon, Gould, Grossman, Guindon, Hall, Hamilton, Hanna, Harris, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Laverne, Lawrence, Lewis, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morningstar, Morrow, Myers, McNeil, Newman, Nickle, Nixon, Oliver, Parry, Price, Reaume, Reilly, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Singer, Sopha, Sutton, Thomas, Trotter, Troy, Whicher, Whitney—60.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on privileges and elections: Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Belisle, Boyer, Brunelle, Davis, Gomme, Grossman, Harris, Lawrence, Letherby, MacDonald, Morrow, Oliver, Trotter, Wintermeyer—15.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of five members.

Committee on public accounts: Messrs. Auld, Beckett, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Bryden, Chapple, Cowling, Davis, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Edwards (Wentworth), Fullerton, Gomme, Gould, Grossman, Guindon, Hanna, Haskett, Hoffman, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lyons, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Morrow, Myers, Noden, Oliver, Parry, Price, Reaume, Rollins, Rowntree, Sandercock, Simonett, Singer, Sutton, Thomas, Thompson, Trotter, Whicher, White, Whitney, Wintermeyer, Worton—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Committee on standing orders: Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Auld, Belisle, Fullerton, Gordon, Hall, Hanna, Hoffman, Janes, Lavergne, Lyons, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, McNeil, Newman, Noden, Parry, Sandercock, Sutton, Thomas, Troy, White, Wintermeyer—25.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of five members.

Committee on travel and publicity: Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Auld, Beckett, Belanger, Belisle, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Bukator, Carruthers, Chapple, Cowling, Davis, Davison, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Fullerton, Gibson, Gisborn, Gomme, Gordon, Grossman, Guindon, Hamilton, Harris, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, Lyons, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Morin, Newman, Noden, Parry, Quilty, Reaume, Reilly, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Trotter, Troy, Whicher, Whitney—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of seven members.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is actually voted on, I would like to request of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) that the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Quilty) be added to the committee on education. He has made that representation to me just recently, after the arrangement was made. I presume that will not cause any undue interruption or imbalance.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I am sure the mover the motion will agree to that and we can add him.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark) from the standing committee on private bills, presented the committee's fifth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill No. Pr11, An Act respecting the City of St. Catharines.

Bill No. Pr17, An Act respecting the City of Ottawa.

Your committee would recommend that the following bill having been withdrawn be not reported and would further recommend that the fees less the penalties and the actual cost of printing be remitted:

Bill No. Pr6, An Act respecting the Town of Orillia.

Mr. J. H. White (London South), from the standing committee on education, presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill No. 33, An Act to amend The Department of Education Act.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill No. 34, An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act.

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin), from the standing committee on agriculture, presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. 70, An Act to amend The Agricultural Societies Act.

Bill No. 74, An Act to amend The Bees Act.

Bill No. 75, An Act to amend The Co-operative Loans Act.

Bill No. 76, An Act to amend The Horticultural Societies Act.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

PUBLIC PARKS ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Public Parks Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister would outline the purpose of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this bill contains many amendments to the Act. Among other things it removes the restrictions on the area of parks which can be held by a board of parks management and makes it the same as those for parks operated by a council. It provides that a municipality may raise, if it so desires, in its annual estimates more than the one or two mills, as the case may be, now required by statute to be raised for park purposes. It will allow a board of parks management to do work with their equipment and personnel for the municipality and other boards of the municipality and charge therefor.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Warrender) of which he has had notice.

Three men have been killed recently in three separate accidents while working on a Malton airport building. We are informed that Toronto township carried out no safety inspection and that the township officials were unaware of The Building Trades Protection Act.

My question to the hon. Minister is this: has The Department of Labour notified Ontario municipalities of The Building Trades Protection Act as recommended by the McAndrews report?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as noted in the question, there have been three fatal accidents on a construction job at Malton airport in Toronto township. First in November last a foreman stepped into an opening in the floor and fell eight feet. Second, in February, 1962, a workman was pulling a tarpaulin over the steel framework as a temporary roof and he lost his balance while standing on a 2 by 10 inch plank laid across two steel beams. He fell onto the tarpaulin and struck the base of a steel framework. Third, on Monday last, a workman was pulling a tarpaulin into position to serve as a temporary shelter and an eyelet suddenly gave way causing him to lose his balance and fall through the steel framework 19 feet.

The foregoing information was supplied to my officials by the construction safety association, one of whose inspectors, by the way, had advised the workers against using 2 by 10 inch planks and advised the use of a duckwalk. The McAndrews report recommends a repeal to The Building Trades Protection Act and the enactment of a new Act to be entitled The Construction Safety Act.

As hon. members of the House know, we have established by legislation the Labour Safety Council of Ontario and one of the first jobs it undertook was to examine a draft of the new Act, The Construction Safety Act. I expect it will not be too long before this legislation will be in the House. This, of course, will mean the repeal of The Building Trades Protection Act.

Insofar as notifying the municipalities of their responsibility to enforce The Building Trades Protection Act, the answer to the question is that because the McAndrews commission has recommended its repeal, because the Labour Safety Council of Ontario concurs, the municipalities were not notified.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question; I take it then that neither prior to the Hogg's Hollow disaster nor subsequently after the Hogg's Hollow disaster, or the McAndrews report, was anything ever done to try to enforce the regulations that were supposed to be in force here in the province of Ontario. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I could not answer that question.

Mr. Trotter: The hon. Minister does not know if they are enforcing the regulations at all?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: The Act has been there since 1911, I am told. It has been drawn to the attention of the municipalities over the years. The Act should be known to all the municipalities. But what happened prior to my time I do not know.

Mr. Trotter: It is the same government, Mr. Speaker!

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I am saying that since both the McAndrews report and the labour safety council have recommended the repeal of The Building Trades Protection Act that is going to be done.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question? Has the safety council recommended specific legislation and, if so, when?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: The council has recommended specific legislation. The legislation is now in the process of being studied and put into legislative shape by the legislative council and it should be in this House very soon.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask when they so recommended?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: When did they recommend it? I would think about three or four weeks ago.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions I would like to ask before the orders of the day, copies of which have gone to the appropriate hon. Ministers, through you.

The first one to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts): in view of the recent statement by the Most Reverend Alexander Carter, Bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Sault St. Marie, that, the regular scale of wages established in union contracts will be met in diocesan work and, other things being equal, diocesan work will be given to contractors with union contracts, has the government given consideration to establishing policy applicable to all government departments that in public works union wage scales will be met and in letting contracts preference will be given to contractors with union agreements?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, in answer to this question, I would say first that matters of this type are pretty well always under consideration. To expand that a little bit, our government contracts are let to those firms whose tenders are accepted. The acceptance of a tender depends upon the price quoted and the ability of the contractor to perform the work involved. It is not a question of whether the firm, whose tender is accepted, has a union or has not. It is a good question, I think, as to whether there should be a consideration. Now this is the point, I believe, of the hon. member's question.

In the first place, not all firms in this province that are taxpayers are necessarily unionized and thus I do not think that it can be considered proper for the government to discriminate against some firms that are taxpayers and do not happen to be unionized, in favour of other firms that are taxpayers and that are unionized. I would point out, in addition, that not all the workers of this province belong to unions, and it is the task of the unions to establish themselves in those firms that they wish to unionize, rather than a task of this government to force workers to join unions, or firms to establish unions in their plants, if they are to share in government business.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? In making a decision with regard to contracts, does the government in any sense at all examine whether or not a tender is lower because of the fact that the company has not got a union and therefore is paying lower wages?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, Mr. Speaker, in assessing the fact of what a low tender is, various matters are considered, and I assume this is considered as well. But the hon. member knows as well as I do that rates of pay vary considerably from area to area across the province and I am inclined to doubt that a low tender would be refused because the rates of pay of the firm tendering were arbitrarily below those of any union standard that someone might suggest.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, may I direct—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I do not propose to debate this matter this afternoon. There will be other opportunities. I am only answering a question before the orders of the day. I think these things get out of hand.

Mr. Bryden: Has the government ever given consideration to a fair-wage policy to ensure that contracts would not be awarded on the basis of labour exploitation?

Mr. MacDonald: My second question, which I mentioned a moment ago, is directed to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond). Yesterday's Toronto Daily Star carries comments from Dr. Albert Sabin, if that is the correct pronunciation of the name, the U.S. researcher who developed the oral polio-vaccine, asserting the vaccine need not be used merely as a booster for the Salk vaccine but rather should be supplied for everybody in the community. "If this is not done in Ontario, the Minister of Health will be responsible for every paralytic polio case in Ontario this summer," Dr. Sabin is reported as saying. My question to the hon. Minister is this: would the hon. Minister comment on this statement, particularly from the point of view of what is the considered view of medical authorities as to the reliability of the new Sabin vaccine?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the outburst of Dr. Sabin was surprising to me, to put it mildly, and would, I suggest, be considered most unprofessional.

I am not, however, at all exercised by Dr. Sabin's opinion of me or the charge he has levelled against me. I am very much concerned lest his charge might rouse doubts and fears in the minds of the people of Ontario, concerning the efficacy of our programme to protect them from polio. Any such fears or doubts are completely groundless, as Dr. Sabin well knows.

Our proposed use of live oral polio virus vaccine is based upon the advice of our Canadian medical scientific advisers, in whom we have every confidence. These advisers are fully knowledgeable regarding our Canadian Salk vaccine and the extent of Salk vaccination in Canada. They also have all available knowledge of the results of the Sabin types of oral vaccination. They have given their advice, and we are going to follow it, irrespective of the opinion of anyone else.

We are advised that the Sabin vaccination alone will not give any higher a percentage of successful immunization than the Salk vaccine alone will give. The two combined may be expected to improve this position. Therefore our experts say that, and I quote:

It will be wise to use Sabin vaccine to supplement the effect of Salk vaccine and programmes of individual immunization.

We have every confidence in our Canadian experts and I have no hesitation in stating publicly that they are as well, or better, qualified in this field than any group in the world. May I repeat again my statement of the other day; a statement based upon Canadian expert opinion, quote:

The Sabin type of vaccine will not be used to replace Salk vaccine but rather to reinforce the level of immunity and give added assurance that anyone who did not for any reason respond well to the Salk vaccine will get a good booster from the live oral vaccine. Its greatest value will be in giving adequate protection to a whole family unit or a whole community.

This, of course, is in contradiction to the Salk vaccine, where the individual could be immunized without the necessity of the whole family—although it would be better of course that the whole family should be vaccinated—therefore until our experts advise otherwise, this is the plan we will follow. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it would be very interesting if Dr. Sabin were to advise us here in Ontario how many States in his own country have endorsed and are using Sabin vaccine to the exclusion of all others.

Mr. Trotter: Before the orders of the day, I have a question for the hon. Prime Minister and Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts). It has been stated in the Toronto Globe and Mail of March 7, 1962, that Ontario is in danger of failing to qualify for a 25 per cent bonus the federal government is offering toward the cost of retraining the unemployed. The question is in two parts:

How far does this province have to go to reach the required quota by March 31, 1962; and secondly, what effort is the government making to reach the required quota?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the quota of training days is based on 7 per cent of the working population as of some date in 1959, and the working population is assumed to be everyone over 14. This is the basis set in the formula with the federal government and, if you exceed the number of training days produced by applying this formula, then the federal government will assume 75 per cent of the cost of retraining unemployed, and if you do not reach that figure they will assume 50 per cent.

I believe the term "bonus" is a misnomer. I do not think it is a bonus. It is merely a formula that has been worked out. However, the quota of training days that we must reach in this province in order to obtain a 75 per cent sharing of the cost by the federal government is 286,400. As of January 31, 1962, we had total training days of 201,829.

Now I must project for February and March, if I am to answer the hon. member's question, because I have not the figures for February, and of course, we are into March at the moment. These courses end and start at various times and training takes place in 20-odd communities across the province, so I will have to take rough figures and project them in order to see where we can reasonably expect to be on March 31. The number of trainees in the province in January was 2,166 and the number of training days in February was 20, and in March was 22. So if we add these together for the two months we get 42; and if we multiply the number of trainees by the number of training days available, we will reach a figure of 90,972 training days, which we might logically expect to establish in these two months—barring such events as a school burning down or something of that nature. And if the hon. member adds the 90,972 that I project, to the 201,829 up to January 31, we will have a total of 292,801 as opposed to the 286,400 required to qualify for the 75 per cent grants. So we anticipate that we will reach the 75 per cent.

Now, what effort is the government making to reach the required quota—the other part of the hon. member's question. These courses are run on a local basis—except here in Toronto at the Provincial Institute of Trades where we run courses ourselves. In the normal course of events these courses are set up by local committees, who are aware of the circumstances in the local areas, who know what the unemployment situation might be there, who know what the job opportunities might be for those who are trained. We of course co-operate with every municipality.

We are in the process of acquiring a new building here which will be devoted entirely to retraining of the unemployed and will accommodate about 500 people. For that building, as I say, the negotiations are going on now. We have acquired another building on Wellesley Street which is presently being renovated to accommodate the automotive trades, and which in turn will relieve some of the space at the Provincial Institute of Trades on Nassau Street. I think I can assure the House that, providing there is a flow of unemployed people who want retraining, we will have facilities to reach this 75 per cent figure without any possibility of a doubt in the coming fiscal year.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question: In November we heard that $100 million was going to be spent in a period of time. I am surprised to hear from the answer of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) that we are just possibly going to make the minimum allowed. Has the programme not started which he expected to start in November?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member is talking about two entirely different things. Mr. Speaker, I will deal with this whole problem of the $100 million programme in the estimates of The Department of Education. The $100 million programme really has nothing to do with the subject matter of the hon. member's question.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week during the estimates of The Department of Agriculture there were two questions submitted by the hon. member for Kent East (Mr. Spence), I believe, one of them having to do with the affairs of the milk industry board. I believe one of the questions asked was the number of meetings held by the board, which is 31. The applications for licences refused by the board, three.

Prosecutions under The Milk Industry Act and the regulations: Two transporters pleaded guilty to the operation of a vehicle not in compliance with the regulations; two charges for distributing fluid milk products in an area not specified on the licence, were withdrawn after one or two adjournments. There were also a few cases where the board found it necessary to instruct the field men to institute court proceedings, but the requirements were met before a charge was actually laid.

The second question I recall, submitted by the hon. member, had to do with the recent vote held by the grain corn producers, concerning their marketing plan. I believe he wanted to know if the ballots were submitted in such a way that it could not be determined whether they were identified with the man who had cast the vote. Now the procedure is simply this; I have the ballot here and the contents of the letter that was submitted to each individual corn grower, according to the list of corn growers who had registered to vote.

The instructions for the mail vote—including an envelope to return the ballot—were submitted to each grower, and he was instructed to mark the ballot and to place the ballot in an unmarked brown envelope which I have here; he was then to seal the brown envelope. On neither the ballot nor the brown envelope are there any marks of identification of any kind or any number. The brown envelope was then placed inside the blue envelope here, and was returned to the farm products marketing board to Mr. J. W. Drennan, who acted as returning officer for the particular vote.

When the envelope was returned to the marketing board, the number that appears on the blue envelope was ticked off as the number corresponding to the producer's number listed on the vote. Each individual corn producer could submit only one ballot. These blue envelopes were then held until February 5—I believe it was—when the vote was counted. The scrutineer in favour of the plan and the scrutineer in opposition to the plan were both called in, and sat while the returning officer opened the blue envelope and discarded it.

The brown envelope was withdrawn and, when all the blue envelopes had been opened and discarded, the brown envelopes were then opened and the ballots withdrawn and the disposition of the vote was recorded according to the vote on the ballot. Now, this would, I think, prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that there could not have been any way that a determination could have been made as to the individual voter's favour or disfavour of the plan.

I trust that is satisfactory, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for raising the matter.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) a question in that regard? Was this outlined to the growers before they received this ballot? It seemed to be misleading, confusing, to the growers with that number on the little envelope.

Hon Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the instructions are clearly stated on the letter that went with the ballot. Any voter who read that letter would clearly understand, so there could be no misunderstanding as to how it was to be done. Now whether or not every voter understood this, I am in no position to know. This was something that was agreed upon by those who were promoting the corn vote. It was explained—as I understand—at meetings. Certainly a vote by mail is not a new procedure, but it is the first time I have ever heard the question raised.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

House in committee of supply; Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

On vote 2001:

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): Mr. Chairman, may I say that it is a very great privilege to appear before this House and to present the estimates of my department for the fiscal year of 1962 and 1963. In doing so, I will be reporting to the hon. members on one of the greatest years of accomplishment in the history of The Department of Transport.

Mr. Chairman, before doing so, and before proceeding, there are three matters of immediate interest to the hon. members of the House to which I should like to refer.

First, Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to announce to the hon. members of the House that a survey of the number of licences issued up to last night shows that the number of uninsured owners in Ontario has dropped 75 per cent compared with the same period last year. This reduction can be credited to the $20 fee required from uninsured motorists. This fee was increased from $5 at the beginning of the year.

As a result of the increase in this fee the records indicate that 98.6 per cent of the applicants for licences up to date have shown proof of insurance compared to 94.4 per cent for the same period last year.

Now Mr. Chairman, if this trend continues, it will mean that in the current year 97 per cent of all motor vehicle owners will be insured as compared to 91 per cent in 1961.

This will mean, according to information available to us, that Ontario will be in a better position in this regard than any other jurisdiction. Quebec claims under their new financial responsibility law, introduced last year, about 75 per cent insured. Manitoba, which for many years has had a law requiring the impoundment of uninsured motor vehicles involved in accidents, claims 95 per cent insured. It is estimated that New York State with its compulsory insurance law, has only 95 to 96 per cent insured vehicles on the road at any one time.

I am also pleased to announce Mr. Chairman, that the motoring public has responded very well indeed to the recent request not to wait until the last day to secure their licences. Up to the close of business last night better than 85 per cent had renewed their licences and permits. This leaves approximately 250,000 still to secure their licences by March 14. There should be no problem in issuing the remainder by the March 14 deadline with the some 260 agency offices located throughout the province.

I might add, Mr. Chairman, that if anyone is waiting until the last day hoping for a further extension, I am afraid he is due for a disappointment. There will definitely be no extension beyond March 14. Anyone operating a motor vehicle after midnight on that date—without 1962 plates—will leave himself open to such action as the authorities may deem appropriate in the circumstances.

May I again, Mr. Chairman, remind all motorists of the necessity to produce proof of insurance at the time of registration, to avoid payment of the $20 uninsured owner's fee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have a second important announcement to make concerning the subject of reciprocity with respect to the operation of commercial vehicles on an inter-provincial basis. A reciprocal agreement has just been signed and has been jointly announced by the hon. Minister of Highways of the province of Alberta and by me today, concerning an agreement between the governments of Ontario and of Alberta. As a result of this agreement, owners of commercial vehicles in each of the two provinces will be permitted to operate in the other's jurisdiction at a reduced registration fee. This announcement, as I have said, is being made simultaneously in this House and in the Alberta Legislature in Edmonton by my distinguished friend, the hon. Gordon Taylor, the Minister of Highways.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to be able to tell the House that The Ontario Department of Transport has taken the initiative in approaching all the other nine provinces and other nine governments in an effort to obtain reciprocity with all provinces. These negotiations are continuing. The New Brunswick government has accepted our proposal in principle and I have received their assurance that the agreement will be signed in the very near future. Negotiations with the Saskatchewan government have also been successfully concluded, and the agreement awaits the final approval of the provincial cabinet in that province.

The agreement provides that all commercial vehicles having a gross weight of three tons or less will be exempt from paying the registration fee in the other provinces; that is where a reciprocal agreement exists. For vehicles over three tons gross weight, a uniform fee of $10 per gross registered ton is to be levied in lieu of the registration fees. A reduced fee for all commercial transport operators will result. This could mean a saving of up to $700 for each tractor-trailer combination.

In addition to their regular licence plates, special plates and stickers for each province entering into the agreement will be issued to bus and truck fleet operators to identify their vehicles. These will permit such vehicles to operate in the other contracting provinces without paying additional registration fees.

These agreements, Mr. Chairman, constitute a major breakthrough in facilitating the movement of people and goods by bus and truck transport across Canada. They will also result in a much greater use of the Trans-Canada Highway which will inevitably benefit garages, service stations, restaurants, motels and other commercial operations catering to the transport trade all along the Trans-Canada route.

Thirdly, Mr. Chairman, it gives me further pleasure to announce to this House that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has directed all departments of the Ontario government to proceed with the installation of seat belts in government cars, if this has not already been done. Mr. Chairman, I believe that Ontario is the first of all 10 Canadian provinces to take this step in providing continued leadership towards greater safety.

Now, Mr. Chairman, during the past two decades, the economic growth of this province, along with that of Canada, and other countries, has been very, very great. During those 20 years, the rapid growth in population and personal incomes in Ontario has produced greatly increased demands for consumer products. Not low on the list of demands has been that for motor vehicles. Registrations increased between 1941 and 1961 from 740,000 vehicles to 2.1 million vehicles.

To keep pace with this rapidly expanding use of the motor vehicle in Ontario, The Department of Transport has grown from its early beginnings in 1903 under the Provincial Secretary's office, through The Department of Public Works and Highways to the Motor Vehicles Branch of The Department of Highways. Finally, in 1957 it blossomed forth as a fully fledged department—The Ontario Department of Transport. Since 1957, it has steadily grown until today it consists of nine separate branches with just under 900 employees. The future must see a continued growth of the department during the next 20 years, by which time it is estimated there will be twice as many vehicles and drivers as there are today, using the roads and highways of this province.

Now, with respect to registrations and revenues. The tremendous economic growth in Ontario since the end of the last war is reflected in the tremendous increase in the number of vehicles, as I have said. To illustrate this growth let us look at the figures for 1941.

In that year there were some 740,000 registered vehicles and just under a million drivers. The revenue for 1940-1941 totalled $9.3 million, of which $8.7 million came from permits and licences. By 1951 the number of vehicles had jumped to 1.2 million and drivers to 1.4 million. During the same period, revenue more than doubled to $20.3 million, $18.5 million of which was attributable to permits and licences.

During the next ten years, vehicles and drivers almost doubled while our revenue increased almost 3.5 times. In 1961 there were 2.1 million vehicles, 2.4 million drivers, and the total revenue amounted to some $67.7 million, of which $61.8 million was derived from permits and licences.

By 1970 it is estimated that there will be some 3.5 million vehicles operating on our highways and, by 1980, over 4 million. With these increases will come a proportionate increase in the number of drivers. However, all this has not taken place, nor will take place, without increasing the problems confronting The Department of Transport.

With respect to accident statistics, Mr. Chairman, traffic accidents are, regrettably, a major and ever-growing problem in Ontario and one which gives me grave concern. As the hon. members will already know, during the calendar year 1961, the overall traffic accident picture showed some relative or apparent improvement with a drop of approximately 2 per cent from 87,186 to 85,577. Unfortunately, at the same time personal injuries showed a slight increase, and fatal accidents recorded an all-time high, with 1,268 deaths against the 1,166 for 1960.

While over the years, the total number of accidents and fatalities has increased owing to the tremendous increase in the number of vehicles and the mileage driven each year by these vehicles, there has been a marked improvement in the fatality rate per 100 million miles driven. For example, in 1931 the rate was 15.1 fatal accidents per 100 million miles. In 1941 the rate was 14.0 and by 1951, 9.3. In 1961 the figure had dropped to 7.1 fatal accidents per 100 million miles driven.

Traffic accidents and their terrible loss of life, limb and property are, nevertheless, a growing problem in Ontario. It is a problem that must be relentlessly and continuously attacked by the department.

There are three main approaches to the problem of traffic accidents: (1) The safe driver; (2) The safe road; and (3) The safe vehicle.

Because we believe it to be the first line of attack in the prevention of traffic accidents, The Department of Transport has channelled much of its efforts towards the safe driver. Continued progress was made during 1961 under the new driver examination programme, and a number of highlights merit mention here.

On April 1, 1961, the department completed the conversion programme from the former "fee examiner" system to one consisting entirely of trained civil service examiners. To provide adequate examining service under the new system, the department now operates 43 permanent centres in major cities and towns across the province. In addition, service is provided by travelling examiners in an additional 95 towns and villages, on a weekly or twice-monthly basis as required.

These some 140 centres are strategically located throughout the province so that, with very few exceptions, no person has to travel more than 25 miles for such an examination—and in a great majority of cases less than 15 miles. I wish it were possible to have an examiner visit every community in the province, but this would not be economically sound, and I am ever mindful that it is the citizens of the province who in the end must pay the costs. I am confident that the present facilities available in Ontario are second to none, either in Canada or in the United States.

At the region No. 1 workshop of the American association of motor vehicle administrators held in New York City last year, Mr. Victor Veness stated that, of the 14 states and provinces in region No. 1 of that organization, Ontario had made more progress in driver licensing, driver control and driver improvement than any other state or province in the region.

Mr. Harry D. Fletcher, specialist in fleet safety at Pennsylvania State University, on a recent visit to Toronto asked for materials on the driver licensing programme and a copy of our road test score sheet, which he thought was superior to anything in use in the United States.

The introduction on June 1, 1961, of tests for temporary instruction permits may be considered a significant improvement in driver licensing. Now, before being issued a permit to practice driving, all applicants are required to pass a preliminary test of vision and a written test on the rules of the road and sign recognition. Previously a temporary instruction permit was issued on application.

The written test for an instruction permit is very basic but it was considered desirable, with the increasing traffic density, that everyone driving on Ontario streets and highways should be familiar with highway signs and rules of the road.

During the vision test the examiner has an opportunity to check other characteristics to ensure an applicant meets the required physical standards before getting behind the wheel of a car.

Since June 1, 1961, of 150,000 persons tested, 15,700 have had instruction permits restricted to wearing prescribed lenses. 403 applicants were referred for a professional eye examination and of this number 9 persons have not filed satisfactory eye certificates or did not meet other physical standards.

Further value of these tests, Mr. Chairman, is shown in the improvement now apparent on the more comprehensive written and sign tests required before taking a road test for an operator's or chauffeur's licence.

Analysis of first attempts for driver licence during 1961 show only 9 per cent failed inside tests compared to 37 per cent in 1960.

For a number of years it has been department policy to require re-examination in the following cases:

- (a) Drivers 80 years of age or over, who must be re-tested annually.
- (b) Drivers 70 years of age or over, if at fault in an accident.
- (c) Accident repeaters.
- (d) Drivers involved in fatal accidents.
- (e) Drivers previously suspended under the point system.

Some 7,979 persons were re-examined during 1961. Of this number 2,909 or 36.5 per cent failed first attempt. Analysis of first attempt failures shows 21.7 per cent lacked adequate knowledge of signs and rules; 42.4 per cent failed the road test and 35.9 per cent failed both tests.

During 1961 the re-examination programme was expanded to include school bus drivers seeking authority to operate school buses having a seating capacity of 10 or more passengers.

A total of 5,214 applicants met special examination standards for authority to drive school buses. Eighteen applicants for this authority were rejected because they failed to meet physical requirements; 16.9 per cent failed first attempt, or their first test.

Commencing March 5, 1962—this week—all drivers suspended for a definite period will be included as an additional class to be re-examined. The drivers in this latter-mentioned group have been suspended for serious violations of traffic laws and it would seem proper to require them to show that they possess or have skills and sufficiently mature attitudes necessary to participate successfully in traffic.

Approximately 15,000 drivers in this class will be re-examined in 1962.

Commencement will be made in the coming year on the installation of the proposed mechanized licence-issuing procedure. Preliminary studies on this project have been completed and we are now ready to proceed with the first part of the changeover. Completion of the programme is planned so that it will be possible to issue drivers' licences by machine, starting in 1964. At that time it will be possible to commence the department's planned re-examination of all drivers on a periodical basis, if such re-examination is indicated.

Now, with respect to the safe driver and driver control, while we are constantly striving to improve our standards of driver examinations and the quality of instruction of our examiners it will be recognized that driving tests, at best, can show whether the applicant can drive but not how well he will behave after the licence is issued. Provision for this situation must be made by some method of record-keeping and follow-up.

It was for this purpose the point system was introduced in April, 1959. The point system operates on the principle of weighting traffic offences according to their seriousness. When a driver is convicted for a traffic violation, an established number of points are scored against his record. If he accumulates a specified number of points in a two-year period, action is taken in an attempt to improve his driving.

Under the present point system regulations a driver is sent an advisory letter when he accumulates six demerit points. The letter sets out his record, urges that he give greater attention to his manner of driving behaviour and warns of more serious action that will be taken if he fails to do so.

If the driver receives further points that bring him to the nine-point level he is asked to attend an interview with a review officer of the department, who has had special training in such work. The review officer's job is to determine the cause of the bad record and to offer corrective help. The vast majority of the drivers interviewed show a willingness to co-operate. A few show a high measure of arrogance, belligerence, impatience or disregard for others, and in such cases immediate suspension is recommended. Other driver improvement action may include a driving examination, attendance at a traffic court clinic, or probation. If these various efforts to improve the driver are not successful and he moves to the twelve-point level, immediate suspension is applied.

During the first 34 months' operation of the system, 56,348 drivers were sent advisory letters at the six-point level; 12,706 interviews were conducted at the nine-point level; and 3,764 drivers had their licences withdrawn upon accumulation of twelve points.

The fact that only 4.7 per cent of the drivers who received advisory letters subsequently reached the twelve-point suspension level indicates that the initial warnings had a beneficial effect.

I should like to make it very clear to the hon. members that it is not the intention of the system to take drivers off the road, but rather to encourage the few bad drivers to improve their driving. It is only when all else fails that the licences are suspended.

It will be realized that in conjunction with a system of driver control, a highly efficient method to maintain driver records is required. I am happy to say that the department's driver control branch now is credited with having one of the most up-to-date mechanized record filing systems on the continent. Provision has been made in the department's estimates to further extend and complete this system in the coming year.

In addition to their use for internal department purposes, information from the drivers' records is made available to police, insurance companies and other agencies. During 1961, a total of 77,785 statements of operating records were processed for this purpose.

In reviewing the operations of the point system after a two-year period, I was most pleased and gratified to learn that over 95 per cent of our drivers had not accumulated sufficient points to warrant even a warning letter, and it is estimated that over 85 per cent have not accumulated any points. I congratulate the drivers of Ontario and commend them on achieving such an enviable record in the exercise of care and courtesy in their daily driving habits.

I am confident the point system can do much to improve the driving habits of the very small minority of bad drivers. As a result of the experience gained in the operation of the system, I believe that a few changes in the rules and regulations may be desirable. These are now being drafted and will shortly be announced.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I would like with your permission to discuss for a few minutes the highway safety programme of our department.

In an attempt to bring about a radical improvement in the traffic accident situation during the next fiscal year, the department intends to pursue a vigorous programme of accident prevention measures within the limits of the resources placed at its disposal. The work of every branch and division and of every individual in the department is related in some measure, either directly or indirectly, to the accident prevention problem. And I can assure hon. members, that they are unlikely to find anywhere a group of men and women more anxious to improve the traffic accident picture than among the members of the staff of our department.

But, however devoted, however sincere, and however dedicated they may be in their efforts to save lives and prevent needless injury and loss caused by motor vehicle mishaps, they cannot possibly be successful without the wholehearted interest and support of many agencies, organizations and individuals both inside and outside the government.

And here, let me assure you, Mr. Chairman, that finding adequate solutions to the problem is not a task that can be performed successfully by governments alone. It demands the active and continued support of all public-spirited citizens from every walk of life and from every part of Ontario.

May I remind hon. members that every citizen of this great province is either a motorist or a pedestrian. It is therefore up to each one of us to examine our own conscience and our own attitude with respect to this modern phenomenon, and to decide for ourselves whether we want to accept personal responsibility both as motorists and pedestrians, for learning and obeying the few simple rules that will enable anyone to survive in today's traffic.

I have mentioned that no success can be expected in this field without the wholehearted support of many individuals and groups outside the government. Chief among these are the local safety councils that labour selflessly and without expectation of any return to bring the traffic safety message to as many of their fellow citizens as will listen.

I would like at this juncture to pay heartfelt tribute to the men and women who are members of the 81 local safety councils now organized and operating at the grass-roots level in communities large and small throughout the province for their extremely effective work in helping to make the people of Ontario more safety conscious.

This is voluntary community service of the highest order and I would like on behalf of all hon. members of this House to express our deep and sincere appreciation for their excellent co-operation. It is true to say that without the help of the local safety councils, our field men would be unable to make any headway at all in the never-ending battle to reduce the tragic accident toll.

To focus attention on the work of community safety organizations and to develop public support for their efforts a series of regional highway safety conferences is being planned to take place at various locations in the province during the next fiscal year.

The objective of this programme will be to bring together a representative group of leading citizens in the western, north-western, north-eastern and eastern parts of the province to discuss the motor vehicle accident problem and to recommend measures for preventing such accidents more effectively in the future.

You will recall that province-wide highway safety conferences have been held annually at one central location here in Toronto during recent years. This year we are planning to organize a series of regional road safety workshops to serve the people in the four main geographical areas of Ontario. It is our sincere hope that these meetings will attract many new supporters for the cause of traffic accident prevention.

Another phase of our highway safety programme which is generating a good deal of interest is that which concerns itself with developing assistance among women's organizations. Our director of women's activities, Mrs. Ethel McLellan, is in constant contact with women's groups at the national, provincial and local levels to encourage them to undertake traffic safety projects. Her traffic safety programme for pre-school children in nursery schools and kindergartens has been particularly effective and has won broad and wide acceptance among educators, parents and children alike. In addition to supplying kits of materials to nursery schools and kindergartens in Ontario free of charge, these kits have been sold at cost in considerable quantities to interested groups and individuals all over Canada and the United States.

Another important activity for which the department is responsible is the highway safety advertising and publicity programme of the Ontario government. This is an intensive and continuous attempt to persuade our fellow citizens to observe the basic rules of traffic safety and to exercise care, courtesy and consideration for others, both as motorists and pedestrians.

During the next fiscal year, a carefully co-ordinated series of public announcements will be broadcast using every suitable medium of public information, including daily and weekly newspapers, radio and television stations, outdoor billboards, and farm and foreign language publications.

In addition, a continuous flow of highway safety material, suitable for editorial use in the press and on radio and television, will be maintained.

The department will also place a number of displays in exhibitions, conferences, conventions and other public gatherings. These include the Canadian National Exhibition here in Toronto, the Central Canada Exhibition in Ottawa, and the Western Ontario Fair in London. In addition, the department's mobile traffic safety centre will be on display at county fairs and exhibitions at numerous locations in various areas. The centre consists of a 38-foot all-aluminum trailer in which portable display units are installed. One side of the trailer opens up to form a stage and a covering canopy. As a result of an article on our display trailer which appeared in a prominent periodical in the traffic safety field published in the United States, we have received requests for the specifications of this unit from the New York City Police Department and the Superintendent of Traffic in Hong Kong.

Personnel of the highway safety branch are also actively engaged in promoting driver instruction in our secondary schools. To date there are some 57 schools giving courses with a number of others giving consideration to starting courses this year. These personnel also appear on radio and television, give talks to boards of education, local councils, service clubs, safety councils and other organizations interested in promoting safety.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring to the attention of the hon. members four organizations which are co-operating actively with this department in the field of traffic accident prevention, and I should like to commend them here for the fine work they are doing.

The Ontario Motor League is a fine example of a non-profit organization which has been serving Ontario motorists for 50 years. Their present membership amounts to some 250,000 and is increasing at the rate of 5,000 new members each month.

The Canadian Highway Safety Council is the co-ordinating body for all of Canada. The Department of Transport assists this association and council with a grant of $10,000 every year, and lends further assistance with personnel serving on various advisory committees.

The Ontario Traffic Conference, to which we give a grant of $5,000 a year, consists of a body of experts in traffic engineering, and of police, dedicated to the safe movement of traffic on our streets and highways. Department personnel again assist in an advisory capacity on committees.

And finally the Ontario Safety League, another non-profit organization engaged in all fields of safety and particularly in highway safety. This organization pioneered driver instruction in secondary schools and the "Elmer, the Safety Elephant" programme in primary schools. The Ontario Safety League receives a grant of $15,000 to further their important work.

Organizations such as these, and there are others, are to be commended for their excellent work and co-operation with The Department of Transport and the government.

Mr. Chairman, the "safe road" constitutes the second area of attack on the prevention of traffic accidents, and is an area that largely comes under The Department of Highways. That department has been and is certainly putting considerable effort into the "safe road" by continually improving highways, removing bad curves and obstructions and otherwise making our roads safer for the motorist.

At this time I should like to commend the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Goodfellow), my colleague, for the efforts of his department by way of design and construction to make our highways safe and to express our appreciation also for the excellent maintenance—both winter and summer—which The Department of Highways has provided for Ontario's highways. There can be little doubt that these efforts are not only of great assistance to my department in the field of highway safety, but have a direct relationship with accident prevention.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with respect to vehicle inspection, The Department of Transport maintains a staff of vehicle inspectors whose main duties consist of the administration and enforcement of The Public Vehicles Act, Public Commercial Vehicles Act, Motor Vehicle Transport Act—which relates to extra-provincial motor vehicle transport—and other sections of The Highway Traffic Act.

These inspectors operate the highway weigh scales located on the main arteries of commercial transportation and portable scale units, where no permanent weigh scales are located. At these points a careful check is made of commercial vehicles to ensure that they are operating at gross weights within the authority granted them. Bills of lading are also carefully checked as are loads for violation of the Act and regulations applicable to them. In addition, special investigations are carried out as required and school buses are examined for mechanical fitness at least twice a year. With the recent regulations respecting school buses, made under The Highway Traffic Act, examinations are becoming more exact as are the requests for information from both operators and school boards alike.

During 1961 a total of 1,035,373 vehicles were examined by our department throughout the province. In the interests of safety the department's inspectors inspect all school buses twice yearly, as I have said, for mechanical fitness. The examination entails the inspection of safety equipment which includes brakes, exterior and interior lighting, mirrors, heaters and defrosters, windshield wipers, tires, body-construction, emergency exits and push-out windows, fire extinguishers, axe or claw bars and the various signs which are required under the regulations. In addition, the chauffeur's licence of the school bus driver is inspected to ensure that he is the holder of a proper licence and qualified to operate the vehicle.

Our inspectors make it a point to observe, in their general patrol duties, the operation of school buses on the highways throughout the province to ensure proper operation of their equipment and the observance of safety regulations.

Now, these activities of our vehicle inspectors assist greatly to keep roads safe by ensuring that commercial vehicles operate within safe limits. At the same time, they are effective in assisting The Department of Highways to keep down its maintenance costs. Through traffic engineering the department is attempting to achieve improved traffic management throughout Ontario municipalities. To do this, assistance is given to the municipalities in the planning of traffic control in their communities in order to give them the safest possible traffic system.

Our traffic engineers also make a careful scrutiny of all municipal by-laws concerning the control of traffic, which must be submitted to the department for approval, to ensure that the uniformity of local traffic regulations is maintained. Uniform traffic regulations throughout the province are essential to the achievement of the "safe road."

Now with respect to "built-in safety"—if I may use that phrase: Since the dawn of the century and the advent of the motor vehicle—which was to become a prime mover of people and goods today—considerable advances have been made in producing "the safe vehicle." Although technological progress in years to come will improve even further the built-in safety features on motor vehicles, today our motor vehicles may be considered considerably safer than those of 50 years ago, or even 10 years ago.

These advances in the field of the "safe vehicle" have been brought about by the ingenuity of the automobile manufacturers—with legislation to force them—and I feel they should be highly commended for their achievements. And if I may, I should like to mention a few of these advances.

The introduction of four-wheel brakes for added safety—then the hydraulic and air-brake systems, to say nothing of the power brakes of today. Better steering mechanisms have been developed, including power-assisted steering. More impact-absorbent bodies have been developed which collapse, thus reducing the impact force on occupants. Numerous other safety features are included on the new vehicles, including padded dashboards and sun visors, dished steering wheels, pop-out windshields with safety glass, seat belts and improvement in lighting systems, to mention a few.

The automobile manufacturers are to be commended, as I say, for their efforts in trying to produce and achieve the "safe vehicle."

However, given the finest of vehicles with every conceivable safety device, unless the vehicle is looked after and maintained properly, it will deteriorate, and eventually may become a menace to its driver and other users of the road. Consequently, some provisions had to be made to ensure this did not happen.

When The Highway Traffic Act was drafted, and became the law in regard to the operation of motor vehicles, provisions were made whereby any police officer had the power to stop vehicles and inspect them if he felt they were unsafe. Then, if he was not satisfied with the condition of the vehicle he could order it to be taken off the road.

Over the years a great many vehicles have been so stopped and inspected and, where found unsafe, ordered removed from the road by our police officers.

We realize, Mr. Chairman, that there is a great need for concentrated effort in the field of the "safe vehicle," and now that the department has completed the establishment of the driver examination programme it is intended in the coming year to turn our attention to this important aspect of traffic accident prevention.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that two motor vehicle inspection lanes have been operated continuously by the department since 1958 at the Metro centre on the south side of Highway 401 near the Keele Street intersection. Here it is possible for any driver to take his car, truck or bus and receive a thorough and complete examination using the best and most modern equipment available. The inspection is carried out by trained and experienced personnel in uniform and belonging to our permanent staff. They cover 38 points including wheel alignment, front end suspension, lighting and brakes. The whole procedure takes less than 10 minutes and is entirely free of charge.

When a vehicle completes the inspection successfully, an "approved" sticker is affixed to the windshield. If it fails to pass any of the tests, the driver is informed of the defect and is advised to have it repaired.

These lanes were planned as a pilot operation by the department to ascertain some information on the average condition of motor vehicles.

The results have been very satisfactory and much has been learned from their operation. In fact this experiment in the field of motor vehicle inspection has been so successful that we are planning to extend the service so that it will be available to motorists outside of the Metropolitan area.

Our estimates for the coming year include provision for the purchase of five mobile vehicle inspection units. Each unit will include the same equipment that is installed on a fixed and permanent basis in the inspection centre at Highway 401 and Keele Street: that is a wheel alignment tester, a brake tester, a headlight tester and a hoist to permit the examination of front end and suspensions. The only difference will be that the equipment is portable and capable of being transported in trailers from place to place.

These mobile units will be allotted to western, central, eastern and northern areas respectively with one being held in reserve to meet unforeseen demands. Their method of operation will be roughly along these lines. Each of our four regional accident prevention organizers will contact the authorities in the larger communities in their areas to determine those that are interested in setting up a vehicle safety-check lane on a voluntary basis. In those communities wishing to adopt the programme, our APO's, as we call them, will help establish a committee to organize the activity and to obtain the necessary local co-operation.

They will also get in touch with local safety councils, service clubs, police departments, automobile clubs, chambers of commerce, and other community-minded groups to enlist their assistance and support. Arrangements will then be made to have one of the mobile units sent to each community on a rotational basis for periods of one to three weeks, depending on the local vehicle population. Each unit will be accompanied by a trained and experienced inspector from our vehicle inspection branch who will be responsible for supervising the safety-check lane and issuing the official seal of approval to those vehicles that pass the tests satisfactorily.

The department will assist communities in conducting local vehicle safety check programmes but it is expected that most of the advertising and publicity will be arranged under local auspices.

We have made preliminary inquiries to find out what sort of reception this programme is likely to get from the municipalities and I am happy to say that in every case the response has been most enthusiastic. It appears that the vehicle safety check service will find a real need at the community level throughout the province.

Now, earlier today, Mr. Chairman, I made some references to the sale of licences and permits, and to the group of uninsured owners. That statement has direct reference to the question of the present so-called unsatisfied judgment fund, and I am pleased to report, Mr. Chairman, that the unsatisfied judgment fund continues in a sound financial condition.

It is estimated that payments out for the year ending March 31 next will amount to $2,800,000. Since the inception of the fund in 1947 some 10,000 innocent victims of motor vehicle accidents have received payments from the fund totalling over $23 million. Almost $2 million was paid to unfortunate victims of hit-and-run drivers. Despite these large payments out of the fund there is still a surplus in excess of $7 million.

As you are aware, Mr. Chairman, the select committee on automobile insurance in their second interim report to this House recommended a number of amendments to the present legislation dealing with the fund. Within a few days legislation will be introduced to implement many of these recommendations.

One of the recommendations was that the fee payable by the uninsured be raised to some $20, and I have already dealt with the present status of that situation as my department officials inform me as of yesterday.

With respect to licences and permits, The Department of Transport has some 260 agency offices strategically located throughout the province where motor vehicle permits and drivers' licences are issued. There are also five offices manned by department personnel, including the main office in the east block.

The main or central issuing office was completely remodelled last year. New lights were installed and facilities improved to give faster and better service to the public. With the exception of a few days at the first of the year and just before the renewal deadline in March when line-ups may be necessary to handle the crowds, the office can issue documents very quickly and the public can be in and out in a matter of minutes.

One reason for a central issuing office is that certain classes of permits and licences, such as PCV and other types, cannot be issued at branch offices. In addition all duplicate permits and licences must be issued there since these require checking against central files.

Mr. Chairman, as you will see from the information before you concerning The Department of Transport's estimates for the fiscal year 1962-1963, I am asking for $5,822,000 for the coming year, some $647,000 more than for 1961-1962. This represents an increase of some 12.5 per cent.

The most of this increase is required to expand the facilities of the department's vehicle inspection programme as I have already mentioned, and in addition to commence the installation of the proposed mechanization of licence issuing. Preliminary studies and work on this project have been completed and we are now ready to proceed with the first part of the changeover.

Completion of the programme is planned so that it will be possible to issue drivers' licences by machine, starting in 1964 if that is so desired. At this time it will be possible to commence the department's planned re-examination of drivers periodically when the renewal of their licences becomes due, if that is so desired.

During the coming year The Department of Transport will continue to fulfil the role that it was given when it was established in 1957—to ensure the safe and smooth flow of traffic on Ontario's streets and highways by every means at its disposal. I should like to say, Mr. Chairman, that our problems will not be easily surmounted and that the task before me and my department is very great.

Today we have some 2 million registered motor vehicles in Ontario; we have 2.3 million licensed drivers. These represent some 40 per cent of all the vehicles and drivers in the whole of the Dominion of Canada. If the vehicles registered in this province were placed end to end they would make two and a half lines between Toronto and Vancouver. To this vast number of indigenous vehicles have to be added some 6 million visiting vehicles per year.

The experts tell us that by 1970 the number of vehicles in Ontario will have increased to nearly 3.5 million, and by 1980 it will be over 4 million with a corresponding increase in the number of licensed drivers.

We have a tremendous job ahead of us, not only in the coming year but in each successive year. However, Mr. Chairman, I and the staff of The Ontario Department of Transport are dedicated to our role and we shall relentlessly continue our efforts to fulfil our obligation to make our streets and highways even safer through the safe driver, the safe road and the safe vehicle.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding my remarks, may I express my personal appreciation as Minister of Transport to those of my staff throughout the department, and including the members and staff of the Ontario Highway Transport Board, may I express my appreciation as Minister to them, who have worked diligently and faithfully throughout the past year.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I could not help but think of the cartoon that I heard about when the hon. Minister mentioned that if the vehicles registered in Ontario were placed end to end they would form two and a half lines between Toronto and Vancouver. I hope it will not be the case as in the cartoon where it said that if this happened some fool would turn out and try to go past them.

Mr. Chairman, in rising to make my remarks at this time, I suppose one must be cognizant of the fact that we are all engaged in political endeavours. It is always a temptation to be political in one's observances of the estimates. To admit that one's views were tempered by political thoughts would I am sure be an honest admission for any hon. member of this House. To deny that one's views were influenced by his political leaning would not in my opinion be quite true.

With this knowledge then, let me say that I am fully aware that there may be some on the benches opposite who are tempted to make remarks, such as the one from the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) the other day, when he suggested that much of the information being sought from this side of the House during the estimates could be obtained privately, and that in seeking this information in public, hon. members of the Opposition were engaged in political speech-making.

Nevertheless, the strength of our government is dependent upon a conscientious Opposition, intent upon exposing the weaknesses of the government in power and, where necessary, ready and willing to offer a constructive alternative. With respect to the matter of material for criticism, the hon. Minister of this department has been very kind to hon. members of the Opposition. Since this department was founded some few years ago, there has been little in the programme that one could call imaginative or progressive. I do not suggest that no good has come from this Department of Transport, because I think there have been some programmes which have been worthwhile. On the other hand, I would say that most of the programme was suggested by the select committee on highway safety, which recommended the establishment of a safety department.

Generally speaking, the history of The Department of Transport is that they have simply provided the administrative machinery to carry out part of the programme as suggested by the select committee which spawned it into existence in the first place, and thereafter to remain void of any further leadership in attacking a problem of vital concern to every man, woman and child in the province of Ontario.

There could very well be positive and concrete reasons for this state of inertia on the part of the hon. Minister (Mr. Rowntree) and his department. One would think that if the government viewed this matter of safety in Ontario to be as challenging as stated by the hon. Minister without Portfolio from Kingston (Mr. Nickle) in his introduction of the report of the select committee on highway safety, that they would leave a responsible Minister with the department long enough to at least familiarize himself with the staff.

I suggest to hon. members that the game of musical chairs which when applied to hon. members of the Cabinet in the province of Ontario can only work to the detriment of the people themselves. And surely the people are paying enough in the taxes that are being extracted from them to deserve something better than this.

There is the matter of overlapping responsibilities so necessary if we are to prevent these accidents, death and injury, which was suggested as the chief concern of the department. If a programme is to be effective, it must of necessity receive the utmost of co-operation from other departments, such as that of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts), and The Department of Highways. And while the personnel of the present government is divided into several camps, as indicated by the bizarre-like contest which took place during the leadership convention of that party, how could anyone doubt that this type of co-operation so necessary would be extremely difficult for any hon. Minister to obtain?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Beginning of the politics here.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Prime Minister has suggested that this might be the beginning of the politics. And so, lest there be any doubt that I am being political, I should like to prove the statement which I have just made. To do that it will be necessary for me to quote from an article which appeared in the Windsor Star on April 17, 1961 and which deals, I believe, with the only really effective programme which has come from this Department of Transport. I speak of the programme of examination to ensure that the drivers of vehicles in this province are qualified to retain that privilege, and I would like to quote from the remarks as reported by the hon. Attorney-General of this province.

Hon. members may recall that I spoke of co-operation. I should like to read this and ask hon. members to judge for themselves whether or not this is a case of co-operation or a case of too many cooks trying to spoil the broth. It is not my intention to read the article in full but I shall read it in part. It is entitled "Probation for Drivers?"

ATTORNEY-GENERAL URGES LENIENCY

Development of a probation system in driving cars where licences would normally be suspended was advocated by hon. A. Kelso Roberts, QC, Attorney-General of Ontario.

I go down further and read of the suggestion from the hon. Attorney-General:

A probation officer assigned to such a case could help determine under what conditions his licence might be restored under restrictions as to use and under the proper supervision and control. In this way, if he is dealing with a normal and penitent type of individual, I would expect at the end of a period of probation we would have a better driver than we could possibly expect under return to driving after complete suspension involving in addition to probation to drive supplementary problems of earning a living and maintenance.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on one hand we have established in Ontario a demerit point system which the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) has told us this afternoon is one that is the envy throughout the continent. On the other hand, we have the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) going around making speeches, suggesting it be changed so that the effectiveness of the programme can be destroyed before it has even had an opportunity to prove itself.

Now I think that statement is a fair one in view of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that we were told in this House last year by the hon. Minister of Transport that they had not even had an opportunity at that time to assess the effectiveness of this programme. And I think it demonstrates, better than any words that I could utter, the lack of co-operation which exists between the various departments to make The Department of Transport function as it should and as it was intended by the select committee.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member is talking as though these were the estimates of another department. These are the estimates of The Department of Transport and I will take the responsibility for what goes on in my department.

As we bring in our legislation probably in the next few days—it does not come in until this stage of the session because all of our amendments largely come under one Act and have to be concluded before it is advanced—hon. members opposite will see what our legislative programme is, and will be delighted. Now I will be surprised if they are not applauding us.

But on the question of perfection, nobody on this side of the House—and let this be recorded, once and for all—pretends for one moment to be perfect, but we are striving to do the best job we can and striving towards perfection and that is what we are trying to do.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: As I pointed out to the hon. Minister of Transport at the beginning, we also have a duty on this side of the House, and we shall endeavour to perform that duty to the best of our ability in accordance with the strength and wisdom that is endowed within us.

Since the hon. Minister has risen to protest the statement that I have just made, I am led to wonder whether or not he is in agreement with the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). Whether he is or not I think the clipping that I have just read substantiates the statement that I made in the first place, that the department is hindered because of the lack of co-operation which exists within the departments.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my responsibility to pinpoint the reason for failure of the department to accomplish the goals which were set for it in the first place. It is my responsibility to point out that The Department of Transport has indeed failed in those objectives. I was very disappointed to hear the admission this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the increase in fatalities in this province. On one hand the hon. Minister says it is the greatest year of accomplishment, and on the other hand he tells us that the fatalities are higher than they have ever been in the history of Ontario.

When one considers the statements which were made some two years ago by the then hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko) in which he stated that the matter of safety of our people accounted for some 67 per cent of the budget and that this was the principal concern of The Department of Transport, I do not see how the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) can come to us this afternoon, report to us that we have an increase in the number of fatalities and at the same time call it our greatest year of accomplishment. It leads me to wonder, Mr. Chairman, if the remarks this afternoon are not just so much "window dressing."

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that it has become the principle of our society that if one fails to carry out the responsibilities with which he is charged, then it is the responsibility of that person or organization to go.

An hon. member: Right! Been there too long.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, we might decide here that this is indeed a situation where we might follow the advice of the Gordon commission on the organization of government in Ontario, which was widely acclaimed by the then hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) upon its release some two years ago and which, for some peculiar reason, is not so often quoted by my hon. friends opposite at the present time.

An hon. member: A fine fellow!

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Let me quote to hon. members from the second paragraph of this report on page 39:

We believe the government of Ontario might function more smoothly and easily with fewer departments than there are at present and if the temptation to create new ones is resisted as much as possible.

The past 15 years have brought an especially rapid growth in government services and though the pace may change the trend is quite likely to continue. In the course of it occasions will arise when new functions are being undertaken by the department organization and these functions may have no apparent connection with existing departments.

The establishment of additional new departments may thus occasionally be unavoidable. But if this is so every consideration should be given to the possibility of merging two or more of the then existing departments and thus avoiding an increase in the total number of departments.

We believe that there might be advantages gained by consolidation of the work of government within somewhat fewer departments than the present number.

Mr. Chairman, let me stop here long enough to say that I believe that The Department of Transport, when it was constituted, was in the form of an experiment. I think that the department has now had the opportunity to demonstrate that it has been no more effective than if these various programmes were carried out within the walls of the departments of government which already existed. I suggest that there is nothing being done by The Department of Transport that could not be done within either The Department of the Attorney-General, who then might not go around contradicting the hon. Minister of Transport, or within The Department of Highways or the other department within which the duties apply.

I might stop here to state that I know that there probably are those in the benches opposite who will disagree with the predictions of my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. Whicher) in his criticism of the budget yesterday with respect to the alarming rate at which this province is going into debt. Whether or not hon. members disagree with those remarks, I suggest to the hon. members of this House today that time will substantiate that the trends which were predicted by my hon. friend will in fact be so. I think that if this is going to happen there is a responsibility right now and here to start cutting down on the expense of government; I think that this is one place it can be done without affecting the results which are—

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Would the hon. member permit a question?

I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, how the hon. member can be sincere in the statement that he is making now and at the same time support a policy of reducing the revenue of the province by exempting all purchases up to $25 from sales tax.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I might throw back the remark that came from the other side of the House when I started these remarks and ask who is getting political now?

If the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) is sincere in his remarks, I suggest that he have his experts get together with our experts and we will iron this thing out and find out whether it works.

An hon. member: He is right!

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, in dealing with this subject let me make it abundantly clear that I believe that this goal could be accomplished in an orderly manner without the possibility of leaving the personnel of the department without jobs, with the possible exception of the hon. Minister himself who, after all, would still be entitled to draw a stipend as a member of this House. If the reduction were too steep I suppose the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) might add him to the hon. Ministers without Portfolio with at least some saving to the taxpayer.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I hope there is nothing personal about this.

An hon. member: Maybe they will make him the Attorney-General.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: If the government were to announce a reduction in the number of unnecessary departments, the people in these departments could be absorbed into other departments under normal expansion increases so that there would be a saving to the people of this province, who are paying these taxes, without undue hardship to the personnel who staff the departments at the present time.

Let me attempt to show you, Mr. Chairman, some of the reasons why I believe this department has broken faith with the Legislature and the committee which suggested its existence in the first place.

Would hon. members not think if one wanted to determine the degree of usefulness of any organization that one of the best places to examine the records would be in the annual report of its manager? Can hon. members imagine, for instance, the president of the Royal Bank of Canada going to the directors or the shareholders at a meeting and providing an accounting for his stewardship in the form of a report that is over a year old? Can hon. members comprehend the reaction of the directors? Yet at this time, we are given the estimates for consideration and the latest annual report of the hon. Minister of this department is for the year ending March 31, 1960. This is the latest report given to hon. members as of this date—nearly two years later.

An hon. member: Shame!

Mr. R. C. Edwards: We are asked to judge the efficiency of this department and to vote money for the year ending March 31, 1963, without even the annual statistical report entitled, Acts and Facts, 1961, to judge for ourselves whether or not the expenditures in the preceeding year has been effective.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is something that has somewhat amazed me since I have come to this House. I cannot for the life of me understand why it would be necessary for the Minister of a department, if it was administering smoothly, to take well over one year after the end of activities and to be presenting the estimates two or three years hence, without even publishing the annual report for that year. It seems to me unreasonable to suggest that the hon. members of this House can honestly deal with the problems, if they consider these problems to be serious, without being given some kind of a report on the activities of the past. Is it any wonder, Mr. Chairman, that we feel that the administration leaves something to be desired. The hon. Prime Minister indicated to this House earlier that traditionally the opportunity was accorded the Opposition to inquire into the operations of the various departments of government during the debate on the estimates. If we think about these things, a report of the findings of the motor vehicle research committee on noise was submitted to the hon. Minister on November 15, 1961, yet it was not released to the hon. members of this Legislature until the last day of sitting of this House, just prior to the presentation or the time of debating the estimates.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this is not due to the pressure of work in the department. It is a deliberately calculated attempt to hinder the members of the Opposition in attempting to discuss the conclusions of that report. How can we be expected, in an intelligible manner, to discuss the conclusions of that report which could very conceivably have an effect on these estimates when the hon. Minister deliberately withholds it from the hon. members until just before the presentation of the estimates? How, in the name of reason, can we be expected to read a 60 page report, to dwell on it, to think about it and form any conclusion, if that is all the notice we are given?

I would be very pleased to have the hon. Prime Minister answer.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, this report was not withheld for the purpose that the hon. member attempts to put on it. I can only point out to him that in the case of very many legislative reports that have come in here, upon request they have been put on the order paper for debate. If he feels strongly about this report and he wants to discuss it here, there is no attempt on the part of the government to muzzle discussion on any point in this House and I do not think he can, in all fairness, say there ever has been.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Half the time these items do not get debated, though.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have yet to know of any report that the Opposition asked to have debated in this House that was not put on the order paper and given a full thorough airing in discussion here in the House. Now, if this is what the hon. member wants, he might ask the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) to ask me and I will arrange it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I at least thank the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) for suggesting that we will have the opportunity to debate it if we so wish. The point I am trying to make is that we are, today, debating the estimates of The Department of Transport. When these estimates are completed and passed, that is the last opportunity we will have to make any recommendations to the estimates for the forthcoming year. I do not know whether or not this report will have any bearing on our thinking. I am merely trying to point out to the hon. Prime Minister that we have not had the opportunity to determine whether or not it will have any effect, and I think it is unfair.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, let me assure the hon. member that there is nothing in that report of the noise research committee that will have any bearing on our estimates. It is a subject that will require a full debate in the House and we look forward to that at an appropriate time.

The report was received by me in November, a day or so after the date it bears in typewritten form, and after I had read it I ordered it printed. That was delivered and subsequently distributed to the House.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, before—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member's suggestions just do not fit or lie right. That is just not my nature, Mr. Chairman, to do that sort of thing.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I did not quite catch the remarks. If he suggested that I suggested that he was lying—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, I did not say that. I certainly did not.

An hon. member: Lying down on the job.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: But while we are on the subject and since my remarks have been interrupted this far—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It did not lie right.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Since my remarks have been interrupted this far, I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell me why we have not received his annual report for the year ending March 31, 1961?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, if the hon. member would like an honest answer, I think he has got a good point.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I commend the hon. Minister for his honesty, and I wish to serve notice on the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) now that I intend to raise this question of every other hon. Minister whose estimates are presented prior to the filing of his report, because I think that this is the one place where members of the Opposition—if they wish to take the time to study—have the opportunity of finding out just what does go on within the department.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: May I say, just while we are straightening up the general points of government policy, that this whole question of ministerial reports has been discussed and debated in the committee that is sitting on the organization of government, and I can assure the hon. member that a big effort is being made in every department to have the annual report available before the submission of the estimates. With pardonable pride I should say that the report of the Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) was filed last week and the hon. members will have ample time to look that over before we deal with the estimates.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): For which year?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: For the most recent year for which we have statistics available. But this is the point that I am coming to; it is not always possible to compile all the information that goes into one of these reports in time to have it in here to suit the convenience of the hon. members of the Opposition and to fit the time-tabling of the business of the House. In some instances it is possible and in some instances it is less possible, but I can assure the hon. members that every effort is being made to do that.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr Chairman, I think we should make it clear that we are not asking the hon. Minister necessarily to meet our convenience, but at the same time I think we are entitled to this information if we are going to debate it intelligently

Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the very frank comments of the hon. Minister, I think I still must say that up until this time the accounting which has been given to us leaves something to be desired, and it is my hope that, when the hon. Prime Minister follows my suggestions and absorbs this department into the various departments where they belong, he will keep the hon. Minister in mind for the next portfolio that comes open.

Let me continue with my criticism of the department. I was quite—perhaps it was a fair statement, I thought it was a sort of profound statement in the hon. Minister's remarks this afternoon when he suggested that every citizen was either a motorist or a pedestrian. I think that is a fair statement, and I should like to talk a little bit—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is just plain talk.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I should like to talk a little bit about the matter of crosswalk legislation which in my opinion is a matter of serious concern to the motorists of the province as well as the pedestrians. In this direction, Mr. Chairman, the government is completely responsible for the frustration of the municipalities and for the lack of permissive legislation which exists in Ontario.

The position taken by the government—as exposed by the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko) on January 29, 1960, in this House—indicates that they feel that the responsibility to enact pedestrian crosswalk legislation is that of the municipality. This position in my opinion is a very dangerous one, leading to confusion and frustration of the people of Ontario. This situation has produced a present state of controversy which presently exists because a city such as the city of Hamilton feels that they have a pedestrian by-law which will, in their opinion, be more effective than the one in the city of Toronto, and where The Department of Transport in turn tells the city of Hamilton that unless the by-law for Hamilton is the same as the one in Toronto they cannot put it into operation.

However, Mr. Chairman, because the department itself is not very sure what they want, the door is left open to Hamilton when delegations are advised that the matter may be reconsidered by the department after a period of time. It is my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that these laws should emanate from The Department of Transport and not a particular municipality. What sense does it make, sir, to suggest that a person driving from a place like Grimsby, for instance, has to conform to special laws of the road in a city such as Hamilton because of a peculiar by-law that might be passed by that council? Let me attempt to illustrate this point.

I understand that the pedestrian by-law which exists in the city of Toronto has recently been granted permission for an amendment making it illegal to pass another vehicle within 100 feet of that crosswalk. Now, I ask you and I ask the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) how a person, outside of the city of Toronto, would have any knowledge that such was the law of the land while driving in the city of Toronto. And I suggest to the hon. Minister that it might make just as much sense, if we are going to have peculiar by-laws which are related to one municipality and not another, to suggest that they might pick whichever side of the road they wanted to drive on.

Now, I would like to make this point clear: I am not suggesting to the hon. Minister at the present time that I feel it is his responsibility to force every community in Ontario to pass a pedestrian by-law. But I am suggesting that any pedestrian laws which are passed should emanate from this department and could be printed then in The Highway Traffic Act, or printed somewhere, so that all of the people in the province would have some knowledge of the laws which exist in another municipality.

I think following the policy which has been followed by this department with respect to this pedestrian by-law has only resulted in confusion and frustration to the municipalities and I think that it may be responsible for some of the accidents which could have been prevented if the people coming from surrounding municipalities had had a knowledge of the law in the first place.

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister without Portfolio): Why does the hon. member say this?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: The hon. Minister without Portfolio asks me why I say this. I thought I had made it clear but let me say this to him: if he was coming from a city such as Kingston—I presume they do not have a pedestrian by-law there—how would he know when he arrived in the city of Toronto that it was illegal to pass another vehicle within 100 feet of a crosswalk? Perhaps the hon. Minister would answer me that.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: I know this: under The Highway Traffic Act, where a motor vehicle hits a pedestrian the onus is on the operator of the car to prove that he was not negligent. Now I am not that stupid nor am I that naive and I assume—and the man on the hon. member's left will tell him it is good law—there is an onus and you are presumed to know the law. And the law is that where a motor vehicle hits a pedestrian he has to prove he was not negligent, it is not on the pedestrian. And the crosswalk is only one more step in relation to pedestrian safety, but the onus section to me is paramount and I think that is something the hon. member has missed.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I think the hon. Minister without Portfolio is entirely correct, but let me again state my interpretation of the law in Toronto, not as I have seen it from anything emanating from The Department of Transport but as I read it in a news section of the press. My understanding is that it is illegal to pass another vehicle within 100 feet of a crosswalk, whether or not you strike a pedestrian. I wonder if that is correct?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is a breach of The Highway Traffic Act to pass another vehicle within 100 feet of a crosswalk. The onus never shifts in relation to an accident.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, if it were in the Act, then I as an outsider would know that wherever I came across a crosswalk it would be illegal for me to pass another vehicle in that section and I would not be prosecuted for violating the law of which I had no opportunity to have knowledge.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, Mr. Chairman, might I just comment on that point? I will say at the outset that the entire subject of crosswalks is a very difficult one for everyone concerned, whether it be a municipal council, the motoring public, the group of pedestrians or provincial authorities. The simple facts of the situation are these: The reason that municipal traffic by-laws are referred to The Department of Transport for approval before becoming effective is to try to achieve a high degree of uniformity of such legislation throughout the province.

Now here was the situation: The so-called Metro by-law originally was started on this principle in the town of Leaside and was adopted by Metro with certain variations. Now the system as presently in effect in Metro is in effect in some 16 other municipalities in Ontario and is working very well.

In addition to that, we have approvals from some 14 other municipalities who have indicated their support of that situation, and that indication without our solicitation, I might say.

Now the position was this, that in the city of Hamilton they wanted to adopt a crosswalk system which had certain variations—we do not need to go into them today because I hope that this subject will be referred to the committee on highway safety for some discussion there. But Hamilton wanted a system with some variations from Toronto's. And the position seemed to be that having in mind the highly built-up areas between Toronto and Hamilton and the immediate proximity of the city of Hamilton to Metro Toronto, that there was a very real question as to whether or not two opposing systems should exist in such proximity.

We had many delegations; we heard from the people at Metro and we heard from the people at Hamilton, but there was another group that we heard from, which some of the hon. members on the other side of the House support and that was the Ontario Traffic Conference—a very expert group of police chiefs and traffic experts who operate on specialized subjects and specialized matters and in that conference are representatives from Hamilton.

The Ontario Traffic Conference voted unanimously in support of the crosswalk system as presently in force in Metro Toronto as opposed to the Hamilton crosswalk system. Now, there is the situation. I am not saying that the Hamilton people are wrong; let me make my position clear. I am simply pointing out that, after the Ontario Traffic Conference indicated their unanimous approval—and I must say I think there were one or two abstentions from voting of those who were present, and I believe they also were people from Hamilton, but the point is they did not vote against the situation—in a few days they had gone back to Hamilton and the matter was reopened. We received another delegation which was quite informative.

There is the situation. It is a question, Mr. Chairman, as to who is right. Who is to say who is right in a thing like this? We have to find some scheme whereby we will achieve some form of uniformity, and I mention that Toronto-Hamilton relationship because between Toronto and Hamilton along No. 2 highway, you go through a constant progression or succession of built-up municipalities. There is a perfect example of where uniformity of legislation is needed and is desirable.

We have not been sitting back ignoring this but we want to come up with something that meets the needs and the views, because there are able people in Hamilton who are knowledgeable on this subject and we recognize that. We probably will advance legislation, we will advance it from our department having to do with this subject. When our legislation comes up, this is one of the items that will be dealt with in some very great detail.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, I want to thank the hon. Minister for helping me make my point. The point that I was trying to make was that the responsibility rests with The Department of Transport to ensure this uniformity he speaks of. And certainly there would be nothing to prohibit the hon. Minister from showing some leadership in this matter, and to prevent this controversy and frustration by simply passing a law in Ontario, defining a crosswalk and defining where it is legal to pass and where it is not legal to pass; in defining what shall be a crosswalk and then leaving it to the municipalities to determine whether or not they want to mark their crosswalks. Now the hon. Minister knows full well that this is done in New York State, he knows that this is what is done in the State of California and he knows that this is what is recommended by the very conference that he spoke about, which voted against a different type of by-law for Hamilton. May I say that I am in complete agreement with him. I am not suggesting that the Toronto by-law is or is not a good one, but quite frankly it is nerve-racking for an individual who drives from outside the municipality to come into Toronto and not know when he is within the law and when he is outside the law. I say the responsibility rests with The Department of Transport in not establishing some permissive legislation on the statute books in the first place so that everybody can be acquainted with the law as it is.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Let me just reply briefly to those observations. Who says that The Department of Transport did not recognize its responsibility? I have just finished telling him we are doing something about it. This is the session of the Legislature when matters of this kind are to be advanced. He is taking the position that we are doing nothing about it. He has not heard the legislative programme of The Department of Transport.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I am saying that the department has not done anything about it. They have known of this problem for three years, and at this late date they tell us they are going to do something. Now, I suggest that the responsibility was on The Department of Transport in the first instance, in not allowing municipalities to go around establishing by-laws here and there without putting the permissive legislation on the books so that there would be a guide for all the municipalities. It is all right to tell us that they are going to do something in the future. I am criticizing the hon. Minister, which I think is my duty and responsibility, for not having done it before. Certainly The Department of Transport has been in existence—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I will have to rise and say very strongly that I do not think it is a very fair criticism of anybody, as this is the first legislative session following my own appointment. Believe me, when I said earlier today that this was a great year of accomplishment for this department, I really meant it. I am not just speaking for myself; I am telling you what the members of the public and the citizens of Ontario think of what is being done by The Department of Transport, and what they have told me.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I would say to the hon. Minister that I am telling him what some of the citizens in my riding think of The Department of Transport so it is not all one-sided. If I might proceed, Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. Minister made very well the point that I presented earlier when I stated that this game of musical chairs—in so far as the government is concerned—is not working in the best interests of the people of Ontario. It is unfortunate that he must be criticized for the sins of his hon. predecessor, but as long as he supports the government presently in power, and adopts this policy, I am afraid he has got to be tarred with the same brush.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: What is wrong with that?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Well then, why did the hon. Minister quit if they are all such good pals?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Let me say to the hon. Minister from Kingston (Mr. Nickle)—and I am going to be kind to him and not repeat the remarks in case the Hansard reporter did not get it—immediately he leaves the government benches opposite and returns to his law practice in Kingston, I am going to start supporting him instead of opposing him.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: Well, I will tell you what you can do. Send me down some business and I will give you a good rate.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: On page 1511 of Hansard for the year 1960, the former hon. Minister of Transport stated, and I quote:

Yes, accidents, deaths and injury are the chief concerns of the department.

and if, as quoted in the Economic Survey of 1961, the functions of the department are as stated on page 47:

The department is much concerned with one of the most serious problems of our time, the needless loss of life, health and property from motor vehicle accidents—

why has the department not done something with respect to leadership in this matter of pedestrian legislation? I suggest to the hon. Minister that a person is just as dead if killed in a city which does not have a by-law as he is if he is killed in one where there is a by-law and I suggest—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is no argument about that.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: If these people opposite keep on, I am going to lose my page.

Hon. Mr. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Too bad the hon. member does not lose his speech.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I may even reconsider my original submission; but I do not think, in the face of the record, even though I do, like the hon. gentlemen opposite, I can change my opinion.

Mr. MacDonald: Figure that out!

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) is having trouble figuring it out, so I will repeat it. I think it is time to abolish The Department of Transport. Even he should be able to comprehend that.

If we consider another aspect of this matter of safety, Mr. Chairman, we should turn our attention to the ever increasing number of deaths which annually are attributed to accidents and which directly are created by the increased number of watercraft in Ontario. Now before someone interrupts me again to remind me that constitutionally this is a federal matter, let me remind the government that, generally speaking, these are Ontario people who are losing their lives. If the department is concerned about this matter, I will look forward to an explanation from the hon. Minister outlining what steps have been taken to deal with this problem.

Earlier I suggested, and it was a bit of a laughing matter at the time but I suggest it is not, that a person was just as dead if killed in one city as killed in another. I suggest to the hon. Minister that a person is just as dead killed in a water accident as they are if killed in a motor vehicle accident. If we are seriously concerned, as has been stated, with the loss of life and with the injury to our people, I suggest it is the responsibility of this department of the Ontario government to look into the matter. Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think we had better correct the record at that point because he does not even know what has been going on. Now he has stated the point that the water operation, and so on, is a federal matter basically, but apart from that we in Ontario have a very great interest in what happens on the water, even though the various resort operators and hotel people and cottage resort groups cannot agree with the federal authorities as to what kind of licensing or control or safety legislation would be effective. In spite of that, I directed—I did not know it had happened, but it was after some conversations in our department—one entire issue of the Safety Bulletin published by our department was devoted to safety on the water last summer, in 1961. Another issue will be devoted to the subject this year, so that we can avoid a duplication of expenditure and use what forces and strengths we have to advance that side of safety.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, on this issue I feel that this is a very serious matter. Originally in my comments I criticized the hon. Minister for not giving us reports. Now he tells me I do not know what is going on.

He did not say anything about it this afternoon. How would I know what is going on from the reports that are emanating from his department? The simple fact of the matter is that they are treating this thing in too light a manner.

These are taxpayers' monies that are being expended and it is the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Transport to report to the members of this House and this is the traditional time for him to do it. He had the opportunity to make a statement and I did not hear him mention anything about what he was doing with respect to the matter of water safety.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I think it is your duty to point out that this is most irregular, indeed. My duty is to answer the question, which I am now doing.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to be interrupted further. I am sorry sir. Mr. Chairman, I am not yielding my point.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I do not want to be unreasonable, any more than the hon. Minister does, but if he is going to continually interrupt me in my speech, he is going to distort the theme and I think it is improper. I have a responsibility here and I am endeavouring to fulfill that responsibility.

I am not here to blast the hon. Minister or in any way to personally criticize him as an individual, but I would remind the government that they are charged with a responsibility, and we are charged with a responsibility. We say that they are not living up to the responsibility that they are charged with, and we say that the department has failed, they have had five years as an experiment and they have not done the job and I think the remarks that the hon. Minister is making are amplifying that statement.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We just do not toot our horn enough, that is all.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister says he does not toot his horn enough. If we look at the advertising bills for this province I think they have been tooting their horn too much, and I think the taxpayers are becoming aware of it.

I criticized the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) who suggested that I should not have criticized some of his expenditures. There was one publication called Ontario Government Services, and if I remember correctly there are 110,000 copies of this report that go out every month. The hon. Minister will recall directly.

Hon. B. L. Cathcart (Minister of Travel and Publicity): What has this got to do with The Department of Transport?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I will be pleased to tell the hon. Minister if he will sit down and listen. They are like jack-in-the-boxes over there. If the hon. Minister will recall, I suggested to him that that report was being used for promoting Tory personalities rather than a programme. The hon. Minister says he is not tooting his horn enough, and I suggest that if he will speak to the hon. gentleman on his left, perhaps he could send out a little notice to the people of Ontario on what he is doing in this matter of water safety. But at this point, if we take as any example the statements which have been made by prior Ministers of this department, they have informed the hon. members of this House that it was not their responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, I think that it might be as well, after I sit down, if the hon. Minister would stand up and just tell the House what is being done with respect to this matter of water safety. It seems to me that if he is going to get any action from the federal government his best opportunity is to act quickly, because he knows and I know there is going to be a change down there. He may not be so friendly with the next government, so he should operate now.

Mr. MacDonald: He may never get another chance.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) says he may never get another chance.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that I told you I was going to endeavour to tell you the reasons why I thought that this department should be abolished. I am going to turn now to another phase of the responsibilities of The Department of Transport and I am going to read from page 293 of this textbook that I call the Gordon Report on the organization of government. It states as follows, quoting one of the functions of The Department of Transport:

The development of plans for taxing vehicles to provide funds for the construction and maintenance of roads.

I am led to wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether or not such is still the case. This is the third session of the present sitting of this Legislature and as far as I can determine nothing has been presented to this Legislature to indicate that any constant revision of this matter of funds for an expanding highway programme has been considered by The Department of Transport. You would think that they would if they were fulfilling these functions for which they were set up, both under the terms of reference as established by the select committee which was the original beginning of The Department of Transport, as more fully set out in the Gordon Report, and I think if we turn again for another authority you will find the same thing in the responsibilities of the department under the Ontario economic and social aspects study of 1961, they would take some action.

Here we have a department which should be concerned with this very important matter. We have a sales tax which was presented last year, and which was made mention of by the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) a few moments ago, when he tried to change the subject by suggesting that our plan would make the matter worse. Perhaps if the hon. Minister of Transport wanted to, he might tell us just what recommendations his department has made with respect to this matter, and more correctly, perhaps, if this is one of his functions, he might table it in the Legislature so that all hon. members could know what is happening.

It is very difficult with information that is available to hon. members of the Opposition to determine just whether or not the government is doing their job in the manner that they are supposed to.

I, for one, am becoming very concerned with the increasing number of reports that are being gathered with taxpayers' money, and then Ministers like the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) will come to this House and say this is a Minister's committee. Now, if he wants to take that responsibility on his own shoulders that is up to him, but if he is going to spend taxpayers' money and keep these reports to himself, then he can hardly wonder at being criticized, both by the taxpayers themselves and the Opposition representatives of the electorate, when he does not make this information public.

I am not able to study what has been completed since March 31, 1960, as I suggested, due to the lack of information from this department. One would think, however, that if these comprehensive studies are being undertaken that some form of conclusion would find its way into legislation in accordance with the functions of the department as set up.

Now let me deal with another point—and the hon. Minister made great mention of it here and I think again he can be criticized. Recommendation No. 6 of the select committee on highway safety said as follows:

A standing committee on highway legislation to be appointed at each regular session of the Legislature.

Now it seems significant, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. Minister really wanted to carry out the intent of this suggestion he would have thought it desirable to at least refer enough business to a committee which had been constituted to at least indicate the necessity of the Chairman calling a meeting. This session of the Legislature commenced on November 22, 1961, and yet some four months later there has been no cause for this committee to convene to consider this important matter of highway safety.

Now, if we consider, Mr. Chairman, that the government does view this matter as seriously as the publications indicate, and as the hon. Minister indicated in the introduction of the select committee report on safety in 1955, and as set out in the other publications, surely we would view this matter seriously enough while the hon. members are in session to at least call this committee into being and let them discuss some of these very important matters. Since this has not happened, I suggest that the department again has not fulfilled its duties in the manner in which it could be expected.

I should like the hon. Minister—if he would, some time—to advise the House with respect to recommendation No. 11 of the select committee report which dealt with the matter of safety advisory councils. If the department is devoid of ideas and suggestions, with respect to education or legislative matters dealing with safety, perhaps either of the two groups outlined in the select committee—that is, the committee of this House—could report to him and give him something for his use. Instead of forward action, the hon. members of this House today are again subject to the same stereotyped presentation of the estimates, indicating that we can look forward to little more in the forthcoming year than we have had in the past, and since the inception of the present session of this Legislature.

When we deal with this matter of safety, Mr. Chairman, as the hon. Minister has said, a citizen is either a pedestrian or a driver. I suggest to him that the matter which was introduced by my hon. leader in last year's debate—with respect to some kind of leadership in this matter of commuter trains, with bringing people into the cities—could have been studied by the department and the hon. members advised as to the leadership that is being undertaken there. It makes me wonder how much money we are spending in our metropolitan areas to provide arterial roads to get the people there in their cars and then to provide parking lots for their cars once they are there, if another method could be found which would better take care of the situation.

I think it is the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) either to tell us there is or there is not a better way. I cannot recall, during the session since I have been here, of any report of this nature coming from The Department of Transport.

If we are concerned with the movement of people, if we are seriously concerned about the accidents and deaths which are the result of this movement of people, perhaps we should be doing some studying in this direction to determine whether or not some better method could be found. I personally think that there could be. I subscribed to the suggestions of my leader last year when he indicated that the trains could be used to bring people to central depots so that they could move rapidly by rapid transportation into the centre of these metropolitan areas.

While I am dealing with this subject let me say this. I think that the manner of getting people into the metropolitan areas goes hand-in-hand with this matter of financing. For instance, I note that Highway 401, which originally was built as a by-pass for the city of Toronto, has now become an arterial route for the people themselves. This highway was built 100 per cent with provincial funds and yet it now is being used as an arterial route for the city dwellers.

Now, I think it is time we had a study. If we consider all these other expressways that are going through the cities we begin to wonder just whether or not there is any order in this matter of highway financing. I think that some leadership in this direction should be forthcoming from The Department of Transport. Since it has not been forthcoming I do not see any sense in prolonging it any longer, I think that this could come from the new department which will be in The Department of Highways after this reorganization is completed as I have suggested.

Let me deal for a few minutes with the matter—the hon. Minister is smiling at me and I do not think he has yet got the significance of my remarks.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am worried to death about them.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): They are even amusing to the hon. member.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I did not hear the hon. Minister of Health but I am sure—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I said, "They are even amusing to the hon. member"—I mean his own remarks.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Thank you. I was just going to say, Mr. Chairman, I am sure these remarks would show the fine, congenial nature he always exhibits but I am led to wonder since I heard him a little better.

Mr. Sopha: Now the hon. Minister may return to his book.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I think there is another matter of very serious significance to the people of Ontario. It is one complaint I have received during the past year more than any other and it deals with the matter of school bus legislation. I was very pleased to hear the hon. Minister tell us this afternoon that they now have a programme which requires school bus drivers to undergo examinations. This was suggested first from this side of the House and I am glad that they listen to us once in a while.

I am still concerned about the matter of The Highway Traffic Act as it relates to the movement of traffic when a school bus is stopped on the highway. It has been the attitude of The Department of Transport—and this is once when they did have a safety committee meeting and we were able to ascertain their feelings—that they did not wish to stop traffic coming in the opposite direction because this would result in further vehicle accidents.

I am not one that agrees with that thought, I believe that again our school bus legislation should be consistent. As I have stated before in this House most States below the border have a law which requires traffic to stop in both directions. There have been several coroners' juries reports, there has been a Hamilton magistrate, and there have been great numbers of citizens who I believe are dissatisfied with the present condition of our school bus legislation.

Let me illustrate the point for a moment, if I may, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the hon. members of this House who are seated here today how many of them know when they are travelling on a highway whether or not they are in a built-up area?

I am ready and willing to confess that as I drive down the highway I do not know when I am in what is constituted as a legally built-up area and when I am not. Yet our school bus legislation states that other vehicles must stop outside of a municipality, outside of a city or town or built-up area. I protested this legislation in committee when it came forward. I would suggest that it is inadequate and it is creating confusion in the minds of the public. I suggest that it should be changed and I personally believe that traffic should stop in both directions so that this matter of school bus legislation becomes consistent with that of other municipalities. I was very critical—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: If the hon. member would just wait until the legislative programme of the department is tabled, after we get the estimates through, he will just see how imaginative a programme we have got.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I thank the hon. Minister for his imaginative programme but I would remind him that I suggested this some two years ago so that it really is not very imaginative on the department's part.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): The hon. members have finally come to their senses over there.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Now, Mr. Chairman, I have to go back and find my notes and start over again because I was interrupted. I think in this respect the department has failed the people of Ontario in the manner in which this previous legislation was put forward. I am very pleased to hear the hon. Minister tell me this legislation is coming forward in some form or other, and I think this all the more amplifies the point that I have been trying to make this afternoon.

We are going to be asked in these estimates to budget a certain amount of money for advertising. At the time the last school bus legislation came into effect there was very little concentrated programme put forward in the way of advising the public that it had in fact become law. When I asked the hon. Minister in charge at that time what had been done, he told me that they had been informed by various press releases and that was the only method that had been used to inform the public.

If he is going to bring forward legislation, as he suggests, which again is going to change this school bus legislation, I suggest that he make adequate provision in his budget so that the public can be properly informed of this change in legislation. I think it is a serious one, and I think, instead of spending the many thousands of dollars which are spent each year around this time to advise people that if they do not get their licences by such-and-such a date they will be prosecuted, he might better spend that money advising the people of the safety laws as they are passed.

As a matter of fact, while I am dealing with that, I would like to say that I for one cannot understand the necessity of putting half-page advertisements in daily newspapers telling people if they do not get their licences by March 14, they are going to be prosecuted. I think it is a complete waste of money. Anybody who has been driving knows that along about March 14, he has to get a new licence and yet this matter of advertising in the press results in nothing more or less than a handout of the public funds to keep the press happy. Now that is a pretty serious charge but in effect that is all the good that it does. It might please the publisher of the paper who charges for his advertisement but I suggest that it is doing little good to the citizens of Ontario.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you will be pleased to know that it has come time for the conclusion of my remarks. In the introduction I indicated that the department had given hon. members of the Opposition plenty of room for criticism. I have touched on a few; there are many more, and while examining these estimates it will be the duty and responsibility of the members of this group to investigate very thoroughly the other operations of the department. I suggest to you, sir, that this department of government has been "tried and found wanting," and that the time has come either for the department to show leadership and concern for the responsibilities for which it was charged, or the department should be amalgamated with other departments of government. I think I have made a good case, Mr. Chairman, for this department being amalgamated with the other departments where it rightfully belongs.

In the matter of dollars expended I will agree with the hon. Minister that its importance to the overall budget is small, but with respect to the importance of the matters which we are discussing, to the people of Ontario, it is extremely important. We cannot afford to allow a single person—and I am dead serious about this—we cannot afford to allow a single person to be maimed, killed or injured on either our highways or our waterways if it can be prevented. It is our intention on this side of the House to discharge those responsibilities completely by examining every corner of the estimates to inquire and ensure that everything that can be done is done to promote the functions of this government. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, The Department of Transport has taken such a merciless beating this afternoon that I am almost tempted to come to its defence and, to a degree, I am going to. Because, Mr. Chairman, there are many aspects of what was said by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. R. C. Edwards), many aspects of his criticism with which obviously one would have to agree. But in his basic theme—and since he reminded us so many times his basic theme was that the department should be abolished—I must say, without necessarily wanting to get into an argument, that I do not think his case was a convincing one.

Many of the points which he raised, I repeat, are points of some validity. I think he destroyed some of the effectiveness by exaggeration. For example, to say that the department is completely bereft of all progressiveness, I do not think is true. I think this department has introduced the point system—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I did not say that. I have a copy of what I said here and I would be pleased to repeat it for the hon. member if he wishes.

Mr. MacDonald: That it was bereft of progressiveness! I think, for example, the introduction of the point system has been a progressive move, and I must say that I was impressed with the statistic—in fact, I was startled with the statistic that the hon. Minister gave us—that 85 per cent of the people in the province of Ontario have not accumulated any points at all. It almost persuades me to believe that enforcement is not as great as it should be, because I do not think we are really as close to being paragons of virtue and perfection as that figure would suggest. But with any reservations one might make, I still think it is a pretty impressive figure.

I would hope, now that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) with his Victorian views with regard to breathalizers has gone off, that his views would not still dominate the government, and that police officers and people in safety councils and others who feel that they have a role to play might be progressive enough to induce the department to introduce this.

Such criticisms, as for example, the delay with the annual report, I could not agree with more. But this is not just a criticism of the department, this is a disease in this government. It is a disease we have taken a look at in the select committee of which the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and I both happened to be members. I am hoping that we can do something about it.

I think, to conclude, as the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) has done, that the hon. Minister wrongly claimed great achievement for the department because there has been an increase in fatalities, I think this is non sequitur. I think there have been some achievements in the department and that we should acknowledge them—moreover, they are not wiped out by the fact that there has been an increase in fatalities over the last year.

Unfortunately, increases in fatalities are almost part of our way of life. I would suggest that if we are going to correct the increase in fatalities that the responsibility for doing so rests not so much in this department as in increasing our enforcement agencies; and that maybe would reduce the 85 per cent figure with no demerits, too. I think this is the answer to getting at the problem of increasing fatalities.

If the hon. member for Wentworth is puzzled as to the contradiction between what the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) said and any other hon. Minister in the government, I am surprised that he is puzzled by this. Surely it has become very obvious for quite some time that the hon. Attorney-General is out of step with everybody in the government.

There is added reason why in this particular department he is out of step. He is nursing a burning sense of pique. For many years the functions of this department were in the department of the hon. Attorney-General and they had a fantastically great capacity for headlines and he exploited that headline potential in safety and everything else.

I hope the hon. Minister will not agree with me by shaking his head affirmatively because this is going to get embarrassing.

However, the hon. Attorney-General exploited this to the hilt in terms of safety and everything else and to his great chagrin this was taken out of his department and transferred to The Department of Transport. Now they are doing a job without necessarily exploiting 101 per cent the headlines of it. The hon. Attorney-General is still unhappy, and the sense of pique makes it necessary for him to make a speech every now and then, as he did down in Windsor, showing once again what everyone knows: that he is out of step with everybody even in the government.

However, the point I want to conclude on with regard to the theme of the hon. member for Wentworth is that I think he draws the wrong conclusions. I think there is enough important work to be done in this department that it is worthy of having a Minister who will give it his full-time responsibility at Cabinet level. My criticism, and this will be the main burden of my general remarks to the introduction of the estimates, is that there is another important phase that the hon. member for Wentworth just touched on at the conclusion which I think this department should be tackling and so far, apparently, it has not gotten around to it.

The phase I refer to is the whole rationalization of transport in this province—the moving of people from one place to another. Now, in checking back over the estimates last year, I was interested to note that a very significant proportion, particularly of the introductory statements, was devoted to this problem of commuter services. It was raised by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and the hon. Prime Minister of the day (Mr. Fröst), took it up. He was in rather a petulant mood that day because apparently he had had his fingers rapped or had been rebuffed by Donald Gordon and everybody else in the railways. We had quite a battle flowing back and forth across the red carpet here, and about the only thing that came out of it apparently was a meeting with Donald Gordon some time later; what came out of that, I do not know.

But the point I want to make, Mr. Chairman, is that commuter services are only one aspect of this whole problem of transportation at the moment. I would think that The Department of Transport in the province of Ontario is the appropriate government department, either through its own research facilities or through co-operation with the research facilities over in the Macaulay empire, to do the necessary job in trying to find answers for reconciling and rationalizing this whole problem of transportation today. It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are now in a position to proceed with this, because as you know, during the past year a report of the Royal commission investigating transport at the federal level has come down, and here—if I may just pause for a moment—I think you get a mixture of federal and provincial responsibilities, and it is impossible to sort them out. Unfortunately, to be frank with you, I have not had time to read the report at the federal level. Unfortunately, one would come to the conclusion from the publicity that it has had, and the comments in the press, that it is for the most part devoted to railway problems. It has come up with a solution which personally does not impress me—that the answer to the railway problem is to restore free competition between the railways.

Now some people may think that conclusion of mine is part of my ideological bias. I was rather interested shortly after the report came down to hear Viewpoint after the news one evening on TV. The speaker was the head of the department of commerce, I believe in the University of Toronto, and certainly not a person who normally would be sharing my ideological bias. After a cold analysis of the whole thing, he ventured the prediction that, a few years from now, those who think they have found the answer to the railway problem by restoring free competition will discover that it is not, and they will be retracing their steps. Surely anybody who has studied the whole economics of transport long since will have come to the conclusion that this is not an area where there is very much scope for free competition. It seems to me, in fastening one's attention and hanging one's hopes on this as being the answer to the problem, that we are being led up a blind alley by the hon. Minister's colleagues at Ottawa at the present time.

However, Mr. Chairman, without going to great length into this—because until the department gets into it I do not think there is very much point for us in the Opposition speaking at great length—the obvious point that strikes one in the situation today is that we have gotten ourselves into a position where every form of transport is subsidized very heavily.

Air transport is subsidized with free meteorological services and with airports. Our truck transport and our bus transport are subsidized by provision of highways on which they operate, when they do not contribute in an equitable way to the cost; they do not contribute to the parking space problem that cars and buses create down in our cities. If you examine water transport you will find that it is subsidized. The result is that we are dipping into the public pockets to subsidize every kind of transport, and yet we end up with a kind of irrational system that still is not paying for itself, and year after year, we have to dip into our pockets still further.

Now it seems to me that we have reached the point where the kind of study that I assume was done at Ottawa, and with the kind of supplementary study that this department will do, we can begin to work towards answers of rationalization which, my present guess is, will have to be dividing up traffic—designating it for certain forms of transport. I read one very interesting brief that was submitted to the Royal commission at the federal level. They were advancing the argument that short-term traffic—100 to 200 miles—in which the problem of delivery is a major portion of the haulage, would be a logical kind of transportation for trucks. But long-term traffic across the nation, was a more logical one for railways.

By permitting both to get into it, you end up with each cutting the other's throat and we the people of the province and of the nation have to subsidize them because they cannot survive. Now, without going any further into this topic—because its ramifications are really endless, Mr. Chairman—I would like to say that rather than see this department abolished, I would like to see this department expanded with research staff. I would be willing to vote for the addition of research staff—because I think the research staff over in The Department of Economics and Development has got more than enough to keep it busy now—for the necessary qualified research staff in this field to start tackling the job of commuter services, the uneconomic competition between the other forms of transport, and come up with the kind of answer that we can at least tackle the problem at the provincial level. Conceivably, if we take a step, we can persuade the federal level to move into it too.

In taking my seat, Mr. Chairman, I just want to draw attention to one other rather remarkable contradiction in the general theme of the Liberal spokesman before the estimate. He wants to wipe out a department, because he says—along with Parkinson—that we have too many of them. But there will be, before the House is finished with its deliberations this year, somebody else who rises to argue that they want a new department, a department of northern affairs, for example. I want to submit that, in that particular instance, it is not more government we want, it is better government, and it is created by seeing that each existing department does its job.

So the hon. member was perhaps very correct in starting his remarks by saying that he was going to play the political song throughout his remarks. He did throughout, I think, to the extent of not recognizing the job that has been done by this department in promoting what I would describe—not in any sense of derogation—as the routine functions of the department, highway safety and things of that nature. I would hope that in years to come they will move on to the broader vistas that are possible for a department of transport, solving problems that lie ahead of us, which nobody has yet tackled.

Mr. Sopha: In respect of the first vote, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make some remarks concerning the administration by the hon. Minister of those monies provided by statute, and noted in the estimates at the bottom thereof, under capital disbursements for the unsatisfied judgment fund which this year amounts to $2.8 million. I might say parenthetically that I inferred from what the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) said that their experience is such now that a great many more people are being impelled to purchase insurance from private insurance companies rather than pay the $20 to the unsatisfied judgment fund.

Now, the remarks of my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards)—and notwithstanding what may have been said in a non-political theme by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald)—I want to comment that the remarks by my hon. colleague were very much worth listening to and I thought very effective and very telling. Now, as was pointed out by him, all the people have not yet come forward to buy their licences, and apparently do not have to do so until at least the 15th day of this month, and perhaps there will be another moratorium. After that time—the hon. Minister shakes his head—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No. I said that there would not be any extension past the 14th—

Mr. Sopha: Well, along with what my hon. friend said, it has often been a source of great curiosity to myself that, so far as other mandatory Acts are concerned—for example, filing of income tax returns by April 30, and everybody in this country knows that he has to do that or he pays the penalty. I have been curious to know why, in this department, year after year, and as long as I can remember—my memory does not go back as a good many memories of this House, but as long as I can remember—every year there have been these large advertisements giving a further moratorium and further period in which people may come forward and buy their licence—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Where has the hon. member been for the last three years?

Mr. Sopha: Why, I ask, does the government not set a fixed date and everybody has to have their licences by that time and that is the end of it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That has been the case for the last three years.

Mr. Sopha: All right, fine, but it has not been the same date.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is a very good point that the hon. member raises, and there is no secret about the situation. There has been no extension of time after a fixed date has been declared or announced for at least three years. In earlier years, an earlier date was set, which was extended and, I believe, in some years there has been more than one extension.

Quite frankly, it is a matter of accounting and there is no secret about it that the fiscal year end for 1961-1962 includes the revenue of the sales in the first three months of this year. And that is the real reason.

Now, the next thing that is of interest on that point is that I think that some consideration should be given to the opportunity of new licences and permits being available prior to the first of January.

The first of January is New Year's Day. Many people are away. Actually the licence has expired on December 31, and that period to March 14 or such other date that may be declared, is really in the nature of a period of grace.

I do not think—and we have looked at this—that there is any revenue by way of transfers or new licences that would be of any loss or significance that would prevent us this coming year from putting '63 licences and permits on sale some time around December 1.

Mr. Sopha: I am very grateful to the hon. Minister for his enlightening remarks and it is a refreshing return to the days when the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) was in charge when he always used to get up and make his speech with one's own, and I have missed the departure of those days under the new regime.

Now, that was not really what I wanted to embark on and say, I sort of got side-tracked. I was going to say in preface to my later submissions that we will not know until everybody comes forward and gets their licence just what percentage of owners of motor vehicles in this province are going to resort to private insurance companies and what percentage are going to remain under the aegis of the unsatisfied judgment fund. I hope it will be a high percentage that will purchase private insurance, as every other hon. member of this House, and particularly the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowl- ing), I imagine, would hope that it would be.

Now that I have got started with everyone in agreement let us see if I can cultivate a little disagreement.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: Well, it is not bad to sound like Charlotte Whitton. She has been pretty successful as a politician.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: She is not old enough, she was introduced this morning as being 36.

An hon. member: She will only have to wait four years.

Mr. Sopha: What I wanted to refer to or describe as one of the greatest anomalies in a government which itself has become an anomaly in the province, is the administration of the unsatisfied judgment fund. I am—though I have a great deal of trepidation about it—I am impelled this day to speak a little more vigorously about it and more to the point than I would have, say, two days ago, because of events that have supervened in between.

I have said in this House before, and I beg leave, Mr. Chairman, to repeat, that I see no justification whatsoever that the payment of $2.8 million should be placed in a department under the responsibility of an hon. Minister whose responsibility, sir, goes only so far as the actual mechanics of paying it out.

Now, whether there is justification for paying it out, whether the judgment under which it was paid out was properly secured in the courts, whether the action was properly defended, is no responsibility of the hon. Minister at all. The first thing he knows about it in his department is when there is a letter received by the unsatisfied judgment fund branch or the financial responsibility section. It refers to a judgment and contains an application for payment out of the fund. The hon. Minister and those responsible to him, his solicitors, check over the application, see that the application is in order and pay the money out.

But so far as the defence of that action is concerned, whether the defendant, the defaulting defendant—the hon. Minister from Kingston (Mr. Nickle) will be one who will be aware of everything I say—whether he was properly defended, whether every witness was brought before the court, whether in fact it has been determined satisfactorily that an insurance company ought to have paid that money, are all matters that are completely unknown to the hon. Minister of Transport. Because that regime, and the responsibility for that, have for many years past remained in The Department of the Attorney-General. I say it is an anomaly, and my word is well chosen.

The whole of the unsatisfied judgment fund, everything relating to the payment out of these public monies, I say, and I say in rationality, ought to be in one department. I suspect that the reason it is not falls completely in line with Professor Parkinson's thesis.

I know where this fund got started. I know the person—and I will make a remark later that perhaps with a little more caution of two days ago I would not have made—away back when this matter got started and the individual who put it into operation devised the scheme which has been much amended and much changed in the intervening years. I say that probably the whole thing is the reluctance on the part of a senior civil servant to divest himself of authority and power.

It is quite remarkable; I say, Mr. Chairman, quite remarkable that in reorganization of the courts we see that same senior civil servant, in a period of three months from making a report until yesterday when the bills were rushed through a committee and the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) was there, that same senior civil servant would not permit a little reorganization of the inner workings, the inner sanctum of government and get that unsatisfied judgment fund branch out of The Department of the Attorney-General and get it where it properly belongs, under the direction, the responsibility and the aegis of the hon. Minister of Transport.

The second thing I want to say with respect to it, and here I am going to speak from personal experience, that in a great many cases, I suspect—I am going to recite two, and I will put the facts on the record—but I suspect if two cases occurred to me then there are a great many more cases of like and similar nature where monies have been paid out of the public revenues and the public treasury of this province and the unsatisfied judgment fund when there is no justification for paying them out.

A year ago or more I put facts on record in this House and I was promised at that time that an explanation would be given to me in relation to them. It has never been forthcoming. I referred to the case of Byrns against Dionne, tried three or four years ago in the district of Sudbury, where after judgment was secured by the plaintiff—I acted for the defendant and judgment for some $3,500 went—then a dispute arose between my client, Dionne, and his insurance company about the liability for payment of the judgment. The company took the position that there had been a statutory violation of the policy and therefore they were not on the risk. Well, there was some disagreement about that, some disagreement about it, and the disagreement was of so sensitive a nature that Dionne was impelled to commence action in the Supreme Court of Ontario asking for a declaration that the policy was in force and the company was liable to indemnify him according to the terms thereof.

In the meantime, of course, the plaintiff made an application to the unsatisfied judgment fund. Becoming aware of this, I wrote to the solicitors for the unsatisfied judgment fund bringing it to their attention that an action had been started and suggesting to them that they had no jurisdiction to pay any monies out of the unsatisfied judgment fund until that issue had been determined.

Quite logically, I felt—I still feel, nothing has ever changed my mind in relation to this—that if there is a possibility of saving public monies, be it $3,500 or $350 or any amount, then the unsatisfied judgment fund ought to join with the plaintiff in such an action in order—to resort to the vernacular, and this may offend the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling)—to endeavour to nail the insurance company.

That is a good phrase, to nail the insurance company. If we can save the public of this province money and demonstrate to the satisfaction of a court that an insurance company is on the risk, then that is good business.

Now, just to conclude it, in that case I got a letter back—I still have it on file—from the solicitor to the hon. Minister of Transport, and he said, to paraphrase him:

"We have no concern about this. All we need is an affidavit from the plaintiff saying that he knows of no insurance coverage that is in force to indemnify him and we pay the money out."

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What year would that be?

Mr. Sopha: That would be 1956 or 1957.

Then I want to tell about another case that I thought was even more remarkable than that and demonstrated the approach of the people who administered the unsatisfied judgment fund; the strictness or the vigour with which they defend these actions.

I had a case where my client was named Nicolic. We were suing an Indian by the name of Devassige—that is a good Manitoulin Island name, Devassige, his father was a chief in the Manitoulin Island then—and the registered owner of the vehicle was one Gray. We can put Gray aside very quickly because Gray never appeared after the accident occurred. He, of course, was not driving the motor vehicle at this time. Devassige, the Indian, was and Gray never appeared. Nobody saw him at any time.

There was an insurance policy in force for $100,000—$100,000, that really warms a lawyer's heart when there is coverage like that. So normally and naturally action was brought against both Devassige and Gray, the registered owners. Devassige—I should go on to say though that I acted for Nicolic; but Flynn, a passenger in the front seat of the same vehicle, was killed in the accident. I did not act for the Flynn estate. He came from Oshawa and they retained local solicitors in Oshawa.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Might I just say something at this point, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: As the hon. member is probably aware this is a statutory item which is disclosed at the end of our estimates. I am very much interested in the instances which he is citing, but as he knows the insurance committee of which some of his hon. colleagues were members brought in its report immediately towards the end of the year and there will be major legislation brought forward within a few days which will implement a substantial portion of those recommendations. When the bill is brought down it will provide a very real opportunity to discuss the fund and go into some of these things.

Mr. Singer: And everything that was before the committee?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, not everything. We will discuss the bill.

Mr. Bryden: The bill may be unduly restrictive.

Mr. Sopha: I wonder why the hon. Minister—I thank him for his intervention—but I wonder why he did not bring that legislation in before he asked us to vote the money to run his department.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, the hon. member's hon. colleague was on the committee.

Mr. Sopha: I do not know what is in it, but I know the second interim report which I had taken the opportunity to read before I got up to speak, satisfied me that they did not deal with these matters I am now referring to in their second interim report.

The hon. Minister may recall that I presented a brief before that committee and it was not very effective even with my own hon. colleagues. They did not include much of what I recommended—some of it, but not much of it—in their second interim report. Maybe at some future time—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It would be my desire that when the bill is brought down we would have a debate or ample opportunity to discuss some of the matters that the hon. member is raising, if they are pertinent.

Mr. Sopha: I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to be very lengthy about this. I said that Flynn, in the front seat, had been killed; Nicolic had been seriously injured, and accordingly two actions were started, one on behalf of Flynn, who was killed, and the other on behalf of Nicolic.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member wants to go ahead now on this?

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I do!

Now the company in this case denied liability because they said that Gray was not the true owner of the vehicle and the vehicle in fact, though not by registration had been transferred prior to the accident to Devassige. The action proceeded along those lines and since Flynn had been killed and the damages to Nicolic were quite serious, it was quite obvious that the amounts that would be recovered in the courts if the action went to trial would far exceed the limits of the unsatisfied judgment fund. Now the total judgments that were eventually recovered in the two actions was $39,000. Hon. members can see that is almost double the amount that was in the fund.

The department and the solicitors for the fund were perfectly aware of all this and perfectly aware of the nature of the defences that had been raised by the insurance company. At one point in the action, and some months before they came to trial, I was approached by one of the solicitors of the unsatisfied judgment fund branch, and he made a remarkable offer. He made the remarkable offer that the fund would kick in $10,000 of the $20,000 that was available; the insurance company that had insured Gray, the registered owner, they would kick in $10,000. My client Nicolic would take $10,000; Mrs. Flynn, the widow, would take the other ten and we would wrap the matter up and settle it!

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): What about Flynn?

Mr. Sopha: This is a very serious matter. It is a very serious matter and we know, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) is the Bob Hope of the poor, but we have not got the time to stop and listen to him.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What year was this case?

Mr. Sopha: What year? That was 1959.

I was quite impressed with the prodigality of civil servants with public funds. I was quite impressed with the fact that apparently conversations had taken place between the solicitors of the unsatisfied judgment fund and the solicitors for the insurance company. Of course, I was not invited to participate in those conversations.

But hon. members see how the deal had been made; $10,000 from the fund, $10,000 from the insurance company.

There is a compromise! We take far less than we eventually got and the whole thing would be settled. The offer was rejected, was rejected out of hand; completely refused and we proceeded to trial.

Now, my complaint is this and I state it very simply: The solicitors for the unsatisfied judgment fund, if they were about their business—and I might add if they were properly paid, which they are not and never have been, there has been a great progression of them that have come in there, stayed a few months and then gone on to greener pastures after eight years of going to law school—if they were about their business and there was a possibility of hooking the insurance company and getting them on the risk and getting that $100,000 of insurance that was available under the policy which insured Gray, they would join forces and aid and abet the efforts of the plaintiffs in the case in order to endeavour to bring about that result.

But why should these solicitors, who are hired—I do not want to blame the solicitors—but why should the hon. Minister or the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) who has the responsibility of protecting this $2.8 million which comes from the public monies of this province—why should there be such prodigality in paying it out and offering to pay it out? Why not make every endeavour to—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: If the hon. member would give me the identification of the files, I would be glad to look into them and inform myself as to the facts and put myself in the position to discuss the matter.

Mr. Sopha: Nicolic against Gray and Devassige. D-e-v-a-s-s-i-g-e.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: And the other case?

Mr. Sopha: Bryns—B-y-r-n-s—against Dionne.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would be pleased, Mr. Chairman, to inform myself and put myself in the position to discuss these matters in an intelligent way with my hon. friend, but at the moment I have no knowledge of them because they are of some ancient vintage.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister has no knowledge of them, but I am informing him of them. I informed the authorities of the case of Bryns and Dionne a year ago, and they said they would give me an answer but I have never had one yet. Now I give the hon. Minister this additional one.

To review what I said. I simply do not understand as a member of this House, nor do I understand as a solicitor of the Supreme Court, why the officials or the people responsible for the unsatisfied judgment fund, if they can save a dollar—if they can save a dollar by putting the risk or demonstrating to a court that the risk is properly the responsibility of an insurance company—that they do not bend every effort, every effort to do it.

What was the result of that case? The result of that case was the saving of about $24,000 to the fund. In this way, that at the trial Mr. Justice Ferguson found that Gray was the true owner—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Then right was done!

Mr. Sopha: But through no assistance of the unsatisfied judgment fund, through no assistance whatsoever.

The position—let me just go on and refer to that—the position taken by the fund by E. H. Silk, QC, who appears by local agent at the trial, their position was a completely passive one.

I go on to add, sir, that they had not been in touch with Devassige, for whom E. H. Silk, QC, appeared, from the time he went to jail—he was sentenced for criminal negligence causing death—they had never seen him from the time he went to Guelph, to which institution he was sentenced for one year, until the morning of the trial. The solicitor who appeared for him on the record at the trial did not even have an interview with him that day of the trial. He was completely, I might add, in the hands of the insurance company's lawyers. He was completely in their hands. He came there as an auxiliary and an adjunct to assist them in the defence of statutory violation in that their insured Gray was not the true owner of the vehicle and Devassige took the stand and testified to that set of facts in their endeavour to get out.

Now when large amounts of public money are involved—the $2.8 million that the hon. Minister is asking for this year—when large amounts are involved, one with a considerably greater feeling than curiosity can see in the employment of counsel by that government, by your government—and the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) asked to have tabled the amounts that were paid in the employment of outside counsel; I would not dare trust my memory to remember how much they were, but they were very substantial sums indeed.

One notes in expropriation proceedings and that type of thing, where the interests of the province are at stake, that that government will hire the very best counsel that they can find on Bay, Adelaide and Richmond Streets—the very best, the leading law firms, are hired. I have asked before and I ask again, in the administration of this fund, I know of no single case where, in a stout and spirited defence of the action, this government—through the hon. Attorney-General or his department or anyone else—has ever gone out and got leading counsel to defend.

There is, truth to tell—the hon. Attorney-General does not like to hear this, but it is true—that normally in the defence of these actions E. H. Silk, QC, appears on the record and they hire a local Tory law firm which may or may not be competent, may or may not carry on much other motor vehicle litigation practice at all. The business is farmed out to them and all hon. members need to do—I do not want to mention my good friend from Sudbury—but all hon. members need to do is look at the public accounts, at page U-7, half way down the page, and see one of the leading Tory law firms in Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Ask the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) how much his law firm received federally—

Mr. Sopha: Alongside a leading Tory law firm from Hamilton—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question—

Mr. Sopha: I did not ask a question.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There was a point raised by the hon. member.

Let me say this, that in paying out the monies from the fund to our department, there is an average time required, at the moment, of 14 days which I regard as too long. Steps will be taken to shorten that time and expedite the issue of these cheques. The 14 days—during the period that I have been connected with the department—have been required to check the sufficiency of the documentation or the judgment or whatever the authority is, to comply with the law and authorize the payment out.

Now, on this subject the hon. member's colleagues and ours—and the committee itself—brought in some findings which are set out in the book which you have. This report was brought in last December. Some of us were somewhat involved in the month of January on other matters and—

Mr. Singer: Not too successfully.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, we were involved; achieved success. The position is this, that the administration—firstly, the administration under the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) bears a solid front with respect to this matter. The legislation, of course, that we are going to come up with in respect to the implementation of this report will be one which bears the entire support of the Cabinet and of this government, including my colleague, the hon. Attorney-General.

There is no dissension or disagreement of any kind as suggested by the hon. member somewhat earlier. And I think there would be no secret in the fact that the operation of the fund is going to be placed entirely under The Department of Transport and with the entire co-operation and assistance of the hon. Attorney-General. When this bill is brought down in a matter of a very few days—and I am trying to get it down as quickly as I can—there are only 24 hours in each day as far as I am concerned, but we will get this down. I have in mind the time factor of getting the bill printed and into hon. members' hands so that it can be considered and looked at, and so on, so there will be an adequate debate on the subject.

Mr. Sopha: I am very glad to hear from the hon. Minister that what I advocated last year—that this fund go under one department—is in fact going to be effected by this legislation. It is a very progressive step. Nor did I, Mr. Chairman, suggest that there was any dissension between him and the hon. Attorney-General, Mr. Chairman, though I might add that the hon. Attorney-General is a man with whom it is not difficult to have dissension at any time. But I imagine the hon. Minister gets along with him better than we do.

I do not apologize for bringing these matters to the attention of the House. A search of the files of those two cases will reveal that what I said is absolutely correct, and I hope when the hon. Minister does get it under his department that new vigour will go into the administration of this thing so that public monies are paid out of it only after it is determined that an insurance company is not really on the risk. Now, it is not the proper place to say that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) promised this, that the second interim report of the select committee on automobile insurance would be debated, an opportunity would be given to debate it. I know him to be a man of his word and I would think that, before the conclusion of this session of the Legislature, such an opportunity will be provided, because I do want to seize the opportunity to try to demonstrate—and I could not persuade the select committee to include it in its report apparently—to try to demonstrate that the legislation respecting the motor vehicle accidents in this province, that that legislation is heavily biased in favour of the insurance companies, and accordingly is heavily prejudicial to plaintiffs. I can show that.

All the rights and privileges that are given insurance companies to add themselves as third parties, to plead statutory violation of policies, is just as if the insurance companies wrote the legislation. I think they had a heavy hand, through some pressure group perhaps, in putting in some of the phraseology.

I add that there are some insurance companies, like All-State and State Farm, that are not in the business of paying claims at all. Those two companies in particular are in the business of fighting lawsuits. They want to fight lawsuits, they love the courts, and they will use every legal trick and every legal chicanery that is available to them through pettifogging delaying tactics to avoid the payment of just claims upon the policies of the motor vehicle, that the vehicle was in the possession at the time of the accident of Devassige with the consent of Gray, the true owner, and therefore judgment went against Gray and the company had to stand behind him as the registered owner and indemnify him. The unsatisfied judgment fund, which a few months previous had in prodigal fashion been willing to pay out $10,000 of the public money, along with the insurance company, got out of the matter with the payment of their own solicitor. I can demonstrate also that they do that. They do it throughout the province.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, this is far removed from the subject. This is a matter of The Insurance Act when it comes under some other department's estimates. But it demonstrates the co-operation and the spirit of helpfulness and kindness that exists and that we try to generate here. Let me say this to the hon. member. If he will get hold of me tomorrow and tell me what he has got in mind, I will even take time out to discuss it with him before I finalize the bill over the weekend.

Mr. Sopha: Well, that is very simple, because then I need only provide the hon. Minister with a copy of the brief that I presented before the select committee and it is all contained therein.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I will dig it out myself.

Mr. Sopha: I wish the hon. Minister would dig it out and read it and perhaps take out some of those invidious sections around section 220 of The Insurance Act that give the insurance companies of this province so much latitude in actions that are brought by people who are injured on our highways. And those are the remarks I wish to make with respect to the unsatisfied judgment fund which, apart from my criticism, has been a wonderful mechanism in this province to compensate people who would not otherwise get a nickel from improvident defendants.

It was a very progressive step 10 years ago or so when it was brought in, and I think, was the leader in this country. I am not one of those not able to exercise my larynx to say some kind things about this government. One can afford to say kind things about it as one can afford to say kind things of the person who is on his deathbed and going to his great reward, and that is the spirit in which I say it.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, I would not have got up to speak on this issue if it had not been for the hon. Minister saying that he was so lenient and wanted people to express themselves freely, or words to that effect. I would like very much to ask a question on water safety. Will that come under main office? I do not know where else you could put it, you certainly cannot put it under the other items.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bukator: No, it is not a different matter. It does come under the provincial government and I can assure you that that is where that belongs. I just do not want to be off-base the first time I am on my feet this year.

You can recall a year ago when we had that tragedy in Niagara Falls when a man and his family lost their lives going over the rapids—the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) would remember that case very well, he is well acquainted with the river. Now, I had something to say about that matter at that time. There were many delegations and many people concerned about this because there were many people using the Niagara river for boating purposes, both for fishing and taking their families out on a Sunday. This man had his family out. His motor failed him above the intake at Chippawa, and they were lost in the rapids. It was a tragedy that we will remember there for a long, long time.

I suggested to the parks commission at that time—I am awfully sorry that the chairman is not here—that they purchase a vehicle, a boat, with two people to man the boat, and if they had had that at that time this tragedy would not have occurred.

I was talking to the manager of the parks commission and he suggested to me that this matter was a federal matter, such as you have suggested, Mr. Chairman.

I find that the lands to the international boundary have been leased to the federal government by the parks commission, simply because the Hydro wanted to dig out these intakes for their power project. So the land comes under the direct jurisdiction of the the Niagara Parks Commission. Under those circumstances we felt—the people of the city of Niagara Falls, the mayor, his council, the reeve and council of Stamford township, among many others throughout the province—that some kind of a safety measure should be brought about.

They decided that the proper way to handle this thing would be to get the surveyors out—the surveyors and the engineers of the Hydro and the army corps on the American side—to install some kind of cable or safety measure across the Niagara river. This at that time did not make sense to me as a layman because it would have been too costly and too hard to handle. I suggested that they buy a boat with two men to man this apparatus. I am not criticizing the hon. Minister here, I am giving him an “out,” I am showing him how he can add this to his programme and provide the necessary safety for the people who use that river.

The natural harbour there is the intake to the Chippawa creek; there is a little bay there with a light and with a place to moor their boat and intercept the boats that do get into difficulty at that point, which would be about a mile and a half above the falls.

This is the answer to the problem, and why I tell the hon. Minister that it is simple to handle this problem; because I, at one time, was acquainted with two people who rowed out into the Niagara river, out beyond the Canadian boundary, picked up three youngsters off a raft with a row-boat and rowed back into the intake and saved their lives. It is just how simple this thing can be handled.

As a matter of fact, when I was on the parks commission several years ago, I suggested to them at that time that they purchase a boat, and give it to the volunteer fire department of the village of Chippawa to man, because they are quite expert in those waters; they know them well. I remember the item at that time would have cost approximately $1,000. The parks commission stated to me that, because they did not care to purchase a unit for a group of people and have them man it, they thought at that time that they themselves might buy a boat, have it on the river front and man it with their own staff.

Four or five years have passed by and nothing was done. The tragedy came about and again they talked about this matter last summer and again in the fall and nothing did come about.

I suggest to the hon. Minister that this is the way to handle this problem. I would like very much to appeal to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) himself. If your department does not handle this thing maybe the Hydro will. If the Hydro feel that they do not have anything to do with this thing maybe the parks commission should. They encourage tourists to come there to use those waters, to come down into that area and spend their money. I recall that, not long ago, a youngster came into one of our tourist establishments along that river which is being maintained by the parks commission—a boy 12 years of age. He fell off his raft, and the boy drowned, simply because there were not the proper precautions to inform him of the treacherous and dangerous waters. After that, a sign was put up. They always close the door after the horse gets out.

I would like at this particular time to get an expression from the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) in this particular case—not economics and whatever the case may be—because he is acquainted with our problem; or the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) himself, who could direct one of the departments to provide this unit for us.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, the matter that the hon. member raises was referred to briefly earlier.

The primary responsibility with reference to safety at sea, as the subject is called, does rest with the federal government. Now, the hon. member may be closer to a solution to his problem than he thinks. Contrary to some of the things that are said—I think facetiously—on his side of the fence about what we do in the departments of government, some of us do try to keep well informed of developments involving such matters as these.

There has recently been announced a decision of the federal government to form and constitute a Canadian coastguard. That is something that we have been after for a long time. It is this type of function that the Canadian coastguard would include in its scope of operation, because the American coastguard has a similar pattern of safety for protecting dangerous waters and special situations such as this. While it has nothing to do with the provincial Department of Transport, I can assure the hon. member I will certainly be glad to discuss it with my federal counterpart when I see him next in the next week or ten days.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue this a bit further. I did not make myself too clear to the hon. Minister. Those lands that I speak of—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, this is out of order!

Mr. Bukator: I am not out of order, Mr. Chairman. This is not a federal matter, this is on provincial lands that come under the jurisdiction of the parks commission and the Hydro.

An hon. member: This is not under 2001.

Mr. Bukator: Then tell me where it is, because I want to discuss this matter again. I am not going to accept this stall that the hon. members opposite, from time to time, try to impose on us. This comes under either the Hydro or the parks commission. They should protect the people they invite into that area.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to revert to the matter that the hon. member was discussing.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

On vote 2001:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, at the supper adjournment I was on the point of saying that I can sympathize with the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) in the difficulties he had in two cases he cited, which involved the unsatisfied judgment fund and accident claims generally. I believe, sir, that the fundamental reason for the difficulties he encountered—and for difficulties that many others have encountered—is that the unsatisfied judgment fund has been almost a complete flop, as far as dealing with the problem it was designed to deal with is concerned. I think this was obvious several years ago to everybody except the government and, I would judge also, the hon. member for Sudbury, who indicated that he considered it satisfactory.

It would appear now that fact has also become obvious to the government or, at any rate, to the select committee which was appointed by this Legislature and which consists mainly of government members. This committee has presented an interim report, as we know, in which, in effect, it recommends—and we will wait to see to what degree the government adopts its recommendations—that the unsatisfied judgment fund be departed from entirely, or the principle lying behind it be departed from.

The committee recommends that the name of the fund be changed to the Motor Vehicle Accident Claim Fund, and I may say, Mr. Chairman, that this is much more than a mere change of name. The suggestion for a change of name is appropriate because it is indicative of a recommendation that the principle underlying the unsatisfied judgment fund be radically altered. The principle the committee recommends is, shall I say, half of a government-sponsored public automobile insurance plan. It proposes that in future, payments be made without court proceedings, out of the fund simply upon the claimant satisfying the administrators of the fund that he has a just claim. As far as the claimant is concerned, it now becomes an administrative proceeding. The government, either directly or through agencies will hire its own adjusters and adjusts claims which are then settled on an inadequate basis, I would suggest, out of the motor vehicle accident claims fund—or they could be on an inadequate basis—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): How can the hon. member say “inadequate” when the legislation has not been—

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am now going purely on the basis of what is in the report. If I gave the impression I was talking about the legislation, I would like to withdraw that. I had stated earlier that we would have to wait and see to what degree the government accepts the committee's recommendations; but as far as the committee's recommendations are concerned, it proposes an entirely new principle of settlement of claims out of the fund, and on the basis which they propose it is my submission that the procedure is inadequate to a certain degree. However—

Mr. J. R. Simmonett (Frontenac-Addington): How would the hon. member know that?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I know what is in this report.

Mr. Simmonett: Well, I know, but how would the hon. member know it is inadequate?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am suggesting that, on the basis they have suggested, it could be inadequate in some degree. It is, however, an important and a radical departure in principle, from the principle of the unsatisfied judgment fund. It is one that I personally welcome because I have always—especially in dealing with the government opposite—worked on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread and this is a sort of half-way measure towards a public automobile insurance plan. The hon.

Minister has stated that he is planning to bring in legislation shortly and I do not wish to get into too much discussion at this stage on this particular principle. One labours somewhat at a disadvantage in not knowing what the hon. Minister's legislation is, because we cannot be sure just what we will be able to discuss at that time. However, I have no doubt that in discussion of the principle of his bill we will be able to deal with the whole principle of protection of the public against damages from automobile accidents. There is one phase of the matter, however, which I would like to deal with to some extent at this time, because I believe that it will not be covered by the hon. Minister's bill. This is the matter of the fee paid by a driver who cannot demonstrate to the licence-issuing authority proof of financial responsibility. This is a matter which has already been dealt with by regulation.

I think it is regrettable, Mr. Chairman, that this matter should have been dealt with by regulation without any opportunity for debate in this House. It, too, represents, in effect, a totally new departure in principle. It is far more than an administrative decision which could quite properly be handled by regulation. In my opinion it introduces an entirely new principle which I think should have been debated in this House before it was implemented. The increase in the fee that the uninsured driver must pay from $5 to $20—

Mr. Chairman: This comes under vote 2004.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to you that after we have had a very lengthy discussion—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member is talking about fees now.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am talking about the fee, if you want to call it that, Mr. Chairman. I am not even sure that is the proper designation for it, but I am talking about the money that a motorist, who cannot demonstrate proof of financial responsibility, has to pay to the licence-issuing authority. It is a straight matter relating to the unsatisfied judgment fund. The money that he pays goes into the unsatisfied judgment fund. I do not know what branch of the department handles the administration of this fund, but I assume from the fact that you permitted a lengthy discussion of the matter under this vote that administration is under the main office. I assure you, sir, that I am talking exclusively about the administration of the unsatisfied judgment fund.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Let the hon. member talk. He will say it anyway.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, I will certainly say it. The point I was trying to make, Mr. Chairman, is that the increase in this amount of money from $5 to $20 is tantamount to establishing a system of compulsory insurance in this province. A payment of $20 is punitive. It is a penalty, in effect, for failing to carry insurance and, as I say, that—for all practical purposes—makes it compulsory insurance. In fact, the figures which the hon. Minister himself gave today bear out my contention. All but a trivial minority of those who have renewed their licences for this year, have demonstrated that they have purchased insurance. In fact, I saw an article in the Toronto Daily Star of today to the effect that this has proved to be a real bonanza for the insurance companies, their business has gone up something like 30 per cent.

Mr. Simonett: Does the hon. member believe that?

Mr. Bryden: I see no reason for not believing it. The hon. Minister's statement indicated a substantial increase and the article in the Daily Star based ostensibly on figures received from The Department of Insurance and from insurance companies, was that their business had gone up about 30 per cent. Now, whether the figure of 30 per cent is correct or not really does not matter, the point is that it necessarily must have gone up very substantially.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): There is no need for accuracy.

Mr. Bryden: This is typical of the facetious sort of comment of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha). The point is that the business of the insurance companies has increased substantially and it does not really matter the precise amount by which it has increased, that can be determined at a proper time. But it clearly is having the effect of compelling people to insure. It is a penalty which forces them to insure.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, that is not entirely accurate and let us face the issue squarely. On the one hand you would have compulsory insurance or a state socialized form of insurance, and, quite frankly, the position of our government is that we support the free enterprise system. We are dealing with two entirely different concepts of the subject.

There is something else to remember, however, and it is this. There is a substantial difference between what one gets for $20 and what one gets for a larger payment from an insurance policy, and let us recognize that. But the room for the $20 situation covers a very important gap where somebody does not believe in insurance, somebody does not use his vehicle more than six months in the year, or does not leave certain rural areas. Certainly this whole report changes the concept of our whole approach to this thing.

Obviously, in the increase from $5 to $20 which the committee recommended, and the party of the hon. member was represented on that committee and, I believe, the report was unanimous, we have simply implemented the unanimous report of a committee. Quite frankly, the results are exactly what I think everyone expected.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Just on a point of order, I would like to clear this up. The report was not unanimous, I did not agree with some parts of it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am sorry, it was not unanimous. The hon. member for Hamilton East has corrected me.

But the point I am trying to get at is that, frankly, we could have a very interesting debate on this but I think it would be more to the point if we had it deferred until the bill implementing the report comes in in a matter of a few days. I will tell hon. members it is going to be one of the most advanced operations of its kind in this country, and, indeed, on this continent. It is going to be a streamlined operation of which even the party of the hon. member for Woodbine will be proud.

Mr. Bryden: I do not believe the question of a fee of $20 will be dealt with in the bill, or will it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It has been dealt with.

Mr. Bryden: This is what I am talking about.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But it will be open to discussion, because maybe next year it will go to $25 or back to $15.

Mr. Bryden: This could be, I do not know. I am merely making my submission, and I think that the hon. Minister's comments bear it out, that the increase to $20 is tantamount to compulsory insurance. He is satisfied with the tax, he is perfectly entitled to be satisfied with whatever he likes.

This has had the effect of inducing almost everybody to buy insurance from private companies, so I think we are on common ground, at least as to the result. As to whether or not we agree with the method of doing it, that is different. But the result is—and I would take it that the hon. Minister's statement bears me out—that we now, for all practical purposes, have compulsory insurance in this province.

Interjections by the hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. gentleman from Middlesex South (Mr. Allen) says it is the cheapest insurance one can get. This is the other point I wanted to make about it. It is not insurance at all. There is no insurance protection for the person who pays the $20.

In my opinion, if the report of the committee is implemented there will be a substantially greater measure of protection than there was in the past for the victim of an automobile accident, but there is still no protection whatsoever for the person who pays the $20 plus $1 on his licence fee into the unsatisfied judgment fund. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if we are assessing people at that rate, we might as well take the next stage and consider a programme to provide a person who has to pay that amount of money with insurance protection. The $20 figure is getting very close to the amount of money for which a person can buy the insurance protection envisaged from some private company. As I recall it, the proposal of the select committee was that the maximum liability on the fund should be $20,000, $40,000 and $5,000, I do not know if the bill will contain that particular provision or not—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It might even improve on it.

Mr. Bryden: Well, it might improve on it, but I can only take it on the basis of what I know at the present time, which is in the committee's report. And as far as a victim is concerned, he may now—or when the legislation is enacted he will presumably be able to—claim damages up to those limits of the fund, but the person who pays the $20 is still liable for everything that is paid out of the fund in respect to an accident for which he is held responsible. Yet for $20 some companies will give at least some drivers insurance protection to those limits, in fact, better than those limits and for most drivers the fee would not be very much more.

The Co-operators' Insurance, for example, in regard to the most favoured class of drivers, will provide coverage of $20,000, $40,000 and $10,000—which is a little better than that recommended in the report—for six-monthly premiums of $10, two premiums per year of $10 each. All I am saying is that some drivers can now get from a private company—which has all the costs of acquisition—insurance protection up to the limits proposed here for the fee that the government is now demanding and for which they get no protection at all. I would suggest to the government that if they are now thinking in terms of fees of that magnitude they should go a step further; set a level of payment that will cover the claims according to their calculations, and simply provide the insurance protection to the driver as well as to the victim of the accident. That seems to me to be a sensible, logical extension.

I may say that I object to the principle of compulsory insurance as such. My friends on the Liberal benches are entirely in favour of compulsory insurance or some of them are at any rate. I have said that the hon. Minister has brought it in by the back door and I think quite illegitimately by regulation rather than by decision of this House. I would say that compulsory insurance, as such, is even more objectionable than the old unsatisfied judgment fund principle which has now been abandoned. I say that it is wrong for the state to use its coercive powers to force people directly or indirectly to buy something from someone else who is making a profit out of the transaction. I do not see why one should be forced to contribute to somebody else's profit. If the government is of the opinion, and I am, that all drivers should have the insurance protection up to some reasonable limit for the benefit of the public, then I believe it is the responsibility of the government to provide that protection at cost; that is at the actuarial cost of covering the claims plus whatever is required for administration. This would mean that the motorist would pay substantially less and if we are going to compel him to do something, then we should let him have it at cost.

Mr. Simonett: What is cost?

Mr. Bryden: I just defined it a minute ago, so I will not bother repeating it for you. If we had a public plan in which the insurance coverage was supplied at cost, the price would be considerably lower than is now paid on average to private insurance companies. The private companies are paying out in claims less than 60 cents on every dollar they are collecting on premiums. There is a margin of better than 40 per cent that goes to acquisition costs of various kinds and administrative costs. Under any public universal plan those costs could be reduced very substantially, probably to somewhere between 5 and 10 per cent. This would be of benefit to the motorist and, as I say, if the government is now taking the position or anybody is taking the position that the motorist be compelled to insure, then it is their duty to give it to him at the actual cost of covering the claims and administering the plan.

An hon. member: At no profit?

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member has asked "at no profit?" No, I do not think the government should make a profit out of such a plan. I think they should probably have sufficient margin to provide adequate reserves but they should not compel anybody to buy from some other person. The hon. member for Sudbury stated this afternoon that in his opinion the insurance law of this province was loaded in favour of the insurance companies and against the claimants. Yet his party, or some hon. members of his party, want the government to use its coercive powers to throw everybody into the hands of the insurance companies, and in fact the government has for all practical purposes done that, because we are now in their hands.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Are you for or against compulsory insurance?

Mr. Bryden: Since the hon. leader of the Opposition has asked the question I will explain it for him in terms that I hope even he will be able to understand. I am in favour of a public automobile accident insurance plan similar in its basic principles to the workmen's compensation plan. This is admittedly compulsory insurance but of a very specific type. It is not the kind of compulsory insurance which says that one must have insurance but one has to go to some insurance company to get it. Under my proposal, the motorist will have to pay a fee and in consideration of that fee both he and the public will get certain protection. Now, I think there is a fundamental difference in principle there, and I would like to make it clear that I am in no sense in favour of compulsory insurance in the way the Liberals have been talking about it, or in the way which I submit the government has now introduced it by the back door.

One of the hon. gentlemen has just said that when the government starts paying claims we are in trouble. Well, one of the recommendations of the select committee on automobile insurance is that under certain circumstances the government should start paying claims or they should be responsible for the payment. They may hire outside adjusters to handle the matter but they will be responsible for the payment. So we are accepting that particular principle already.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, to call attention to another difficulty which arises from compulsory insurance in the sense in which the Liberal party and others have been talking about it. With insurance through private companies one still has all the problems or can have all the problems of going to court to obtain settlement. Any victim has to deal with his claims, or would have to deal with his claims in exactly the same way as he now has to deal with them. I would like to call attention to statements made by Chief Justice McRuer earlier this year at the opening of the winter assizes of the Supreme Court of Ontario. Chief Justice McRuer made such statements as the following. I am now quoting from the Toronto Daily Star for January 9, 1962:

Our present procedures relating to automobile insurance have made the Supreme Court a great adjustment bureau for motor accident cases.

He complains quite vigorously at the courts having to spend so much of their time dealing with automobile accident claims. He makes the further point that these claims cannot be satisfactorily dealt with in the courts. The Toronto Globe and Mail of January 12, published the text of part of Chief Justice McRuer's remarks and I would like to read these remarks as reported in the Globe:

There is, however, one thing that I am convinced of and that is that our present method of settling claims for injuries sustained in automobile accidents is more of a guessing game than administering justice. In the first place, we have to depend on the recollection of witnesses who have been involved in an accident or seen an accident. They are asked to state with precision the details of an event that happened in a space of a second or two and an event that was entirely unexpected. In addition they are asked to relate these details in a courtroom sometimes two, three, and I have known, four and five years after the accident.

The witness is asked to tell you when he looked to the right as he was approaching the intersection and he says 100 feet from the corner and he is asked when he looked to the left and he says 75 feet from the corner and he tells you where the other car was or was not when he looked. The evidence is related as if someone was standing with a stopwatch and a director to measure the time, the distance and the angle of sight. And the courts are asked to give judgment on this sort of evidence.

There are cases I know where there can be no question as to liability but more often than not both parties have been negligent, and then the court or a jury is asked to make another guess and that is to decide the respective degrees of fault in percentages. I can say with some conviction that I never preside over an automobile accident case that I have any real feeling of administering justice according to law.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is a most regrettable situation when the Chief Justice of the—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is about the administration of justice; I represent The Department of Transport.

Mr. Bryden: I am talking about a problem in the administration of justice which arises in connection with laws that the hon. Minister administers. And because of the inadequacy of his laws—

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2001.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am dealing with vote 2001. I am talking about it in relation to the laws which we now have, with regard to financial responsibility and the unsatisfied judgment fund, and I am pointing out that these laws—or rather their inadequacy—are creating a serious problem in the administration of justice in this province to the degree that the Chief Justice felt compelled to call attention to it—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This is completely irrelevant to the vote before us, and I ask you to so rule, Mr. Chairman. I have already assured my hon. friend and colleagues that we will have an ample debate on this.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, on the basis of the hon. Minister's assurance that it will be possible to discuss this matter when his bill is before the House, I am quite prepared to leave it at that for the present time. I would merely like to reiterate that there now becomes very little justification and logic for the type of fund he is administering. I am suggesting to him that he should give consideration before he brings his bill in.

I have no doubt that it is in its final stages of drafting, but I am suggesting that he should now give consideration to following through to its logical conclusion the principle which apparently has been adopted in part. He has now, in effect, adopted a compulsory insurance plan. I suggest to him that he should go the whole stage and establish a public plan which will eliminate the difficulties in the administration of justice to which Chief Justice McRuer called attention.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2001 agreed?

Mr. Singer: No, no. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word or two about this. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with very great interest not only to the remarks of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), but to a couple of interjections from the hon. Minister. Let me deal first with the hon. member for Woodbine who I think is so far off the beam. As usual he has not properly read this report, and I do not think he reasonably understands it.

Mr. Bryden: That may just be your point of view.

Mr. Singer: Well, that may just be my point of view, but I listened very carefully to him and I sat on the—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): He is expounding what the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) was expounding when he was seeking the leadership of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Singer: Well, now, the hon. member for York South wants to make a speech for me too. I thank him very much. Now with his permission, may I continue? I thank him very much indeed. Now between the two of them they recognize that they have misinterpreted what is before the House in this report, and I think they have misinterpreted really which direction they are attempting to go. First of all—and perhaps at this point, we should bring the hon. Minister in—there is a substantial difference between compulsory insurance and state-run insurance. There can be compulsory insurance without having the state or the government run it all.

Now Mr. Chairman, for myself and for many of my colleagues here, we believe that the 7,500 men at least who act as agents in the insurance field, and the thousands of people who depend upon them, have a right to earn a living as long as they are providing a reasonable service. And we are not anxious to get the government into this insurance business unless and until it is proven that private industry cannot run it properly itself.

Now that is point number one. I think this is very important, and I would be interested to know if my colleagues here on the far left really believe that these thousands of insurance agents and the people who are dependent on them should be put out of business.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member put them out in the hustings.

Mr. Singer: I think this is very important and I think we should hear about this. And I think the people of the province should hear about this.

Mr. Bryden: Does the hon. member want an answer right now?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I would be interested, too, in hearing my informed friend from Woodbine explain to us how—even in the great province of Saskatchewan—you can operate insurance without having some provision to take care of drivers of stolen vehicles, drivers who break the law and out-of-state drivers, unless you have something—no matter by what name you call it—similar to the unsatisfied judgment fund.

Now this is another sort of big smoke-screen that they spread in the hope and expectation that people will not understand what they are saying, and believe that they have the panacea for all diseases. I think, too, Mr. Chairman, that some of us should have a very careful look at what they really do in Saskatchewan. In Saskatchewan they have several ideas which I think have substantial merit and they do provide a certain measure—and the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) knows I have talked about this in the committee, and I have talked about it to him out of the committee—that I think has substantial merit in providing some form of compensation for liability without fault.

Now they have gone to a very minimum stage to do this in the province of Saskatchewan. Their limits, in fact, are substantially lower than the limits that are presently in the province of Ontario. It is interesting to note that when we had on the select committee my good friend, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) and later his successor from Hamilton East (Mr. Davison) we did not hear this thing expounded at very great length. We did not hear, in this recommendation, about moving from $5 to $20—this sort of an objection.

But they did go along on this general paragraph on page 4, and I think this is most important, because certainly I agree with the provisions of the paragraph on page 4 of this report, and when the committee reconvenes I am going to argue along these lines in the hope that I can convince the committee that this is a better system. The paragraph says this, Mr. Chairman, and I think it is important enough to read it into the record:

It is specifically understood that certain members of the committee have signed a report on the understanding that the recommendations of the majority are a step forward.

I do not think that there is any hon. member of this House who can honestly say that the recommendations as contained in here are not a step forward, and can be implemented easily by legislation in this session—or I suppose by regulation, because the $20 matter was implemented by regulation rather than by legislation. These members want it understood, and I say I am one of these, that they believe in the principle of compulsory insurance and expect the committee will be reconvened to consider compulsory protection for the people of Ontario.

I think this is most important, Mr. Chairman, but I do not think anything is to be gained by the oversimplification that my hon. friend for Woodbine attempts to make. Nor, on the other hand, by the oversimplification that the hon. Minister attempts to make. I hope I did not detect in the hon. Minister's remarks—when he said that next year it may be $15, or $25 or $35—that he is prejudging, or presuming to prejudge what the next recommendation of the committee will be because, if this is what the hon. Minister implied, then I take very serious issue with him. I am sure I must have misunderstood the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I would think so, and I would also say that I hope the members of the committee would also have an open mind to deal with the facts as they are at the time when they next meet.

Mr. Singer: I accept that assurance and I am sure that when the committee reconvenes we will have this discussion. We will have it in a sensible way. At a later date when we get on to debating what is in this report, I will have some other remarks to make, but I thought that it was reasonably important at this time, Mr. Chairman, to correct what I thought were some very serious misstatements of fact made by the hon. member for Woodbine. I would even go so far as to say they were misrepresentations as to what had actually taken place.

Mr. Chairman, I thought that it would be important on this vote—I do not know whether I am in order on this vote, or whether it should be a later one—to talk about a couple of things I spoke about last year. One was the question of compulsory inspection of automobile vehicles and the other was the question of compulsory testing of drivers over a period of time. I am sure that all hon. members—

Mr. Chairman: Order. This is not on 2001.

Mr. Singer: Is this a later vote, Mr. Chairman? All right, I will let this vote go and I will rise on the next vote.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, coming as I do from a municipality that is completely surrounded by water, I was very pleased to hear the hon. Minister mention the fact that the federal authorities will be looking into the problem of water safety on international waters. The city of Windsor was so disturbed with the dangers involved that, on September 11, they passed the following resolutions, and I bring it to the attention of the hon. Minister at this time to urge him to press on the federal authorities the seriousness of the problem.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This matter was dealt with before dinner.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, all right, I will pass from that.

Mr. Chairman: That is not on vote 2001; that is a federal matter.

Mr. Newman: That is quite all right, but the representation made by the city of Windsor was to the provincial government so that they could impress upon the federal government the importance of the matter.

Mr. Chairman: Order. This is not on vote 2001, this is definitely a federal matter.

Mr. Newman: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman; I will go to another item then, and that is the idea of a Canada-wide insurance card. We all understand and realize the fact that an Ontario motorist, failing to produce a separate insurance card while in the provinces of Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia in the event of an accident, could possibly have his vehicle impounded.

Now the Canadian Automobile Association recommends that the provincial authorities co-operate with the other provinces in establishing this type of an insurance card system. In fact, the Ontario Chamber of Commerce—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Might I tell the hon. member that I recognize the problem he is raising. There is some merit in it and we have been working on it for some many weeks back, to try to achieve some order and simplification of this problem as it now exists. It requires bringing into agreement some ten different provincial authorities, and some other related problems. But we are working actively at it and I had a meeting as recently as this week on the subject and will have another one on Wednesday of next week.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, how am I to know that the hon. Minister is actually working on it? Had I known that, I probably would not have brought this up at this time.

However, I would still like to mention to him that the Ontario Chamber of Commerce, in their policy committee meeting, did recommend that the government make representations to other provincial governments in order to reach an agreement which would provide for a single, all-Canada liability card.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I had some questions of the hon. Minister with respect to this particular vote. One of them deals with the annual report—the last one I have available—and the participation which The Department of Transport takes in the Emergency Measures Organization. Would the hon. Minister tell us how much of the money in this budget is directed towards this operation? How many personnel are involved in this? And maybe a little bit about how The Department of Transport participates?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The Department of Transport participates very actively in that programme. We are not a spending authority in that connection and as I understand it the Emergency Measures Organization is now attached to the department of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) and any budgetary allowances will come from that source. We do provide personnel and we have personnel who receive part of their remuneration from the Emergency Measures Organization, two people. Our officials are active in the EMO, as it is called, in the spheres where their knowledge and talents may best be utilized.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, may I proceed with my questions on this estimate? I note under the breakdown of organizations which is shown in the annual report a legal branch. I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell me how many personnel make up that branch and if he would advise us as to the cost of the legal branch operation.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The legal branch as presently constituted—and I use that phrase advisedly, having in mind some other matters we discussed earlier today—as presently constituted consists of two barristers and solicitors and one secretary; permanent and temporary staff of three, involving salaries and a small allowance for travelling expenses and actually a minimal—and I think that is the only word I can use—minimal allowance for maintenance and operating.

In summary, the salaries are $20,100, including the provision for the normal civil service increases; travelling expenses of $250, maintenance operating of $500; for a total item chargeable to this vote of $20,850.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: In checking through the public accounts I noted that they showed several thousand higher than what is given for fees, assuming that they are legal fees. Are there legal fees as well? In other words, how much does the department spend in outside legal aid?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member heard the debate which went on earlier today, that while under the fund in essence the payments out are made by Transport as of this moment, the legal work has been done by another department of government and that other department of government from time to time retains outside agents and pays them fees. I would say they would largely be attributable—if they are under our public accounts of Transport—they would have to with the fund as we know it.

In addition to that, for instance for the coming year, we estimate payments under item six to agent solicitors, $55,500; and medical examinations of $8,000; credit reports $10,000; settlement committee allowance of $3,000. The work of that committee, the hon. member may know, has been invaluable to us. A group of outside experts offer advice to the department or the solicitors as to the efficiency or merits of any of the quantum involved.

I would like to mention those three gentlemen, Messrs. Cameron Mitchinson, Hugh Gilchrist and Fred Cox. These men have worked diligently and faithfully for a token honorarium. This has been of great help to the work of the government.

There is a miscellaneous allowance of $8,500, making a total of $85,000.

Mr. Bryden: Which item is that, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That would be zero four, item six.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, the reason I asked the question: I am wondering whether or not we would not save money by having our own legal department do this work. It seems to me that when we engage these outside firms we pay for overhead, we pay for advice, which should be available in our own departments. The hon. Minister has mentioned that part of this work is done by another department of government.

This is one of the things that I was speaking of this afternoon; I think there could be savings by reorganization of this particular field. I think we should endeavour to do this. I do not think it should be necessary to engage several outside firms because I think we are paying for overhead that we need not necessarily pay for.

Mr. Chairman, I will use the floor if I might, I have some more questions on this vote. Last year I asked the hon. Minister several questions with respect to the payments from the unsatisfied judgment fund. I wonder if he could tell us for instance: out of the payments that have been made, what percentage is the amount paid out to the entire amount of the judgment? Are there any figures to indicate to the House the amount of judgment which was not payable because they were in excess of the limits of the fund? Thirdly, arising out of that, what I am trying to find out is how much it would cost in additional payments to that fund in order to pay the entire amount of judgments rather than the limits that there have been in the past? I think last year the hon. Minister told me he would be able to answer after the select committee brought in a report.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes. I will try to answer the question in this way.

I cannot give the hon. member the exact figures at the moment, but they will certainly be available for the debate on the bill in connection with the accident fund. There is a direct relationship between any new limits that might be established with respect to the fund and the number of, shall we call them, uninsured owners or participants in the fund.

This leads on to the activity of this legal department and the various points the hon. member has raised, these have a very direct interconnection each with the other. They are all being taken into account with respect to the new legislation which will be brought in. Increasing the limits of the fund—which obviously we are going to do, there is no secret to that—is designed, as recommended by the committee, to take care of that situation and to reduce it to as low a degree as possible.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I think that is quite acceptable. I would like to see those figures. If they will be presented at the introduction of the bill, then I think that will give us the same information.

There were a couple of reports on surveys which I brought up last year, which had been conducted by the department of the hon. Minister; one had to do with the accident ratio of drivers with different backgrounds; the other had to do with a study. I think the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts)—then the hon. Minister of Education—made a comment about a road survey which would be available to us. It was not just quite clear, but I understood that it dealt with the effect of various vehicles on the road and what they were doing to the road. I wonder if the hon. Minister could give us any further information on that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think the study report the hon. member is referring to had to do with the tri-axle matter which we discussed last year, and at that time I referred to the survey being made in Illinois. It was called ASHO, the Association of State Highway Officials, having to do with roadbeds and various standards of road construction and the effects of various loads and axle bearings and differentials of that sort. That report from ASHO has not been handed down as yet.

I must say that the tri-axle deal we dealt with last year has worked fine.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, I am very pleased that it has. I raised the matter last year simply because I had had representation from those who thought that it would not. But the report I refer to is the one by the hon. Prime Minister, the statement that he made when dealing with these. I think it was on page 972. I have not got the page but it was a statement by the hon. Prime Minister that the department was conducting an extensive survey into the recommendations—I think it had to do with the financing of the roads as well—which would be forthcoming, and that the results in the report would be available to us. I can look that up.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am instructed that possibly the matter to which the hon. member is referring is a study by Professor MacDonald of the University of Toronto in connection with personal behaviour insofar as accidents are concerned and having to do with the sources and causes of accidents. That report has come in this week in one single copy and I have not seen that report nor did I know that it had been received. There is no reason why it cannot be mimeographed and tabled right away. And I would be glad to do that.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Would the hon. Minister advise us when we might expect to see this highway finance study, which has been mentioned for two or three years, and the report of the hon. Minister in this House?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I take it the hon. member is referring to the one having to do with distributing highway costs among users or adjacent property owners and the population generally, and industry, and municipalities? That study is going on. As a matter of fact, it is a very active matter and is occupying the attention of The Department of Highways engineering and research division as well as almost the entire time of our own transport research division.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, did the hon. Minister say it would be available to us and did he say when?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It has not been finalized, but I would be happy during the course of the debate in the next few days—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Does the hon. Minister expect it will be finalized within the next few months?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I doubt it very much, and I have some knowledge of the material that they are gathering and the involvements of the statistics which are being secured. I doubt if that report could possibly be completed, with the subject matter that has to be correlated, before the end of the year.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I have just a couple more questions. With respect to the survey which was conducted, I asked last year if it would be made available. I think it had to do with a survey which was made to determine whether or not the various propaganda of the department and the methods of sending it out were the most effective. The reason I wish to ask the question is because I know somewhere in the public accounts there were some many thousands of dollars paid out to some of the advertising firms. I wondered if these payments were in accordance with the recommendation of this survey? I wondered if this was part of this whole programme.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Before answering the question, is the hon. member referring to the fact study survey having to do with the distribution or dissemination of information from The Department of Transport to the public?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I can look the matter up in last year's Hansard and explain definitely, but as I understand it, it was a survey which was conducted by the department, and the hon. Minister and I had a difference of opinion. I asked the hon. Minister if it would be made available to the hon. members and after questions back and forth, he said that he would take it under advisement. I think it was a study which was to determine whether or not the method of getting the information out to the public was a satisfactory one.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I recall that situation and I would be pleased to speak on it. Our research branch did a study in connection with drivers' opinions of Ontario's highway safety propaganda and the demerit point system. The study had to do with a sample survey of Ontario licensed drivers with two main objects: the first was to gauge indirectly the effectiveness of the safety propaganda carried out by the highway safety branch. To this end drivers' opinions, and so on, and the relative efficiency of the various propaganda media were obtained. The second object was to discover motorists' understanding and opinions of the driver demerit system introduced April 1, 1959. We secured the assistance of an organization called Canadian Facts Limited. They have had a considerable amount of experience in acquiring this type of information and assisted in the correlation of the answers secured.

Now, I must say, Mr. Chairman, that we are having to feel our way in the work that our safety branch is doing, whether it be through volunteer organizations, safety councils, chambers of commerce, schools, or indeed children in kindergartens and nursing schools. We are constantly trying to assess and appraise the effectiveness of our own work because, frankly, there are not enough hours in the day to do many of the things that we would like to do. And so there is a genuine interest on the part of our safety branch to try to adopt the most effective means of communication on one hand and to drop those ideas or methods of promotion which appear not to be producing the best results.

This is a matter that is constantly before the Deputy Minister, and we have a committee within our own department on publications which deals with this matter and acts as a check balance on the subject.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Is the hon. Minister tabling a copy in the House, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is no secret about it. I had not intended to.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, before we leave the main office estimate, the hon. Minister, on a number of occasions, has referred to his research department or staff. Unless it escapes me, I cannot see any specific reference to research as an estimate, or as a vote. May I ask what size of a research group has he within the department, and secondly, is this group large enough to proceed with that area of research that I dealt with in my introductory comments this afternoon, and is he planning to do so in the next year?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The research group, as you indicated earlier, was one of the foundations around which the new department was formed. At the present time, it consists of some 14 staff members, including permanent and temporary staff. There is a seasonal casual staff, that we would like to provide for, of five.

Now this group, at the moment, as I said a few moments ago, is deeply involved with this study of highways finance and that is a pretty important subject. But this group also does engineering research. We have qualified engineers and we work—quite frankly, I do not think it is proper for me to indicate and name the project. I might tell the House and the hon. members that this division and branch works with The Treasury Department to evolve methods of seeing that we collect the appropriate fuel tax in connection with vehicles and trucks. We have some very, not just interesting but important, developments from that side.

In addition to this, the branch is headed by highly qualified economists. Part of their direct duties for the department are to keep the department informed of all developments in other jurisdictions of every nature and kind insofar as transport is concerned, to see how those innovations or changes are working out and to keep in touch with the officials of the other provinces in Canada; particularly with respect to certain matters where Ontario may appear to be in a bit of a squeeze.

I have reference to the supervision of commercial trucking by our neighbourhood provinces on either side and our neighbours to the south of us. They have highly developed systems of rate regulation in connection with truck rates and I think at one point earlier in this debate the hon. member made at least an oblique reference to—at least the hon. member for York South did—he made an oblique reference to this general area. We are trying to keep constantly abreast of exactly what this situation is and how the shippers and the carriers in Ontario are being affected by our Ontario law as it presently exists, and by the impact of the influence from Quebec on the east, Manitoba on the west and the United States and the interstate commerce commission on the south. This is a very important matter, and it has greater significance at this particular time in view of the recent publication of volume 2 of the McPherson report and particularly Professor Curry's comments as well.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask, Mr. Chairman, one further question? Has the government completely dropped the unanimous recommendation of the toll-roads committee with regard to weight-distance tax, or is it part of this whole highways finance study that the government is now engaged in?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, on the question of a weight-distance tax, there is nothing new about it. I am going to come right out and tell the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) that I think it is the most just way of charging the shipping public, or the trucking or shipping industries, with respect to the use of the roads and highways in any jurisdiction that could be found.

Mr. MacDonald: It was unanimously recommended by the committee!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, and I say to the hon. member that I agree with it. But the thing that holds us back is the cost of administration. I might tell the hon. member that this whole subject is constantly before me as Minister through this research branch which keeps in close touch, particularly with the State of New York, on its cost of administration—I think it is New York State—and what variables or efficiencies they have been able to work out. That is not a dead issue. It is one of these things that is before me as the Minister every week.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to follow up on the particular point with which the hon. Minister was dealing. I would judge from what he said as to the activities of his research branch that they are pre-occupied in the main with problems relating to revenues to be raised from motor vehicles in the province and more effective and more efficient, and perhaps fair, systems of raising revenue. I would judge further that those very important activities in which they are now engaged would leave them little, if any, time to deal with some of the broader questions raised by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), that is the whole question of studying more efficient ways of providing transportation within the province—transportation in its broadest sense. The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards), this afternoon suggested that the department should be abolished, I must say that I disagree with him entirely. I think it—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I suggested that it be abolished, but I did not suggest that the work of the department should be abolished.

Mr. Bryden: Well he suggested—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I object to hon. members on my left taking it out of context. We are not on both sides of the issue at all.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. gentleman need not get himself into such a flap. He suggested that the department be abolished. I certainly assume—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I must say there are times when I think the New Party has a lot of sense in what it says.

Mr. Bryden: I assumed that he intended that the functions should be distributed. But I would suggest that on the contrary, in my opinion, the activities of the department should be greatly expanded. I am not in favour of the abolition at all. I think it is very false economy to save a few thousand dollars in administration on the one hand and involve oneself and the industry of the province in perhaps millions and millions of dollars of expenditure because of inefficient transportation.

The hon. Minister has said that he thinks we have a good idea. I would merely like to ask him if he thinks there is any possibility that some considerable amount of the energy of the department could be devoted to considering this matter in the coming year.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think in all fairness to the suggestion it has merits and, quite frankly, we will look into this situation with a view to advancing that suggestion.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, there is one matter I would like to bring before the House and that is the case where a person gets into an accident and through really no fault of his own has a judgment against him. In this particular case the—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Does this have to do with the unsatisfied judgment fund?

Mr. Chapple: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We are not talking about it any more tonight. We are on the votes, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chapple: We are on vote 2001, under which I understood we could talk about the unsatisfied judgment fund, so I figured that perhaps I could—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think it might be better if we deferred it until we get to the legislation surrounding the fund and then we will be armed and will give the hon. members a full debate on it.

Mr. Chapple: This has to do not only with fund, but with the department of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) as well and—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I cannot answer for him, and I think the Chairman should rule as I have requested.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I, too, was of the opinion that we had not passed beyond the general introductory comments with respect to the first vote. And I would like to make a few brief comments. I will make them as briefly as I can, and support the position that my colleague, the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards), made this afternoon. I thought he made a wonderful exposition of the position that he took and did it very intelligently and understandably. I think he took the position that this was not a personal attack.

But I say to the hon. Minister that all you have to do is take these estimates, and you can see at once that the position of my hon. friends to the left is wholly untenable. There is nothing in these estimates but that which relates to highways. We say now, and we have said for the last several years, that this department—and I hope the hon. Minister understands me; I am taking the same position as my hon. friend did and not relating this personally to him—as a matter of policy, has been wholly unimaginative. It has not seized the opportunity that exists in Ontario to take advantage of air travel, water travel, road travel and commuter and train travel in the province of Ontario, and co-ordinate them as a unit.

What we are saying is this. We are spending money for purposes that were being handled by The Department of Highways and The Department of the Attorney-General before. These votes introduce nothing new whatsoever. The other departments were doing exactly this. There is no demonstration that a new and imaginative programme has been enunciated or is being undertaken. And it is because of that that we say, in all truth, that it is time to call a halt. We would like an imaginative programme undertaken; we would support one, but we do say that there is no evidence here, and therein is where I quarrel with my hon. friends to the left.

Mr. Chairman, reference was made to a meeting with the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Frost) a year ago or two years ago. I think I am free to say exactly what took place at that meeting. Mr. Donald Gordon made a very simple proposition—and a very hardheaded businessman he was in making it—that what you require here in Ontario, particularly in the Metro area in respect to urban or urbanite transportation, commuter service in this area, is a hardheaded transport czar.

Now, make no mistake about it, you have to co-ordinate taxis, buses, underground travel, subways and your train transportation within a radius of 100 miles of Toronto. This is where the provincial government can take a lead. And let no one tell me that this is a federal matter any more than they can tell me that travel by water is a federal matter. The most prominent authorities in this land contend that the water problem has not been solved; and one of the things that the department could do would be to determine what responsibility, what authority the provincial government has in respect to travel. It has not been solved at all and The British North America Act has not been effectively tested in accordance with the land.

I am simply saying this, Mr. Chairman, to those who placidly say—and the hon. members to the left did say it—it is federal in authority. The simple fact, Mr. Chairman, is that this very important matter has never been effectively tested in the courts and I suggest to you that there are cases in the courts now that may result in revolutionary ideas in respect to these problems. But we in this Legislature should take the initiative and I suggest to the hon. Minister that he use his authority and his influence to bring to the attention of the courts some of these problems in respect to waterways.

But now let me get to commuter problems. It seems to me—

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister without Portfolio): Does the hon. leader of the Opposition want to state a case?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, a stated case or whatever, sir, to the courts, to settle on some of these problems. I think Mr. Justice Gale, for example, is vitally interested in this very problem right now in respect to Lake Huron. And there are others who feel very strongly that this problem has never been effectively determined. I think we should, because we are going to have to meet it some day.

Now in respect to commuter service, I suggest to you that within 25 years there will be an effective co-ordination of all our commuting services within a radius of 100 miles of all Metropolitan Toronto. Now, that is not a federal matter. I suggest to you that the railway companies—both railroad companies—would co-ordinate and co-operate with the department of the hon. Minister. Mr. Gordon said so in the meeting that was referred to.

He would rent lines to you for given periods of the day. He would rent equipment; but he wants somebody in charge. He does not want a multitude of people exercising a multitude of different ideas. This is good business and this is hardheadedness, but this is what Ontario needs today. And this is what we expect of this department. Let it step a little bit into the unknown; let it go beyond the conventional; let it do the thing that is foreseeable in the course of the next 25 years. Let it begin now. The department as it is functioning now is nothing more than an administration extension of The Department of the Attorney-General and The Department of Highways.

I have the greatest of confidence in the hon. Minister as an administrator. He is doing as good a job as anyone can do, but I suggest to him that the government has not given him the authority, the encouragement and the go-ahead that it should, because what we want—and what the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards) wanted and said explicitly this afternoon—is that this department be used in an imaginative way to do the job of co-ordinating all the facilities of transportation that are required over the period of the next quarter of a century. And it is not being done, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Now who said this was not being done? The only thing the hon. leader of the Opposition makes me think of is this—that old maxim that you cannot approbate and reprobate at the same time.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, now, Mr. Chairman, I say this: It was Galbraith, I think, who created the phrase, “work fast”. He said: “Legislators and politicians are inclined to make a statement, suggest a proposition and interpret it to be fact.” What the hon. member has said is not going to make regional planning come into being. What my hon. friend to my left has said is, research will not do this job; my gosh, we have had enough research. But we have all the facts necessary now to make some constructive decisions and it is the hon. Minister who has the responsibility at this particular juncture to do the hardheaded decision-making judgment.

Mr. Chairman, we want action; we do not want any more research. Certainly a limited amount of research is required but we have the facts. We have enough information. We have enough information to start to take the positive step that will do something about co-ordinating all the facilities of transportation that I mentioned.

And, Mr. Chairman, with that thought I heartily endorse what was said earlier by my good friend, the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. R. C. Edwards), and I reject the proposition that we would destroy the concept that I have tried to enunciate here. We are for it, and we are going to bring it into being, but it will not be brought into being by using this department as an adjunct of The Department of the Attorney-General and The Department of Highways. The simple fact is that Parkinson's law is applicable in these instances. If we permit the hon. Minister to go on and do a good administrative job of highway zoning, then we are denying his ingenuity and denying him the opportunity to exercise the type of leadership that the people of Ontario are looking for in this particular department at this time.

Mr. Bryden: It is not entirely clear to me how the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) expects that the department's functions will be expanded when the department is abolished. That escapes me entirely.

We have been taking the position that the department functions should be greatly expanded into a new area. I take it that the hon. leader of the Opposition has come around to our point of view. Even though he hates to admit it, I am glad to see that he is now supporting it. I would suggest to him, however, that it is by no means as simple as he suggests.

One of our great troubles, both in the metropolitan area and beyond the metropolitan area, is that we have no co-ordinated plan of transportation, and I think it is high time that we had one. I will not, Mr. Chairman, dwell on that particular point because I have had for some time a resolution on the order paper dealing with this subject. I am always an optimistic type, I always hope that perhaps some day the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) may call that resolution for debate and I will discuss it more fully then.

However, I am happy to note that the hon. leader of the Opposition, even though he does not seem to fully realize it, is now coming around to what I think is the constructive approach to the work of this department, which is, namely, to expand it into a very important, indeed, an all-important, new field.

There is one question I would like to ask, Mr. Chairman. May I ask which vote covers the question of control of vehicle noise? Does that come under the vote we are now dealing with, or does it come under some subsequent vote?

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say a few words about the talk of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) a moment ago. He seemed to me like a young man in a great hurry.

Now when we consider this Department of Transport and the time that it has been operating—four years—and what it has accomplished, I think that it is another indication of the way this government gets things done. As we go along these highways, Mr. Chairman, and see the tremendous advances in vehicle safety; the way there has been driver control brought in, 97.5 per cent of the motorists in this province now carry insurance—actually the hon. Minister will find it is almost 100 per cent, I imagine—all these different things have been done, Mr. Chairman, in four short years; a department raised and safety brought to a high standard.

Now, just leave it to this government, Mr. Chairman. Hon. members will find that probably what they are suggesting tonight to be done all at once—get the airplanes and the boats and the cars and everything else all into one pot—Mr. Chairman, I would say that is ridiculous talk. It is emblematic of what the Opposition at times say. They know they will never have any authority to do it, so they can say it.

I wish to compliment the hon. Minister and his staff on the tremendous strides that have been made in this field in the last four years. Many things have not been brought out tonight. I come from an area where they are drawing 70 and 80 foot long tiling on these highways. There are many safety factors of that kind that the hon. Minister and his department have to correct. In every instance they have made it possible for operations to be carried on that ordinarily, under The Department of Highways probably, would not be possible.

This is a department that is making great strides. It is making a great impact on the safety record of this province.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to add those few remarks after that very great speech that the hon. leader of the Opposition made about getting everything in at one time. Do not forget, Mr. Chairman, that they are not kidding the public a bit in talking about these great things and doing them. We will do them properly as they come up, one by one.

I wish to compliment the hon. Minister and his staff very highly on this report he has brought in. I think we have debated it enough in foolish terms. Now let us get on with the business and get the estimates through.

Vote 2001 agreed to.

On vote 2002:

Mr. Bryden: Is the hon. Minister prepared to answer the procedural question I asked a moment ago as to what vote the question of noise comes under? With these children over here, Mr. Chairman, I cannot hear what the hon. Minister says.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: My answer to the question is that it does not necessarily come under any vote. The Act itself provides for any municipal anti-noise by-laws to receive the approval of the department.

With respect to the report of that committee which was tabled yesterday, I have already assured the hon. members that there will be adequate opportunity to debate that subject at an appropriate time.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Under vote 2002, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he happens to know the number of hearings that were held by the Ontario transport board outside of the city of Toronto during the past year and in what centres?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I could probably get that information in a matter of a few moments. The report of the Ontario Highway Transport Board has been transmitted to the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) this morning, but he was engaged in other business and not in the House. It had been my hope that the report would have been tabled in the House before the orders of the day today.

The number of hearings generally runs around between 2,500 and 3,000 a year and they sit largely in Toronto, sometimes in two panels. On other occasions, according to the exigencies of the situation and the balance of convenience of the witnesses, the parties will attend and hold hearings in other parts of the province, including the lakehead, northwestern Ontario, western Ontario and so on.

Mr. Belanger: Thanks.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the hon. Minister happened to have noticed in the official publication of the automotive transport association an account of a recent bankruptcy that had or might have reference to the Ontario transport board. It was the bankruptcy of the Forins Transport Limited in St. Catharines. It apparently paid 9.3 cents on the dollar when it was declared bankrupt, but the condensed statement at the time of the bankruptcy, one quotation from it read as follows:

The company has no assets except for the operating licence which vests in the shareholders.

Then they go on to point out that very shortly afterwards there came before the transport board a request on behalf of one Gibscoe Transport Company for an interim PCV licence "for the haulage of trailers and their contents of Forins Transport Limited". Now the interesting thing is that the president of the bankrupt company was one J. K. Henry, and the new company that got the interim PCV licence, in effect to carry on the business of the bankrupt company with trailers that did not exist according to the statement when they declared their bankruptcy, is also one J. K. Henry, who is general manager of Inter-State Building Products, who in turn own and control Gibscoe Transport.

So we had a bankrupt company with a president and it had nothing to haul. But suddenly the Ontario transport board gives a licence to another company which is owned by the same man. Now the question they ask here, and I think quite rightly, is if, as the current president of Forins Transport Company, the company has not assets, whose trailers are Gibscoe hauling? And the concluding paragraph is:

Unfortunately, the Ontario trucking industry is plagued with too many 10-cent on the dollar deals. Some industry suppliers have cut out their fancy crediting. The government should take a real hard look at the current situation and refuse to approve sales or transfer of licences unless creditors are satisfied in full.

I want to ask the hon. Minister if he is aware of this particular instance, which was spelled out in the 88 obligation; to what extent it is a wider problem because, unwittingly or otherwise, the transport board is an accomplice in permitting the continuation of the business of a company which has declared itself bankrupt and unloaded its debts on the creditors.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, the point that the hon. member for York South has raised is a very important one and is one that concerns me very much.

In answering this question, may I divide my answer into two parts: First, the situation where a bankruptcy occurs of some individual or limited company which holds a PCV authority, which is a valuable asset. Now let us assume the situation where a buyer comes along and offers to buy the licence from the trustee. The position I am trying to establish for part one of my answer is that the sale of the assets of the bankrupt company, including the licences is, as far as we know, at arm's length to some purchaser.

Now in that situation, the policy has been that the purchaser should have every opportunity of acquiring that licence and having it transferred to him. The reason for that is that it is probably the largest asset that the bankrupt company has, and will provide the greatest proceeds to satisfy the creditors. It is not the bankrupt owner that we are concerned about. It is those creditors who might only get nine cents apiece. Now nine cents is a pretty low figure, but not unusual in a bankruptcy, and you have to look closely at the facts and see just what gave rise to the situation, and so on. But we are concerned with the position of creditors, and while I do not know the details of that particular instance, I do know that I have referred two similar cases, where companies got into financial trouble—I have referred, in my capacity as Minister both instances back to the board for a re-hearing and a review when the facts could be put on the table.

Now, coming to part two of the question. As to any bankrupt operator—and this is my view as Minister—as to any bankrupt operator going into bankruptcy and then coming along under another name and buying out at a few cents on the dollar, it is immoral, improper, and I do not intend to countenance it. I shall look at the legislation immediately. This was the subject of a discussion at a meeting with the chairman of the board yesterday. That is the principle in this case, and if the legislation needs to be remedied, to implement the type of policy that I have stated I believe in, it will be done at this session.

Vote 2002 agreed to.

On vote 2003:

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on this vote, there are a couple of points that I raised last year in which reading through Hansard, page 955, we did not seem to get too far and I think they are worthy of repetition.

Perhaps as an introduction to these I may say this. I am sure that the hon. Minister is aware of the rather unique record in highway safety that was achieved by the former governor of the state of Connecticut. It was a record that was probably without parallel in highway safety in the whole of the North American continent. It was recognized by the voters of the state of Connecticut and subsequently recognized by President Kennedy when he accepted the governor's eminent qualifications and elevated him to an important post in his cabinet.

Now it seems to me as I have studied what they did in Connecticut, that the secret of their success was strict, impartial and frequent enforcement, and it is my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that what we lack—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Almost unreasonable enforcement in the case of Connecticut.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister will have a chance to reply after I am finished.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, but in the spirit in which we are talking, you could have your licence suspended there for one single conviction of speeding.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I think this is something that the hon. Minister may consider to be unreasonable. However, the fact is that the voters of the state of Connecticut did not consider it to be unreasonable. In fact, after the governor had had his first term in office, he was elected by what political observers down there called for the first time a political fluke. He went back and sought re-election, and was re-elected by the greatest majority that any governor of Connecticut was ever given.

An hon. member: On the one issue?

Mr. Singer: On the two issues. This issue and building more highways. The two of them together, and this also was reflected in the accident statistics in the state of Connecticut. It may be that the hon. Minister considers it unreasonable, but it had two effects. One was that it was politically successful, which is the one that many of us look to as an important one—many members of the House. And the other thing was that it reduced the incidence of accidents and deaths and injuries, and this is a most important thing.

Now I do not think that what was done in Connecticut was unreasonable. I think that it was a great step forward and along these lines, I wanted to get the hon. Minister's idea about what has been talked about in the press for the last few days. Does he propose to relax the disqualifications under the points system? There was a newspaper story. It was not really attributed to anybody. It seemed like a sort of flyer, but the hon. Minister is the one who can tell us. Is it proposed to relax the disqualification of people like travelling salesmen from three months to one month? Perhaps we could deal with that one first.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, before we deal with that, let me say to the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) that when he refers to the governor of Connecticut, I would like it made amply clear that I neither intend nor desire, nor will seek to run for the office of governor of Ontario. But—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, it was a very interesting thing. One of the things that happened to our party last fall has made us stronger than ever.

Mr. Singer: Has the hon. Minister looked at those by-election figures recently?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Now there are several things to look at when one refers to Connecticut. Everything is relative and has to be taken in its right perspective.

First, Connecticut is a relatively small state, an area in which the supervision and administration required is substantially different from conditions which generally exist in Ontario. I am not saying they are impossible, I do not say that at all, because I will agree with the hon. member in his remarks that there is no absolute answer to these questions. We have to discuss them rationally and take all factors into account, in trying to achieve the result which I think all of us in this House want to achieve, and that is an improvement in the accident picture.

Now let me make it abundantly clear to the House that the reason that the merit point system was reviewed during last summer and fall was because it had been in operation, as of last April 30—that is April 30, 1961—for two years, and that was the first period against which we felt sufficient statistics had been gathered on which to base a reasonable or intelligent conclusion.

Now, it is not my intention to do anything that will weaken the demerit point system because it has worked very well. In fact, it is going to be toughened up with respect to two types of offenders, namely, those driving while under suspension and hit-and-run drivers. The penalties for those offences are going to be increased.

To make the system work—and I think I might take a few minutes and just deal with this, because there is no secret about what I propose to do—there are going to be offences that might vary. We can only deal in multiples of one, and where the ratio of importance appears to us really at 2.5 or 2 or something like that—I do not know, but that could be. But, in any event, it would appear to us that the letter at six points and the interview at nine has had a very salutary effect on those involved.

But some of them accumulate these points at too rapid a pace and the time left after they have had the letter and/or the interview is not sufficient at 12 points for them to benefit from the lesson they have learned. And it may be that perhaps the points total should be increased to 15, with a general increase of some of the other offences by one point in some instances—the total would be 15—and with a tightening up in the other areas, to which I have referred.

We are talking about suspension arising from accumulation of points. There is another serious group which I regard as the knock-out group, the charges and suspensions of which are automatic arising from motor manslaughter, dangerous driving, drunk driving, impaired, and matters in that serious category. Now for that group I have no sympathy whatever, none whatever. But for those whose licences are suspended where those serious offences have not been involved and where there has been no liquor involved, for those other suspensions arising from an accumulation of points, I think we have to take a hard look at what the consequences are arising from the three months' suspension.

The consequences would appear to be these, and if the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and his hon. colleagues wonder what we do with our time, I spent a considerable amount of my own personal time this past year on this very subject. It would appear that the hardship from a three-months' suspension arises in this fashion, that it is not the offender who is affected but it is his wife and children. The average employer will find alternate employment for a period of one month, but in the case of three months it is too long a period and in too frequent and too many instances the offender loses his source of employment. The real victims of that catastrophe are the wives and children who are involved.

I have not come to a conclusion about this and I am simply answering a question raised by my hon. friend. I do not want to precipitate a debate on this because I have not come to an absolute conclusion on this as yet myself. But I want to be fair and tell hon. members what is in my mind.

Where there is no liquor involved and where those serious offences are not involved and where the driving of a vehicle is required to earn a living and where a wife and children may be involved, maybe the three months is too long in that circumstance. I do not think that that would constitute a weakness of the point system.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I cannot quarrel with the hon. Minister when he says he is having a very careful look at all these circumstances. I think that is most important and most appropriate. But I do think that if the time has come for the changing of these regulations for the considerations that the hon. Minister has outlined, that there should be great care exercised in making sure that one person is not treated in one way or another in a different way, that he make fish of one and fowl of another.

In other words, it may be that in the less serious category a three months' suspension across the board is too much, that perhaps it should only be one month, that the one month would be effective. But I think very great care, extreme caution, should be exercised in saying that in the group that are going to be suspended, be it one month or three, that because one happens to be involved in driving his car as part of his employment, that he should be treated differently from somebody else who has done the same thing.

I think if we categorize the offences rather than the persons that it would be fairer, because I think there is a very serious danger in that once we start making exceptions that the line between the exceptions is very hard to draw.

How do we know that "A" needs it for one month, and "B" should have it for three? I have no objection, and I am sure if the hon. Minister comes down with a reasonable differentiation between categories of offences and they apply to all people who fit in those categories, I do not think he is going to hear very many complaints from those of us on this side. But I think there will be—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is the problem that is giving me trouble right now.

Mr. Singer: But I do think it is most important that, once the categories have been established, all people who come within those categories be treated in the same manner.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to refer to two other subjects. One was the subject, as I said, that I dealt with last year, and that was the question of compulsory vehicle inspection. Since the debate of the first estimate of the hon. Minister, he and I and a number of hon. members of the highway committee journeyed to the inspection centre on Highway 401. Interestingly enough, neither the hon. Minister's car nor my car got through the inspection line and got a stamp of approval. These were two cars of comparatively recent vintage, but they showed minor defects in both our vehicles. I only say this by way of indication that there are many cars on the road, that there must be thousands of cars on the road, that have defects; many of them much more serious than the defects that were discovered in the hon. Minister's car or my car. This brings me back to the statistics which I quoted—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I wish the hon. member would not say that too loudly, I am trying to sell it.

Mr. Singer: Well, I am sure the hon. Minister has had it fixed since that time.

The statistics that I quoted last year indicated, I thought to some reasonable extent, the incidence of accidents that took place because of defects in the vehicles. The hon. Minister will remember that I quoted statistics from the city of Vancouver which indicated some of the results of compulsory vehicle inspection. Might I then ask the hon. Minister if there are any plans to make vehicle inspection compulsory or to expand on what is presently available through inspections provided by his department?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The answer to that question is that we do have a major programme being lined up, to which I made reference this afternoon, when we will have five mobile units manned by teams travelling across the province working with municipalities and local safety councils. It will not be on a compulsory basis, but it will be on a voluntary basis.

We hope to make the visit of these units to the various centres and municipalities the occasion of Safety Week. This will commence as soon as the snow and ice is off the road and people can walk around and stand around without being in zero weather and, Easter being late this year, immediately after Easter they will probably be on the road.

Depending on the response that we get from that programme this summer, particularly by the time we sit next fall, we should certainly have had sufficient experience to determine the next step in this programme. I agree, quite frankly, that vehicle inspection is of major significance in any safety programme, but we have a practical problem.

Rome was not built in a day. I cannot build buildings in every town and so on across the province. But if I can get sufficient support and a reasonable support from the public, then it puts me in a good position to advance the programme and go to the Treasury Board for the hon. member knows what.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am most impressed with many of the things the hon. Minister has been saying today. This marks for me a real departure from some of the things we have heard in other departments. I believe what the hon. Minister says when he says that he has a sincere belief in the importance of vehicle safety and that he is prepared, as a result of these new steps, to look very seriously at the question of compulsory vehicle inspection.

There cannot be any quarrel with the results that have been achieved in the city of Vancouver as a result of compulsory vehicle inspection. It is not something that can be set up over-night, but I accept, with great pleasure, the hon. Minister's assurance that they are going to expand the programme they presently have and over the summer, or in the fall, have another very careful look at it. Next year we will have another little talk about it, perhaps in these estimates.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is one point that I have overlooked which is also significant. That is that we could extend vehicle inspection on a compulsory basis right now on a selective grouping. I omitted to refer to that, and it might be that all vehicles over a certain vintage could not be registered without there being a safe certificate in the owner's possession. We have a grouping now, as you know, with respect to school buses. That school bus programme had more significance to us, and was more important than the public knew because it was out of that school bus compulsory examination that we gained the experience and trained our staff to go on with what the hon. member and I are talking about today.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, to be absolutely fair, the school bus compulsory inspection was brought about by a tragedy, and I hope that it is not necessary that we have another series of tragedies to get really down to the basics in this matter.

The third point that I wanted to raise, Mr. Chairman, was this, and it was another point that I dealt with last year relating to the compulsory testing of drivers. As the hon. Minister knows, there are categories where there is compulsory testing. The hon. Minister's predecessor used to announce from time to time that a new system of licensing was going to come in. We were going to get licences issued on the birthday anniversary of the person who was getting the licence. This was to give opportunities for more careful examination of the licences as they went out; more orderly procedure in the department and more opportunities to check. The results of tests of applicants for driving licences, the figures as I would call them, are that one in three fails in the tests. I do not know how closely that can be related to those presently driving on the road, whether one in three is capable or incapable. I suggest to the hon. Minister that there are not any such statistics available, and that the only way that there might be some available is if there is some compulsory and periodic check. I do not think it is reasonable to suggest that every driver be re-examined every year, but as I mentioned last year, perhaps once every five years in an orderly rotary system. I think that this would do a great deal for improving the calibre of drivers, and for cutting down on what we all abhor, this great accident toll.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is quite right. There have been numerous statements about the question of the renewal of licences on the anniversary of one's birthday at three-year intervals. In fact I have made that statement myself on many occasions. It may be of interest to the hon. member and he must understand that we have 2.3 million drivers in the province, with over 2 million registered owners and just under a million transfers of ownership or changes of address. We have substantially over five million individual entries and the department has reached the limit of its manual capacity.

This means that to keep our record system up to date and to provide for the future we must go into the machine business. From those machines will come the information—when you punch the right button—which will bring down the people who require this re-examination at such interval as may be determined at the time it is initiated.

We could not get that going last year, so it was talk, but in this year's plan we propose to spend, in Transport, $270,000 in mechanizing the department. We are already, we hope, getting under way to prepare for the transposition of the information from each of those 4.3 million onto cards which can be digested by these machines. It will take about a year and a quarter to accomplish this and it would appear that the system which we both agree upon is desirable and will become effective. I am not stating the interval of re-examination, but that will become effective in January of 1964.

Mr. Singer: And this will be compulsory for all drivers over certain intervals?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There will be a transition period. By that time I hope I am still here and I will be trying to do the best job I can.

Mr. L. Quilty (Renfrew South): Mr. Chairman, in keeping with the hon. Minister's opening remarks, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has issued orders that safety belts would be installed in all departmental vehicles. I first of all want to commend the hon. Prime Minister on this and I would like to state that in recent radio broadcasts, and in the papers, we have been told that many of the safety belts being offered for sale do not fulfill their purpose. Has the hon. Minister any standards that he would insist on for the departmental safety belts?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There are no standards set out at the moment, but if it is apparent that the public is being fleeced on a matter which involves human life, and accident potential, you may have my word that I shall take the appropriate steps to see that the promoters and entrepreneurs and dealers are not permitted to get away with it.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister there is already a substantial degree of evidence that many safety belts being put on the market today are less than adequate. One thing that is worse than no safety device is a safety device that does not work because it creates a false sense of confidence. But the Consumers' Union, at the suggestion of the division of special health services of the U.S. Public Health Service, conducted a study of safety belts commonly on the market in the United States—and much the same brand is on the market here. It published its results last October and I would like to draw these results to the attention of the hon. Minister. I may say that the Consumers' Union had in previous years conducted tests of safety belts but these tests were all what are called static tests. The Consumers' Union is not satisfied that they are sufficient and decided in its latest effort to conduct dynamic tests. In order to do this it had to go to Sweden to find suitable equipment, but it made an arrangement with the National Institute for Material Testing in Stockholm to test safety belts on the market in the United States.

One interesting fact that comes to light is that this Swedish agency was very reluctant to test any of the safety belts that the Consumers' Union put before it because it considered all of them to be unsatisfactory. In Sweden a safety belt is acceptable only if it has a shoulder or chest harness. The Consumers' Union states that the tests both in Sweden and in this country indicate that such belts, when properly made and installed, can give far more protection than a lap belt alone. So we start from the proposition that all or most of the devices that are now offered here are unsatisfactory to some degree.

But even eliminating that consideration and taking the lap belts, without any consideration of the basic inadequacy of all of them, the Consumers' Union submitted all that are commonly available in the United States to the dynamic test which was available with this Swedish equipment. It found a substantial number were totally unacceptable and a good many were not very good. And I may say, Mr. Chairman, that included in the belts that were considered quite unacceptable were some that were put out by the automobile companies; not in all cases or in many cases, but in some cases.

I think that this is particularly regrettable. As a matter of fact I purchased safety belts with the last car I got and I just assumed that the belts, made by the manufacturer himself, would be quite suitable. I found that the ones I got are so-so; they are not good, but they are better than some which the manufacturers are putting out.

Another problem is that different models of the same brand of belt can have greatly varying degrees of performance. Within the same general brand name, you have a range all the way from top standard, as far as American belts are concerned, right down to unacceptable, so that it is very confusing to the public to know exactly what sort of belt to buy.

One of the difficulties has been that until very recently the manufacturers all resisted the notion of having safety belts in cars. They have now accepted it. In fact, I believe that on the new models they have at least provided as standard equipment the fittings on which one installs belts.

However, they have resisted in the past and I think that one of the great problems that all administrations are up against in improving highway safety is the fact that manufacturers seem to be far more interested in spending money on ways and means of putting new fins or new pieces of chrome on cars or otherwise appealing to irrational consumer preferences, and very, very little on study of safety. If manufacturers would spend a fraction of the money on safety that they spend on some of these other things, I think problems of government administrators would be simplified.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Would it assist the hon. member if I say that apparently my own department is far ahead of the Minister in what it does from day to day? Apparently the department has already been in touch with the Canadian Standards Association with a view to establishing some acceptable standard which would lead to some marking device or some sort of arrangement which might very well have the whole solution to this problem.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I think perhaps that is a solution. Several states in the U.S., I believe, now require that belts sold to their residents must be able to pass the static test. As I understand it, California is the only one at the moment which requires a dynamic test which is, I believe, a much more satisfactory test. But I think it is imperative that at the very minimum the government should at the earliest possible date bring in regulations setting minimum standards for belts which will be permitted for sale in Ontario. I would feel that they should go further and require that belts meeting certain acceptable standards should be compulsory as standard equipment in all cars. Whether they are willing to go that far or not, I think at least they could protect the public, or that section of the public that wants to buy safety belts, by at least insuring that the belts on the market will serve the purpose for which they are designed.

One other matter I would like to inquire of the hon. Minister, and this may be the appropriate vote: Is his department giving any consideration to the problem of exhaust fumes emitted by motor vehicles? I believe that there are now suppressors that can help to reduce the incidence very greatly. The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), at an earlier stage in this sitting of the House, indicated that in his opinion exhaust fumes were an important factor in air pollution in cities.

Certainly there are other studies to that effect, and fumes may be an important factor in lung cancer and other diseases. I would think that it would be desirable, if even partially satisfactory devices have been discovered, to require manufacturers to install those devices on the exhausts as standard equipment.

I did start with a question and then a long explanation. Perhaps the hon. Minister may see fit to answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The department is keeping in close touch with various bodies which are conducting active research on this subject. At the moment, having in mind the reciprocal arrangements which exist with respect to motor vehicles in the various jurisdictions, the question of enforcement in any one isolated jurisdiction of any particular by-law raises some very serious complications and problems. We feel that sufficient research at the moment has not yet been done in other North American cities. nor are there enough cities on the continent—we have to think in terms of the continent—whereby any legislation could be enforced at this point. It is a matter that is before the department constantly and it could very well be that even if certain developments materialize that even next fall we might feel prepared to advance something which would be effective.

I am sure the hon. member will understand that legislation must not be enacted just for the sake of enactment; it must be good legislation, at least legislation in which we believe and legislation which has a fair chance of being reasonably enforced for the purpose for which it was enacted.

Mr. Belanger: On vote 2003, item No. 4, I remember the hon. Minister saying a little while ago that it was hard to assess the way they were spending the money for safety publicity. Now I would like to stress to the hon. Minister that last year I happened to be in the highway safety meeting and a film was shown which could be used in the schools. In fact I was interested in getting the film to be shown to about a thousand patrol boys from the city of Windsor as they were at that time having some gatherings where this could be done. It was enjoyed to quite an extent and was very beneficial. Unfortunately we could not keep the film for an extensive time because the department wanted it back.

I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister that if he has other types of safety films that could be used in schools, that perhaps if he were to send to the various schools a list of these films it would be quite a help to them. Very often we try to find out where we can possibly get some of these films to promote safety among school children and invariably we have to go to the United States.

If he would have a list of the films he does have, and also a list of films he knows can be found elsewhere in Ontario, this would be appreciated by the schools to quite an extent.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, there is no problem there and we would be glad to arrange for this information to be sent to the hon. member, and indeed to the various schools, which he has suggested. As a matter of fact our department has recently completed a film library for this very purpose. Films, of course, are very expensive items, bearing in mind the various prints and copies in the French version where they may be useful. We have one $30,000 project this year which is going forward. We find this a very effective method of arousing interest and of getting the safety methods across.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I want to make my point clear. I am not suggesting to the department that they should get some films made; all I am suggesting is that, if they have a list of films to be had from different sources in the province, they let the schools know what they have and that these films be made available in these locations or in their department, because that is what we would like to know.

I have another point that I would like to mention. In his remarks this afternoon he mentioned the "Elmer Safety Programme." This programme has, I believe, been very effective in promoting safety among school children, especially children just starting to school in the kindergarten up to grades five or six. Again I want to suggest to the department that they should give more encouragement to this programme and perhaps let the schools know about this programme. This is something the department could do to promote safety among the school children. I think that it has been proven in the city of Toronto here and we in the city of Windsor also have put it in and it has proven very, very effective. But let us get it across the province, that is the point I am making.

I want to say also that for the past couple of years I have mentioned the Ontario Traffic Conference. Now, I would like to ask the hon. Minister, when he contemplates traffic changes, or changes for safety, which organizations give him the greatest assistance? I would like to ask that question.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not think I can answer that question with a simple "yes" or "no". The Canadian Highway Safety Council and the Ontario Safety League operate in different spheres from each other, but the Ontario Traffic Conference operates in a distinctly separate sphere. It operates more in a technical way, having to do with technical problems, the technicalities of police enforcement, of by-law enforcement, of the mechanical problems of lights and of installations and of traffic devices.

As I said this afternoon, they are doing a tremendous job and indeed my department has used them during the past year and has referred several problems to them. They have been very helpful. But the Highway Safety Council and the Ontario Safety League operate in a different fashion and have different types of programmes. Their programmes are more directly concerned with individuals and groups representing the public.
